Also, a bill (H.R. 6093) for the relief of the counties of Haywood and Swain, in the State of North Carolina, by reason of their loss in taxable valuation by the establishment of the Great Smoky Mountains National Park; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CROSBY: A bill (H.R. 6094) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to refund to creditors' committee of the Progressive Commercial Co., of Philadelphia, Pa., income taxes illegally paid to the United States Treasurer; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1359. By Mr. CELLER: Resolution of the Mount Sinai Baptist Church, of Brooklyn, N.Y., calling upon the Seventy-third Congress to exert forceful influence upon the Nazis of Germany, under the leadership of Adolf Hitler, to refrain from the barbarism and cruelties now being practiced upon the defenseless Jews in Germany; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1360. Also, resolution of the National Guard Association of the State of New York, advocating maintenance of Federal appropriations for the Naval Reserve; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1361. By Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri: Petition of the American War Mothers of St. Louis, Mo., Edith R. Steibenz, president, Luella B. Leacock, chairman of the resolutions committee, actuated by the knowledge of the destructiveness of the principles underlying the Russian Soviet Government, call upon Congress to voice its stern objection to the diplomatic recognition of Soviet Russia by our Government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1362. By Mr. DE PRIEST: Petition on behalf of the Chicago branch, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, by A. C. MacNeal, president, as to the constitutional rights of certain citizens; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1363. By Mr. FITZPATRICK: Petition of the Congregation Linas Hazedik, located at Ward and Watson Avenues, Bronx, New York City, relative to the inhuman treatment of the Jewish citizens by the German Government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1364. By Mr. GOSS: Petition of James F. Martone, Bladis Waitkus, Nicholas Muccino, and other citizens of the city of Waterbury, Conn., urging the restoration to all service-connected disabled veterans their former benefits, privileges, schedules, ratings, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1365. By Mr. HOEPPEL: Petition of certain citizens of the United States, residents and voters of the State of California, protesting certain phases of the so-called "Economy Act regulations", particularly insofar as they pertain to the legitimately service-connected disabled veteran, and petitioning Congress to take such action as is necessary to revise the regulations and/or the Economy Act itself so that there shall be restored to all veterans who were actually disabled in the military or naval service the former rights, benefits, privileges, ratings, schedules, compensation, presumptions, and pensions heretofore enjoyed by them and existent prior to the enactment of said Economy Act; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1366. By Mr. KRAMER: Petition of R. F. Beckwith and other citizens of the United States and the State of California, protesting against certain phases of the so-called "Economy Act regulations", particularly insofar as they pertain to the legitimately service-connected disabled veteran, etc.; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

1367. By Mr. MERRITT: Petition of Banner Council, No. 54, Sons and Daughters of Liberty, of South Norwalk, Conn., urging the passage of House bill 4114 to further restrict immigration into the United States; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announces the appointment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] as a member of the Special Committee on Investigation of Campaign Expenditures to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON].

RATIFICATION BY WYOMING OF THE REPEAL OF EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the proceedings and minutes of the Constitutional Convention for the State of Wyoming, held at Casper, Wyo., on May 25, 1933, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Wyoming, ss:

I, A. M. Clark, secretary of state of the State of Wyoming, do hereby certify that the annexed is a full, true, and correct copy of the minutes of the constitutional convention held at Casper, Wyo., on May 25, 1933.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of the State of Wyoming.

Done at Cheyenne, the capital, this 6th day of June A.D. 1933.

[SEAL] A. M. CLARK, Secretary of State.
By C. J. ROGERS, Deputy.

PROCEEDINGS AND MINUTES OF THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION FOR THE STATE OF WYOMING, HELD AT CASPER, WYO., MAY 25, 1933

Pursuant to the statutes of the State of Wyoming providing for the calling of State conventions, prescribing the method and manner in which such conventions shall be called and held in the State of Wyoming to consider and vote on the question of repealing, amending, or altering the Constitution of the United States of America; providing for the payment of the expenses thereof, prescribing the duties of the Governor, the secretary of state, the chairman or other member of the board of county commissioners and the officers of the several counties; and appropriating money to defray the expenses incurred thereby; and a public proclamation by Hon. Leslie A. Miller, Governor of the State of Wyoming, which proclamation reads as follows:

PUBLIC PROCLAMATION

Under and by virtue of the power vested in me by reason of the laws of the State of Wyoming, I, Leslie A. Miller, Governor of the State of Wyoming, do hereby order and proclaim that on the 25th day of May A.D. 1933, at 10 o'clock a.m., at the city hall in the city of Casper, in the State of Wyoming, there shall be held a State convention to which State convention there shall be submitted the following joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, for such action as may be had thereon.

"[Seventy-Second Congress of the United States of America; at the second session, begun and held at the city of Washington on Manday, the 5th day of December 1932]

"Joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by conventions in three fourths of the several States:

"'ARTICLE —

"'SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"'SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"'SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress.'

"JNO. N. GARNER,
"Speaker of the House of Representatives.
"CHARLES CURTIS,
"Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate."

The number of delegates (who shall be qualified electors) of which said convention shall consist, and the method and manner by and in which delegates to such State convention shall be elected, shall be in all respects in conformity with the provisions of Enrolled Act No. 53, Senate, Twenty-second Legislature of the State of Wyoming, and as herein ordered.

It is further ordered and proclaimed that on the 15th day of May A.D. 1933, at 10 o'clock a.m., in each of the election precincts in each of the counties of this State there shall be held a meeting of the qualified electors of such precinct, at which meeting there shall be held a precinct election at which election there shall be elected 1 delegate from each of such precincts and 1 additional delegate for each 600, or major portion thereof, of the inhabitants of such precinct to a convention of such delegates to be held at the county seat of such county. Such precinct meetings shall be held at the established polling place in each of the election precincts as the same are now or as may be hereafter constituted and shall be presided over by any qualified elector of such precinct. The presiding officer of each of such precinct meetings shall forthwith certify to the county convention, under oath, the names of the delegates to such county convention chosen by such precinct meetings.

It is further ordered and proclaimed that on the 18th day of May A.D. 1933, at 10 o'clock a.m., there shall be held a county convention in each of the counties of this State, and the delegates thereto shall assemble and elect 1 delegate for each county and 1 delegate for each 5,000, or major fraction thereof, of the inhabitants of such county as delegates to the State convention hereinbefore mentioned. The meeting place shall be in the court room of the courthouse, if there be one in such county; and if not, in the court room in said county whereat the business of the district court is usually transacted. It shall be the duty of the chairman of the board of county commssioners, or some other member of such board in each county, to convene such county convention and to preside over the same until the delegates chosen thereto shall select a chairman of such convention, and the delegates shall thereafter select a secretary of such convention. It shall be the duty of the chairman and secretary of such county convention to certify to the secretary of state of the State of Wyoming and to said State convention hereby called under oath the names of the delegates to such State convention chosen by such county convention.

The rules of practice, procedure, and conduct of the business of the several county conventions shall be those prescribed by Roberts' Rules of Parliamentary Procedure and Order.

The vote on the selection of delegates to either of the conventions herein mentioned shall be by written or printed ballot.

In the apportionment of representation in the several conventions herein mentioned the last census enumeration taken and made by the United States Government shall be the basis upon which the right to representation in such conventions shall be determined.

The secretary of state of the State of Wyoming shall convene such State convention at the time and place herein designated and shall preside over the same until the delegates chosen thereto shall select a chairman of such State convention, and the delegates shall thereafter select a secretary of such State convention. It shall be the duty of the officers of such State convention to certify to the secretary of state of the State of Wyoming under oath the result of the vote cast at such State convention upon the question hereby submitted to such State convention.

In witness whereof I, Leslie A. Miller, Governor of the State of Wyoming, have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State of Wyoming to be affixed.

Done at the capitol, in the city of Cheyenne, this 14th day of March A.D. 1933, and in the year of the independence of the United States the one hundred and fifty-seventh.

LESLIE A. MILLER, Governor.

By the Governor:
[SEAL]
A. M. CLARK,
Secretary of State.

The State convention provided for by said proclamation was convened by Hon. A. M. Clark, secretary of state of and for the State of Wyoming, on the 25th day of May A. D. 1933, at 10 o'clock a.m. at the city hall in the city of Casper, Natrona County, Wyo., as follows:

Secretary of State CLARK. I notice that we are short the official certificates for four counties, and I am going to call those four counties' names, and if the chairman of your delegation has your certificate will he please bring it to the desk, so that we can complete our list of official delegates. Campbell County, Converse County, Lincoln County, and Weston County.

At this time the delegates from the four counties mentioned presented to Mr. Clark their credentials.

Secretary of State CLARK. Members of this convention, we now have the credentials, seemingly, from all counties and the certificates necessary to entitle the delegates to sit at this convention. I have appointed Mr. J. R. French as temporary secretary of this convention, and I am inclined to do my little part as quickly as possible and in as short a manner as possible. If I remember correctly, in the list of delegates to this convention there is one lady. [Applause.] I don't know how many drys there are, because, you know, it looks as though we drys are all wet. I am going to dispense with the reading of the proclamation of the Governor, as copies have been distributed among you, as have also copies of the law providing for this convention, and a little later we will try to furnish each one of you with one of our official directories, which will give your names, as well as those of other State officers.

Before we go further I will ask the temporary secretary, who is taking a report of the convention, to call the roll of delegates and alternates.

The secretary then proceeded with the roll call of the delegates by counties, as follows:

There were present and answering to roll call at said convention the following-named delegates (or alternates) from the following-named counties, for whom certificates had been filed showing that they were entitled to vote at said convention, to wit:

Albany County: N. A. Swenson, alternate for T. L. Johnson; J. R. Sullivan; Oscar Hammond.

Big Horn County: J. P. Wheeler, alternate for T. K. Bishop; J. R. French, alternate for H. B. Richardson.

Campbell County: Guy Garrett, W. D. McGrew.

Carbon County: Victor H. Scepansky, alternate for H. J. Cashman; Gus Larson; C. D. Williamson.

Converse County: Waldo Bolen, Joe Garst.

Crook County: Charles Louis, alternate for James T. McGuckin; G. W. Earle, alternate for Jay Durfee.

Fremont County: Mrs. Sam Payne, Walter Oswald, R. S. Price. (Also alternates Charles Moore and A. O. Heyer.)

Goshen County: L. G. Flannery, J. M. Roushar, Erle H. Reid. (Also alternate William Bosse.)

Hot Springs County: Henry Cottle, John McCullum.

Johnson County: Frank O. Horton, Jean Van Dyke. (Also alternates Berton Hill and Richie Young.)

Laramie County: A. D. Homan, Fred W. Roedel, Wilfrid O'Leary, Abe Goldstein, Perry Williams, Fred Hofmann. (Also alternates W. Q. Phelan and T. Joe Cahill.)

Lincoln County: Dr. C. D. Stafford, Glen E. Sorensen, Oluf Jefson.

Natrona County: Robert N. Ogden; J. E. Jones, alternate for John Nance; T. F. Speckbacker; T. C. Spears; E. J. Sullivan; J. F. Cowan. (Also alternate L. B. Townsend.)

Niobrara County: Albert P. Bruch, C. W. Erwin.

Park County: Alex Linton, B. C. Rumsey, M. L. Simpson. (Also alternate Eugene Phelps.)

Platte County: Hans Christiansen, B. L. Dixon.

Sheridan County: Malcolm Moncreiffe, Peter Kooi, R. A. Keenan, Roy Bedford.

Sublette County: Albert Larsen. (Also E. D. Key, his alternate.)

Sweetwater County: William Evers, Dr. R. H. Sanders, Glen A. Knox, P. C. Bunning, Joe Bertagnolli.

Teton County: R. C. Lundy, Sr., O. A. Pendergraft.

Uinta County: Matthew Morrow, S. S. Kastor, J. H. Holland.

Washakie County: Dr. W. O. Gray, R. C. Shultz. (Also L. L. Dorman, alternate.)

Weston County: A. L. Leslie, alternate for E. C. Raymond; M. M. Falk. (Also A. S. Boatsman, alternate.)

Secretary of State CLARK. If there are any reporters in the room who want room at the table there is plenty of room up here, and you are welcome to use it. What is the next pleasure of this convention.

Senator FRANK O. HORTON. Mr. Chairman, I presume the next order of business is the selection of a permanent chairman, but before going into that I should like the privilege of the floor. There undoubtedly are a great many men here entitled to that honor, irrespective of their party affiliations. Perhaps it would be well if we could select a Democrat, because they have been honest in their stand, and due largely to that stand are they in power in this State today, and I am not talking politics, I am just giving credit where credit belongs. Mr. Chairman, there is some one person who is entitled to be chairman of this convention because his work and labor has been more outstanding than that of anyone else. It is almost impossible at an open convention of this kind to find that one man, therefore I have this suggestion to make, that the temporary chairman appoint as a nominating committee the chairman of each of the county delegations, let this committee of one delegate from each county retire and thresh the entire field and find that one man and come back here and tell us about it. This would, of course, not preclude other nominations. I give you that in the form of a motion.

Secretary of State CLARK. Do I hear a second?

Secretary of State CLARK. It has been moved and seconded that the Chair appoint the chairman of each county delegation as a committee to retire for a short time and submit the name of some person for chairman of this convention. Are there any more remarks? All in favor of the motion say "Aye", contrary minded "No." The motion has prevailed. The committee on nominations will retire, for I hereby appoint the chairman of each county delegation as a nominating committee, and I believe they will select a good man.

(From the floor:) Mr. Chairman, while the committee are out, may we not have a short recess?

Secretary of State CLARK. I had that in mind; if no objection, we will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

(During this recess Governor Miller was brought in and introduced to the convention, and made a very fine talk regarding the matter for which this convention was called.)

Secretary of State CLARK. Is the committee on nomination ready to report?

Senator HORTON. Your committee is ready to report. I should like to say that there were 106 men whose names were considered, and every one of them was outstanding, and we thought each one should be the choice for permanent chairman of this convention; but we had to narrow it down, and we have decided upon a man who has ability to preside and whose work has been outstanding over all the rest. I have the pleasure of presenting to you the name of Mr. Erle H. Reid for permanent chairman, and move the adoption of the report.

(The motion was seconded from the floor.)

Secretary of State CLARK. You have heard the report and motion and its second. Are there any remarks? All in favor of the motion say "Aye", contrary minded "No." The motion has carried unanimously, and it is so ordered.

(From the floor:) Mr. Secretary, I move the temporary secretary be instructed to cast the unanimous vote of this convention for Mr. Reid for permanent chairman of this convention.

Secretary of State CLARK. It has been regularly moved and seconded that the secretary be instructed to cast the unanimous vote of this convention for Mr. Erle H. Reid as chairman of this convention. Are there any remarks. [Question called for.] All in favor of the motion as stated say "Aye", contrary "No." The motion has carried. Mr. Secretary, cast the vote of this convention for Mr. Reid as chairman.

Temporary Secretary FRENCH. I hereby cast the unanimous vote of this convention for Mr. Erle H. Reid for permanent chairman of this convention.

Secretary of State CLARK. I declare Mr. Erle H. Reid elected. Mr. Reid will you come forward? Members of this convention, I wish to introduce to you your permanent chairman of this convention, Mr. Erle H. Reid, of Torrington. Mr. Reid, you will now take the chair. [Applause.]

Chairman REID. Thank you, Governor. Madame delegate and gentlemen, you have done me a great honor this morning, and I want to assure you I appreciate it very much. I am here, interested as you are, in the accomplishment of a great thing for the State of Wyoming and this United States of ours, a movement toward better government in our State and country, and I speak your cooperation to that end; and I hope the work of this convention will be speedily taken care of so we may return home. I presume the next work of this convention is the selection of a credentials committee. May I suggest, that while I am acquainted with a great many here, there are also a number here whom I have not met, and it might expedite business if you give your name and county when addressing the Chair.

Mr. VAN DYKE, of Buffalo. Mr. Chairman, I move you, the Chair, appoint a credentials committee of three.

Mr. MORROW, of Uinta County. I second the motion.

Mr. HORTON, of Johnson County. I suggest the gentleman from Buffalo withhold that motion for a moment, as I wonder if the next order of business would not be the selection of a permanent secretary.

Chairman REID. I think that is right.

Mr. ROUSHAR, of Goshen County. I move you, Mr. Chairman, that the temporary secretary be made the permanent secretary of this convention.

(Motion seconded from the floor.)

Mr. GARST, of Converse County. Mr. Chairman, does the secretary have to be from the delegates?

Chairman REID. I think that the secretary need not be; however, the present secretary is one of the delegates. Are there any remarks? So many as are in favor of the temporary secretary for the office of permanent secretary will please rise. The motion is carried unanimously. Mr. French, you are elected permanent secretary of this meeting. We will now return to the other order of business, and I will take up the motion as made by Mr. Van Dyke and seconded by Mr. Morrow, for the appointment of a credentials committee. Are there any remarks? All in favor of the motion as stated signify by saying "aye", contrary "no." The motion is carried, and I will appoint on that committee Mr. Ogden, of Natrona; Mr. Glen Knox, of Sweetwater; and Mr. Wilfrid O'Leary, of Laramie County.

Secretary of State CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I should like to meet with that committee at once. I have the credentials sent in for the delegates and believe I can assist them materially.

Mr. HORTON, of Johnson County. Mr. Chairman, I move you we stand in recess, while this committee is out, and subject to the call of the Chair.

(Motion seconded from the floor.)

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion and its second; are there any remarks? All in favor of the motion as stated signify by saying "Aye", contrary "No." The motion is carried; the convention will stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

(At this time a recess of 15 minutes was taken.)

Chairman REID. The convention will be in order; is the credentials committee ready to report?

Mr. OGDEN, of Casper. Yes, Mr. Chairman. Your committee finds that the respective delegates and alternates answering the roll call are all properly accredited. In Uinta County three delegates were elected, and the honorable secretary of state informs us two is all they were entitled to; we therefore find that the delegates from Uinta County are entitled to only two-thirds vote each in this convention. We find that the following delegates are entitled to seats and to vote in this convention:

Albany County: N. A. Swenson, J. R. Sullivan, and Oscar Hammond.

Big Horn County: J. P. Wheeler and J. R. French.

Campbell County: Guy Garrett and W. D. McGrew.

Carbon County: Victor H. Scepansky, Gus Larson, and C. D. Williamson.

Converse County: Waldo Bolln and Joe Garst.

Crook County: Charles Louis and G. W. Earle.

Fremont County: Mrs. Sam Payne, Walter Oswald, and R. S. Price.

Goshen County: J. G. Flannery, J. M. Roushar, and Erle H. Reid.

Hot Springs County: Henry Cottle and John McCullum.

Johnson County: Frank O. Horton and Jean Van Dyke.

Laramie County: A. D. Homan, Fred W. Roedel, Wilfrid O'Leary, Abe Goldstein, Perry Williams, and Fred Hofmann.

Lincoln County: Dr. C. D. Stafford, Glen E. Sorensen, and Oluf Jefsen.

Natron County: Robert N. Ogden, J. E. Jones, T. F. Speckbacker, T. C. Spears, E. J. Sullivan, and J. F. Cowan.

Niobrara County: Albert P. Bruch and C. W. Erwin.

Park County: Alex Linton, B. C. Rumsey, M. L. Simpson.

Platte County: Hans Christiansen and B. L. Dixon.

Sheridan County: Malcolm Moncreiffe, Peter Kooi, R. A. Keenan, and Roy Bedford.

Sublette County: Albert Larsen.

Sweetwater County: William Evers, Dr. R. H. Sanders, Glen A. Knox, P. C. Bunning, and Joe Bertagnolli.

Teton County: R. C. Lundy, Sr., and O. A. Pendergraft.

Uinta County: Matthew Morrow, S. S. Kastor, and J. H. Holland.

Washakie County: Dr. W. O. Gray and R. C. Shultz.

Weston County: A. F. Leslie and M. M. Falk.

I move you the adoption of the report, Mr. Chairman, and that the committee be discharged.

Mr. KNOX, of Sweetwater County. I second the motion.

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion and second that the report of the credentials committee be accepted and the committee be discharged; are there any remarks? All in favor of the motion signify by saying "Aye", contrary "No." the motion has prevailed; the report of the credentials committee is accepted and the committee discharged with the thanks of the Chair.

I think at this time the Chair will entertain a motion to dispense with reading the proclamation of the Governor calling this convention. You all have copies of the proclamation, and a copy will be spread in the minutes by the secretary, and I see no purpose that will be served by reading it at this time.

Mr. GARST, Converse County. Mr. Chairman, I move you we dispense with reading the proclamation of the Governor.

Mr. HOFMANN, Laramie County. I second the motion.

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion and the second. Are there any remarks? If not, all in favor of the motion signify by saying "aye", opposed "no"; the motion is carried. We are met here this morning as a result of three distinct actions that have been taken; in the first place, the Congress of the United States has submitted to the several States, for ratification or rejection, a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States; second, the legislature of this State has passed a law providing for this convention, or similar convention which may be called in the future; and, third the Governor of this State has called this convention, who are now assembled, by proclamation. You have passed on the names of those who will constitute your convention. I take it there is but one thing before this convention at this time, and that is, Shall this convention ratify or reject the proposed amendment to the Constitution? I will ask at this time that the secretary read the joint resolution of the Seventy-second Congress of the United States submitting this amendment.

Whereupon the secretary read the amendment, as follows:

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors in violation of the laws thereof is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

Chairman REID. The question before us is, Shall the proposed twenty-first amendment be ratified or rejected? The secretary will call the roll by counties.

Mr. SIMPSON, of Park County. Mr. Chairman, before that roll call is taken, may I say I am a bit fearful of the outcome of this vote, and I understand from other sources, as well as from the Governor, that there is some money left in the fund created to cover the expenses of this convention. Inasmuch as Natrona County and the city of Casper don't seem to be going to take care of us, I suggest we spend this money for a few bottles of beer for the delegates to this convention.

Chairman REID. The motion is carried. The secretary will call the roll and the chairman will respond for his county, giving the number of votes and whether for or against the adoption of the proposed amendment.

(From the floor:) In order that the question might be perfectly clear, should it be specified how the vote should be given; that is, for the adoption of the twenty-first amendment?

Chairman REID. I take it the vote should be, for instance, three votes for ratification or three votes against ratification; however, knowing the sentiment of the convention, I take it there will be none against ratification.

Mr. GARST, of Converse County. Mr. Chairman, I don't like to do too much talking, but there is a question in my mind whether there should not be a motion on the minutes of this meeting so we can vote whether to ratify or not ratify. I think that is a matter of procedure.

Mr. FLANNERY, Goshen County. Mr. Chairman, we are here to bury Caesar, and the quicker the better, I move you this convention ratify this proposed twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Motion seconded from the floor.

Mr. EARLE, Crook County. Are we to vote individually or by acclamation?

Chairman REID. I think we should have a roll call and vote by counties.

Mr. SULLIVAN, Natrona County. I admit we are here to bury Caesar, but when he is buried let him be wholly interred. The danger in this convention is in not having a minority, we might do things in an irregular way, the quest is known over the State as: "Will we repeal the eighteenth amendment", but the question here is will the State of Wyoming ratify the action of the Congress of the United States in submitting the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and if there is no objection I would like to present that language in place of that in the motion.

Mr. GARST, of Converse County. My motion was to ratify the resolution as read by the secretary, I think that would be proper.

Mr. SULLIVAN, Natrona County. I withdraw my suggestion.

Secretary of state, Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I am in a rather peculiar situation here, while I must work with the convention yet I am not a delegate, so if you will pardon this intrusion, while it is the office of the officers of this convention to make such report as they see fit to the secretary of state, we need to keep in mind that the secretary of state is required to report to the United States. In the suggested outline which I presented your secretary for his minutes, it has been our purpose to see that every vote be recorded individually and by counties, however there is no necessity for this convention following that order. If there should be a question raised, as there might be for 13 States can prevent the ratification of the twenty-first amendment, as to the sufficiency of our action, it is a good thing to have a complete record; that is the reason I have asked the reporter to sit here and take the minutes. In making this outline it has been our idea that even though there be but one in the minority that he be allowed to record his vote in the minutes of this meeting.

Chairman REID. I take it you think we should call the roll by delegates and not by counties.

Secretary of state, Mr. CLARK. You can call it by both county and delegate, as they are all shown on the list there.

Chairman REID. I think you have the right idea, and if there is no objection we will have the secretary call the roll on the question: "That the State of Wyoming, by this convention, do ratify the proposed twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States of America", as read by the secretary and to be transcribed in the minutes.

(No objection being made, the secretary proceeded to call the roll by delegates and counties, as follows:)

Albany County, 3 votes: N. A. Swenson, aye; J. R. Sullivan, aye; Oscar Hammond, aye.

Big Horn County, 3 votes (1 vote absent): J. P. Wheeler, aye; J. R. French, aye.

Campbell County, 2 votes: Guy Garrett, aye; W. D. McGrew, aye.

Carbon County, 3 votes: Gus Larson, aye; Victor H. Scepansky, aye; C. D. Williamson, aye.

Converse County, 2 votes: Waldo Bolln, aye; Joe Garst, aye.

Crook County, 2 votes: Charles Louis, aye; G. W. Earle, aye.

Fremont County, 3 votes: Mrs. Sam Payne, aye; Walter Oswald, aye; R. S. Price, aye.

Goshen County, 3 votes: L. G. Flannery, aye; J. M. Roushar, aye; Erle H. Reid, aye.

Hot Springs County, 2 votes: Henry Cottle, aye; John McCullum, aye.

Johnson County, 2 votes: Frank O. Horton, aye; Jean Van Dyke, aye.

Laramie County, 6 votes: A. D. Homan, aye; Fred W. Roedel, aye; Wilfrid O'Leary, aye; Abe Goldstein, aye; Perry Williams, aye; Fred Hofmann, aye.

Lincoln County, 3 votes: Dr. C. D. Stafford, aye; Glen E. Sorensen, aye; Oluf Jefsen, aye.

Natrona County, 6 votes: Robert N. Ogden, aye; J. E. Jones, aye; T. F. Speckbacker, aye; T. C. Spears, aye; E. J. Sullivan, aye; J. F. Cowan, aye.

Niobrara County, 2 votes: Albert P. Bruch, aye; C. W. Erwin, aye.

Park County, 3 votes: Alex Linton, aye; B. C. Rumsey, aye; M. L. Simpson, aye.

Platte County, 3 votes (one delegate being absent): Hans Christiansen, aye; B. L. Dixon, aye.

Sheridan County, 4 votes: Malcolm Moncreiffe, aye; Peter Kool, aye; R. A. Keenan, aye; Roy Bedford, aye.

Sublette County, 1 vote: Albert Larsen, aye.

Sweetwater County, 5 votes: William Evers, aye; Dr. R. H. Sanders, aye; Glen A. Knox, aye; P. C. Bunning, aye; Joe Bertagnolli, aye.

Teton County, 2 votes: R. C. Lundy, aye; O. A. Pendergraft, aye.

Uinta County, 2 votes (two-thirds vote for each delegate): Matthew Morrow, aye; S. S. Kastor, aye; J. H. Holland, aye.

Washakie County, 2 votes: Dr. W. O. Gray, aye; R. C. Shultz, aye.

Weston County, 2 votes: A. F. Leslie, aye; M. M. Falk, aye.

Whereupon it was found that 65 delegates had cast 64 votes "aye" and were in favor of the ratification of said article, and no delegates had voted "nay."

Chairman REID. Ladies and gentlemen, you have cast a unanimous vote for the ratification and the twenty-first article to the Constitution of the United States has been ratified by this convention. I suggest that this finishes the official business of this convention.

Mr. ROUSHAR, of Goshen County. Mr. Chairman, this is an unusual procedure, the first time such a practice has been submitted to the people; heretofore it has been done for the people by the legislature of their State; and in view of the fact that there is an unexpended fund in the hands of the State treasurer, set aside for the purpose of bearing the expense of this convention, I feel we ought to go on record as having these minutes published and each delegate and alternate be furnished a copy thereof. Mr. Chairman, I move you we go on record as requesting the secretary to print these minutes and a copy thereof be furnished by mail to each delegate and alternate to this meeting.

Chairman REID. The Chair suggests that the expenditure of this fund is not in the hands of this convention, and your motion should be as a request to the Governor.

Mr. ROUSHAR. I amend the motion to the form stated by the Chair.

Secretary of State CLARK. While the money is technically in the hands of the secretary of state, I think we would have to take that up with the Governor.

Mr. SIMPSON, Park County. I rise to a point of order; what became of my motion?

Chairman REID. It was carried unanimously. I see no objection, Mr. Roushar, to your motion as amended. Was there a second to the motion?

(Motion seconded from the floor.)

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion and second that we go on record as requesting the Governor to have the minutes of this meeting published and a copy furnished each delegate and alternate to this convention. Are there any remarks? Those in favor signify by saying "Aye", contrary "No." The motion is carried.

Mr. GOLDSTEIN, of Laramie County. Mr. Chairman, I should like to present a resolution at this time: Be it

Resolved, That the Wyoming State Convention, assembled in Casper, Wyo., May 25, 1933, do hereby immediately telegraph the following message to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, President of the United States of America:

"Wyoming, at its State convention, held in Casper, May 25, 1933, on that day, by action of delegates assembled from the several counties of the Commonwealth, has voted unanimously for repeal of the eighteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

(From the floor:) I believe the message should be corrected to say "has ratified the twenty-first amendment to the Constitution of the United States."

Chairman REID. Will you permit the correction, Mr. Goldstein?

Mr. GOLDSTEIN. Yes.

Chairman REID. Do I hear a motion for the adoption of the resolution?

(Motion made from the floor, and seconded, that the resolution, as amended, be adopted.)

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion for the adoption of the resolution as amended; are there any remarks? All in favor of the motion will signify by saying "Aye", contrary "No." The motion is carried. The secretary will see that the message is forwarded.

Mr. SULLIVAN, of Natrona County. Mr. Chairman, there is one more matter: There is no method provided by law for the recalling of this convention or calling another one; we have taken the action we think necessary for the ratification of the twenty-first amendment, and I am sure before we adjourn a motion will be placed before this convention that the secretary and chairman will certify the minutes of this meeting to the secretary of state. We hope that will be done, but being mindful of the uncertainty of human life, and if between adjournment of this convention and the time the minutes are prepared the chairman might become disqualified, having that in view I wonder if it will be agreeable to the convention to provide for the office of vice chairman, he to act only in the event of the disqualification of or disability of the chairman. Having that in mind, I move you we create the office of vice chairman of this convention.

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion that we create the office of vice chairman, he to act only in the event of the disqualification or disability of the chairman to act; are there any remarks? [Question called for.] All in favor of the motion as stated say "Aye", opposed "No." The motion is carried unanimously.

Mr. ROUSHAR, of Goshen County. I should like to move the nomination of Mr. E. J. Sullivan as vice chairman.

Mr. SULLIVAN. With thanks to the mover of the motion, it came in a very friendly way, but there were three men who were mentioned in the committee on nominations for the honorable office of chairman. We might take recognition of the fact that one of the men was a man who has done a great deal, in addition to what our chairman has done, for the worthy cause, and who is more worthy of this honor than I am. Will you remember that I am neither wet or dry. That I am one of the many who stand in the middle road seeking for temperance; and I should like permission to substitute the name of Richard A. Keenan, of Sheridan.

Mr. BEDFORD, of Sheridan County. Mr. Chairman, I move you the nominations be closed and the secretary instructed to cast the unanimous vote of this convention for Mr. R. A. Kennan as vice chairman of this convention.

Mr. SIMPSON, of Park County. I second the motion.

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion and second; are there any remarks? Those in favor say "Aye", opposed "No"; the motion is carried. Mr. Secretary, you will cast the unanimous vote of this convention for Mr. R. A. Keenan, of Sheridan, for vice chairman. [Secretary cast the unanimous vote of the convention for Mr. Keenan.] I declare Mr. R. A. Keenan elected as vice chairman of this convention.

Mr. KEENAN, of Sheridan. I wish to thank you very much for the honor conferred upon me, and I can assure you I consider it a very great honor.

Mr. LARSON, of Carbon County. Would it also be well for us to take the same action as to the secretary?

Mr. SULLIVAN, of Natrona County. The certificate is by the chairman, attest by a secretary, and should the young man French go to heaven, the chairman can appoint another secretary.

Chairman REID. While the law provides that the chairman and secretary certify the record of our proceedings, I presume it will be well to have such a motion.

Mr. BEDFORD, of Sheridan County. I move you, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman of this convention and the secretary, and in the absence or inability of the chairman, the vice chairman make the proper certification of our proceedings to the secretary of state.

Chairman REID. You have heard the motion and the second; are there any remarks? Those in favor signify by saying "Aye", opposed "No"; the motion is carried.

Mr. HOFMANN, of Laramie County. Mr. Chairman and fellow delegates, we have had a wonderful meeting and carried our point in the State of Wyoming, and we are all proud of it. For my part, I have been a wet since the day prohibition went into effect, and as I stand on the floor here I want to say to you our duty is not finished; we must not let the business we condemned in 1919 get into the same rut; we want to see it carried on in a clean and honorable manner, and you will never be able to do this if you have the Government, the States, or the cities mixing whisky with beer. Whisky should be divorced from beer; take it home to your family and teach your children its use in a proper way, and that is not standing against a bar drinking all day and having your wife waiting supper. It was the women of this country who voted it dry, and it will be the women who vote it wet again; they have found out their mistake; but it wouldn't have taken near as long to get the country wet again if it had not been for the efforts of our politicians.

Chairman REID. Unless there is some other business, the Chair will entertain a motion to adjourn.

(Motion from the floor that we adjourn. Seconded from the floor.)

Chairman REID. It has been regularly moved and seconded we adjourn. Those in favor say "Aye", opposed "No." The motion is carried; we will stand adjourned.

Dated at Casper, Wyo., this 25th day of May A.D. 1933.

Attest:

J. R. FRENCH, Secretary.

THE STATE OF WYOMING,
County of Natrona, ss:

Erle H. Reid and J. R. French, each being separately duly sworn on oath, each for himself, does hereby certify and depose as follows: That the said Erle H. Reid is the duly selected chairman of the State convention held at Casper, Wyo., on May 25, A.D. 1933, and the said J. R. French is the duly selected secretary of the State convention held at Casper, Natrona County, Wyo., on May 25, A.D. 1933; that at said convention there were present and entitled to vote therein 65 delegates; that on the question of ratification of the following article:

"ARTICLE —

"SECTION 1. The eighteenth article of amendment to the Constitution of the United States is hereby repealed.

"SEC. 2. The transportation or importation into any State, Territory, or possession of the United States for delivery or use therein of intoxicating liquors, in violation of the laws thereof, is hereby prohibited.

"SEC. 3. This article shall be inoperative unless it shall have been ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution, within 7 years from the date of the submission hereof to the States by the Congress."

The 65 delegates, who were entitled to 64 votes, cast their unanimous vote in favor of ratification of said article, and that no delegates present and entitled to vote against ratification of said article, and that all votes cast were in favor of ratification of said article and said article was by said convention ratified and that annexed thereto and made a part hereof is a full, true, and complete record of the proceedings had and taken and all things done by said convention held at the city hall in the city of Casper, in the State of Wyoming, on May 25, A.D. 1933, and which fully and in detail shows the result of the vote taken and had at said convention on the questions submitted.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Eunice Sterling Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Wichita, Kans., protesting against the recognition of the Government of Soviet Russia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also laid before the Senate the petition of the Chicago (Ill.) Branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, praying for the passage of appropriate legislation to fully enforce the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate letters from John Filostrat, of New Orleans, La., and F. C. Bayles, of Sandy Hook, Miss., endorsing Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, and condemning attacks made upon him, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate a telegram in the nature of a petition from the Honest Election League, by Burt W. Henry, chairman, New Orleans, La., praying for the making of provision for funds to continue the investigation by the Special Committee of the Senate on Campaign Expenditures relative to the Louisiana senatorial election of 1932, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Chefs' de Cuisine Club, of San Francisco, Calif., favoring the prompt passage of legislation to legalize the manufacture and sale of wines, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the City Council of Chicago, Ill., favoring the allocation of Federal-aid funds for the construction of highway facilities in the Greater Chicago metropolitan region, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND presented resolutions adopted by the Steuben County Committee, American Legion, Department of New York, favoring the repeal or modification of legislation and Executive orders issued thereunder relating to veterans' relief insofar as deserving disabled veterans are affected thereby, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

FEDERAL HOME LOAN BANK BOARD—WALTER H. NEWTON

Mr. SHIPSTEAD presented a resolution adopted by the annual convention of the Minnesota League of Building Loan and Savings Associations, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Minnesota League of Building Loan and Savings Associations notes with great pleasure the nomination by the President of Hon. Walter H. Newton, of Minnesota, as a member of Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Mr. Newton's record as a member of the Minnesota bar is an excellent one and he has achieved well-merited distinction in his chosen profession. His record in the Congress has reflected real credit upon himself and upon the district and the State which he has so ably represented. His service in other respects to the Nation has been characterized by loyalty and devotion to public duty and by executive ability of the highest order. His integrity has not been and cannot be challenged, and his personal character has long merited the respect of all who have known him both in official and in private life.

Mr. Newton's attainments and his ability unquestionably qualify him to perform ably and very satisfactorily the duties of a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

The Minnesota League of Building Loan and Savings Associations, in annual convention assembled at Rochester, Minn., hereby unanimously and enthusiastically commends the President upon the wisdom of his action and urgently requests the Senators from the State of Minnesota, Hon. HENRIK SHIPSTEAD and Hon. THOMAS D. SCHALL, to exert vigorously and promptly their efforts to secure the prompt confirmation by the Senate of the nomination of Mr. Newton as a member of Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Resolved, That this resolution be telegraphed to Senators SHIPSTEAD and SCHALL and that copies thereof, attested by the officers of this association, be mailed immediately to them and to the Secretary of the Senate.

We certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution which was duly adopted by Minnesota League of Building Loan and Savings Associations on June 9, 1933, at its annual convention at Rochester, Minn.

MINNESOTA LEAGUE OF BUILDING LOAN AND SAVINGS ASSOCIATIONS,
By H. WINE, President.
D. ELIZA CRARY, Secretary.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT UNION

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, on Saturday last I introduced a bill authorizing the United States to enter into the Berne Convention relating to the International Copyright Union. I have here a petition from the Honorable Robert Underwood Johnson, who was formerly Ambassador to Italy, who has fought for a great many years for the principle of giving to American authors and publishers the rights which they have and which they have never obtained. Mr. Johnson points out that "although copyright legislation was instituted in 1790 on the initiation of Noah Webster, and was thereafter warmly supported by Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, the principle of the ownership of literary and artistic property by the person creating it is not yet fully established in the United States."

I ask that the petition from the Honorable Robert Underwood Johnson be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PETITION FOR THE ENTRY OF THE UNITED STATES INTO THE BERNE COPYRIGHT UNION

To the honorable the Senate of the United States:

Your petitioner respectfully records that more than 40 years ago, as the representative of all the American advocates of the abolition of legalized piracy of literature and the arts, he was engaged with others in "spiritual lobbying" before the Congress in favor of various measures to establish in this country an international copyright. To the lasting honor of the Congress and of the country a bill was passed and was signed on the 3d of March 1891 accomplishing the desired purpose.

There were, however, in this measure certain manufacturing and nonimportation clauses which limited the entire right of the producer of the copyrightable property. As was then prophesied, conditions have since changed so materially as to convert those who desired these limitations and to make them willing to renounce them in favor of a pure and simple copyright law which shall fully recognize the rights of the original producer from which all other rights are derived. Great as was the moral advance in putting an end to literary and artistic piracy, our country has not yet reached the highest ethical position on this subject. The United States have long been invited to accept the benefits of the International Copyright Union, under whose terms a citizen of any subscribing nation is entitled to copyright in any other by the mere fact of authorship and such membership without laborious and annoying details. This country has been unable to enter the convention by reason of the restrictions in our law above referred to.

Your petitioner, an American author and citizen, very respectfully represents to your honorary body the opportunity now offered to place the United States upon the highest ethical ground in the matter of the recognition of those claims for security which are specially mentioned in the Constitution of the United States by which there was granted to the Congress the function of protecting the rights of authorship.

This opportunity is the acceptance by the United States of the International Copyright Convention of Rome, signed on June 2, 1928.

Your petitioner respectfully calls attention to the fact that although copyright legislation was instituted in 1790 on the initiation of Noah Webster and was thereafter warmly supported by Henry Clay and Daniel Webster, the principle of the ownership of literary and artistic property by the person creating it is not yet fully established in the United States. This is largely because this principle has been lost sight of in the consideration of secondary rights. Henry W. Longfellow well said "A good principle works well in all directions", and we may be assured that the essential consideration is security for the copyright property at its source.

Your petitioner respectfully asks that the Senate may take into account its responsibility for early action on this subject.

ROBERT UNDERWOOD JOHNSON.

NEW YORK, May 17, 1933.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the resolution (S.Res. 78) authorizing the appointment of a special committee to investigate the administration of bankruptcy and receivership proceedings in United States courts, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 308) to authorize the award of a decoration for distinguished service to Harry H. Horton, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 143) thereon.

PURCHASE OF MATERIALS OR EQUIPMENT FOR THE CIVILIAN CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a report, pursuant to Senate Resolution 88, to investigate alleged irregularities in connection with purchases of materials or equipment for the use of the Civilian Conservation Corps, which was ordered to be printed as Report No. 144, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs submits the following report, pursuant to Senate Resolution 88, Seventy-Third Congress, first session, directing the said committee to investigate the negotiations between the Director of Emergency Conservation Work and the BeVier Corporation and report the results of the investigation to the Senate, together with its recommendations:

We find that these negotiations resulted in large purchases without advertising for competitive bids and on representations of a single salesman. We call attention to the danger inherent in such a situation and believe that steps should be taken to prevent its recurrence.

We recommend that in cases of emergencies where there is not time for competitive bidding, or for any other reason such bidding would be impracticable, the Comptroller General be empowered and directed by Executive order of the President to pass upon the reasonableness of the price proposed before the contract becomes operative.

We find no evidence in the record that would sustain a charge of corruption or improper motive on the part of anyone. However, we find that lower prices could have been obtained for articles of a quality sufficient to meet all requirements, and that fewer articles would have served all practical purposes of the Civilian Conservation Corps. It is but justice to add that the prices paid for the particular articles purchased were not excessive.

We recommend that the purchase of all supplies for the Civilian Conservation Corps be vested in a single agency of the Government possessing adequate experience and organization.

MURIEL CRICHTON

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, for the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], I report a resolution from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S.Res. 100) was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Muriel Crichton $1,200 in full settlement of all claims for hospitalization, medical care, and all other expenses as a result of injuries suffered in the Senate wing of the Capitol Building; and Senate Resolution No. 60, Seventy-third Congress, first session, agreed to April 15, 1933, is hereby rescinded.

SUPPRESSION OF RACKETS AND RACKETEERING

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] I report back from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, with an amendment to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce, Senate Resolution 74, submitted by myself on May 8, 1933. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 3, line 5, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$25,000" and insert "$10,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to strike out all after the word "Resolved" and the comma and to insert in lieu thereof the following, as already amended:

That the Committee on Commerce, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to investigate so-called "rackets" and "racketeering" practiced in the United States and to report to the Senate as soon as practicable the results of its investigations, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary remedial legislation through the exercise of the postal power, the power over interstate and foreign commerce, or otherwise.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress until the final report is submitted, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman, or by the chairman of the subcommittee, if one shall be appointed.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The preamble was amended by striking it out and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

Whereas there have grown up in this country numbers of so-called "rackets", and newspapers carry numerous accounts of "beer rackets", "poultry rackets", "milk rackets", food rackets", "laundry rackets", "drug rackets", and other similar schemes for the exploitation, deception, and terrorizing of our citizens; and

Whereas the legitimate trade and commerce of the country, as well as the general welfare of our people, demand that the Federal Government take any steps within its power to suppress such practices: Therefore be it

The preamble as amended was agreed to.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 63) disapproving section 18 of the Executive order of June 10, 1933, relating to the organization of executive agencies; ordered to lie on the table.

By Mr. REED:

A joint resolution (S.J.Res. 64) disapproving sections 1 and 2 of the Executive order of June 10, 1933, relating to procurement and to national parks, buildings, and reservations; ordered to lie on the table.

UNEMPLOYMENT RESERVE FUND IN THE DISTRICT

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill to create an unemployment reserve fund in the District of Columbia, and ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1943) to create an unemployment reserve fund in the District of Columbia, to provide for its administration, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.,

PUBLIC POLICY DECLARATION

SECTION 1. As a guide to the interpretation and application of this act, the public policy of the District of Columbia is declared to be as follows:

Economic insecurity due to unemployment is a serious menace to the health, welfare, and morals of the people of the District of Columbia. Involuntary unemployment is therefore a subject of general interest and concern which requires appropriate action by Congress to prevent its spread and to lighten its burden which now so often falls with crushing force upon the unemployed worker and his family. Congress therefore declares that in its considered judgment the public good and the well-being of the wage earners of the District require the enactment of this measure for the compulsory setting aside of financial reserves for the benefit of persons unemployed through no fault of their own.

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 2. This act shall be known and may be cited as the "District of Columbia Unemployment Reserve Law."

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. Whenever used in this act—

(1) "Secretary" means Secretary of Labor.

(2) "Department" means Department of Labor.

(3) "Employment", except where the context shows otherwise, means any employment in the District of Columbia under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including all contracts entered into by helpers and assistants of employees, whether paid by employer or employee, if employed with the knowledge actual or constructive of the employer; except that for the purposes of this act an employment shall not include:

(a) Employment as a farm laborer; or

(b) Employment not in the usual course of trade, business, or occupation carried on by the employer for pecuniary gain, or in connection therewith.

(c) Employment of a member of the immediate family of the employer.

(4) "Employee" means any person employed by an employer in any employment subject to this act, except persons employed at a rate of remuneration of $2,000 a year, or more, at other than manual labor, but does not include persons directly employed by the United States or the District of Columbia and persons engaged in the operation of any means of interstate transportation except suburban electrical railways and motor vehicles.

(5) "Employer", except when otherwise expressly stated, means a person, partnership, association, corporation, and the legal representatives of a deceased employer, or the receiver or trustee of a person, partnership, association, or corporation employing four or more persons.

(6) "Fund" means the unemployment reserve fund created by this act.

(7) "Employer's account" means the separate unemployment reserve account of an employer with the fund.

(8) "Reserve per employee" shall refer to the status of an employer's account as determined by the Secretary at the beginning of an accounting period. It shall be calculated by dividing the net amount of such employer's account by the maximum number of employees subject to this act employed by such employer in any week during the preceding accounting period.

(9) "Benefit" means the money allowance payable to an employee as provided in this act.

(10) "Wages" includes the money received for service rendered and the reasonable value of board, rent, housing, lodging, or similar advantage received from the employer.

(11) "Average weekly wage" shall be computed by averaging the wages received during at least 3 full weeks of employment within the 12-month period preceding the claim for benefit. In case there are no such full weeks of employment, the 3 weeks which most closely approximate full weeks of employment shall be taken for the purpose of computing such average.

(12) "A week of employment" means any calendar week in which the employee has performed at least 1 full day's work or its equivalent for an employer.

EXCLUDED INDUSTRIES

SEC. 4. This act does not apply to any seasonal industry in which it is customary to work not more than 17 weeks in 12 months. The Secretary shall by order establish whether any employment is seasonal after a hearing at which opportunity to be heard shall be given to employers in such industry, or their representatives, and the employees or their representatives of such employers.

LIABILITY FOR PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

SEC. 5. (1) Benefits shall be paid to each unemployed employee entitled thereto from his employer's account in the fund, except that exempted employers shall pay benefits directly to their unemployed employees under the plan approved by the Secretary as the basis for the exemption.

(2) Benefits shall become payable 1 year from the date on which the employer's contributions become payable under this act, except as a shorter period may be provided in the case of exempted employers.

(3) An employer's account shall be liable to pay benefits to employees in the ratio of 1 week of benefit to each 3 weeks of employment of such employee by such employer within the preceding 52 weeks, but in no case shall such account be liable for more than 16 weeks' payment of benefits in any 12 months to any one employee.

(4) In no case shall an employer's account be liable to pay benefits to an employee for any unemployment occurring more than 12 months after the date on which such employee last performed services for such employer.

(5) When the condition of any employer's or pooled account is such that it is unable to pay the benefits provided in this act, the Secretary may reduce the amount of benefit payable from such account to an amount which will assure equitable treatment of persons entitled to benefits from such account.

AMOUNT OF BENEFITS

SEC. 6. (1) An employee shall be entitled to benefits on account of unemployment which continues subsequent to a waiting period of 3 weeks after notification of unemployment: Provided, That not more than 3 weeks of unemployment for which no benefit is paid shall be required as a waiting period within any 13 consecutive calendar weeks (except as otherwise provided under section 8, subsection 2). No week of unemployment shall count as a waiting period in any case except weeks of unemployment as to which notification of unemployment has been given.

(2) Benefits shall be payable at a rate as provided herein but not to exceed:

(a) Fifteen dollars a week; or

(b) Fifty percent of the employee's average weekly wage, whichever is the lower.

(3) Benefits shall be paid to each employee for the weeks during which he is unemployed and eligible for benefits; but no employee shall receive in any 12 months more than 16 weeks of benefit.

(4) When an employee is employed by more than one employer within any 12-month period, the payment of benefits due such employee shall be made from the successive employer's accounts in inverse order to such successive employments. Until the last employer liable shall have met or been unable further to meet his benefit liability to an eligible employee no previous employer shall be due to pay benefits to such employee.

ELIGIBILITY FOR BENEFITS

SEC. 7. (1) Benefits shall be paid to an employee only:

(a) If he has been employed by one or more employers in the District for not less than 13 weeks during the preceding 52 weeks;

(b) While he is available for employment and unable to obtain employment in his usual employment or another for which he is reasonably fitted.

(2) No employee shall be required to accept employment:

(a) In a situation vacant in consequence of a stoppage of work due to a trade dispute;

(b) If the wages, hours, and conditions offered be not those prevailing for similar work in the place of employment or are such as tend to depress wages or working conditions;

(c) If acceptance of such employment would abridge or limit the right of the employee either:

(A) To refrain from joining a labor organization or association of workmen, or

(B) To retain membership in and observe the rules of any such organization or association.

LIMITATION ON PAYMENT OF BENEFIT

SEC. 8. (1) An employee shall not be entitled to benefits:

(a) While he is receiving compensation under the workmen's compensation law; or

(b) Unless he has given notice of his employment as required by this act, or unless the obligation to give notice has been dispensed with; or

(c) If he has left or lost his employment due to a trade dispute involving the employer by whom he was employed, so long as such trade dispute continues; or

(d) If he has refused a job offered him in a trade or occupation for which he is reasonably fitted.

(2) An employee shall not be entitled to benefits except for unemployment which continues subsequent to a waiting period of 10 weeks if he has lost his employment through misconduct, or if he has left employment voluntarily without reasonable cause.

BREAK IN UNEMPLOYMENT

SEC. 9. (1) Employment at any work for which provision of benefits is not required, shall suspend the right to benefits. If the employee becomes unemployed after 3 months or more of such employment, his right to benefits shall recommence upon notification of unemployment and the running of the waiting period. If he becomes unemployed within 3 months of his acceptance of such employment, his right to benefits shall recommence upon notification of unemployment.

(2) If an employee undertakes such employment during the 3-weeks waiting period, it shall not affect the running of such period if it continues for 6 days or less.

(3) The employee shall inform the employment office at which he has given notice of unemployment when he begins and leaves such employment.

NOTIFICATION

SEC. 10. An employee shall give notice of his unemployment either in the District employment office or in the employment office established under this act by trade associations or by organizations of employers and employees under collective agreements, for the industry in which he is usually or was last employed, or as otherwise designated by the Secretary.

PROOF OF RIGHT

SEC. 11. The employee shall prove his right to benefits and the continuance of such right in such manner as may be provided by the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

JURISDICTION CONTINUOUS

SEC. 12. Jurisdiction over benefits shall be continuous. Benefits paid to any individual shall be modified whenever necessary to make the amount correspond to the amount determined by the Secretary, in accordance with subsection 5 of section 5.

PAYMENT OF BENEFITS

SEC. 13. (1) Claims for benefits, except from exempted employers, shall be filed with the officer of the employment office at which notice of the unemployment has been given. Claims shall be filed within such time and in such manner as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe, but such regulation shall provide for a notice to the employer or employers whose accounts may be affected and for a hearing at the request of the employer or employee. Benefits shall be paid at such periods and in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe.

(2) (a) If the employer or any group of employers or any association or organization, approved under section 27, upon request by the employee, fails to pay or to continue to pay the benefit due, the employee may file a claim for benefit with the officer in charge of the employment office at which he has given notice of his unemployment. The claim must be filed within 1 month of the default in payment.

(b) If such officer believes the claim correct, or if incorrect, as soon as it has been corrected, he shall notify in writing within 5 days such employer or group of employers or the governing board of any association or organization, approved under section 27, of the claim and that he or it may contest the claim by filing, within 5 working days after receipt of notice, a denial of the claim in such form as the Secretary may provide; and such denial shall operate as an application for a hearing before such officer.

(c) If the claim appears to such officer to be invalid or improperly made, he shall, within 3 days, notify such employer, and shall also notify the employee of this and of his right to make an application for a hearing before the officer which must be made within 5 working days. Such notifications and applications shall be in such form as the Secretary may prescribe.

(d) The officer shall hold a hearing when applied for, and after a hearing, or in case no hearing is applied for, without hearing, shall make an order fixing benefits and notify the claimant, his last employer, and the Secretary.

(e) Under (b), (c), and (d) of this subsection the Secretary may designate an umpire to act in place of the officer in charge of the employment office.

APPEAL BOARD

SEC. 14. There shall be an appeal board, consisting of 3 members designated by the Secretary for 2-year terms, 1 of whom shall be an umpire, who shall be chairman, 1 of whom shall be an employer or a representative of employers, and 1 of whom shall be an employee or a representative of employees. The members of the appeal board shall receive a per diem compensation for the days actually spent in the work of the board, to be fixed by the Secretary.

APPEALS

SEC. 15. (1) An appeal may be taken from a decision of the officer by any party affected within 30 days after the decision has been made by filing a notice of appeal with the officer, who shall mail a copy of such notice to the other party or parties and shall send to the appeal board a copy of the notice and of his decision. The appeal board shall fix a time for hearing and shall notify all parties. Upon a hearing the officer may be heard, and any party may present evidence and be represented by an agent. No fees shall be allowed any agent of an employer or employee in any proceeding under section 13 and under this section.

(2) The parties shall be notified of the decision of the appeal board, which shall be rendered not more than 30 days after the hearing.

FINAL DECISION ON FACTS

SEC. 16. A decision by the officer, if not appealed from, and a decision of the appeal board shall be final on all questions of fact and, unless appealed from, on all questions of law.

TECHNICAL RULES OF EVIDENCE OR PROCEDURE NOT REQUIRED

SEC. 17. The officer or board conducting a hearing shall not be bound by common law or statutory rules of evidence or by technical or formal rules of procedure, except as provided by this act, but may conduct such hearing in such manner as to ascertain the substantial rights of the parties.

QUESTIONS OF LAW TO COURT

SEC. 18. Within 30 days after notice of the filing of the award or the decision of the appeal board has been sent to the parties an appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia from such award or decision by the employee, by the employer, or by the group of employers or by the governing board of any association or organization approved under section 27. The appeal board may also, in its discretion, certify to such supreme court questions of law involved in its decision. Such appeals and the questions so certified shall be heard in a summary manner and shall have precedence over all other civil cases in such court, except cases arising under the workmen's compensation law. In case a question is certified by the appeal board the attorney of the United States for the District, without extra compensation, shall represent the appeal board. An appeal may also be taken to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in all cases where the decision of the supreme court is not unanimous and by the consent of the supreme court or the court of appeals where the decision of the supreme court is unanimous. It shall not be necessary to file exceptions to the rulings of the appeal board. No bond shall be required to be filed upon an appeal to the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia. Otherwise such appeals shall be subject to the law and practice applicable to appeals in civil actions. Upon final determination of such an appeal the appeal board shall enter an order in accordance therewith.

WAIVER AGREEMENT VOID

SEC. 19. No agreement by an employee to waive his rights under this act shall be valid.

ASSIGNMENT OF BENEFITS—EXEMPTION

SEC. 20. Benefits due under this act shall not be assigned, released, or commuted and shall be exempt from all claims of creditors and from levy, execution, and attachment or other remedy for recovery or collection of a debt, which exemption may not be waived.

UNEMPLOYMENT RESERVE FUND

SEC. 21. (1) There is hereby created a fund to be known as "the unemployment reserve fund." Such fund shall consist of all contributions received and paid into the fund, of property and securities acquired by and through the use of moneys belonging to the fund and of interest earned upon moneys belonging to the fund and deposited or invested. Such fund shall be applicable to the payment of benefits and shall be administered by the Secretary.

(2) A separate account shall be kept by the Secretary with each employer contributing to said fund, and this separate employer's account shall not be merged with any other account except as provided in subsection 3 or 4 of this section.

(3) Whenever two or more employers in the same industry desire to pool their several accounts with the fund, they may file with the Secretary a written application to merge their several accounts in a pooled account with the fund. The Secretary may approve such a pooled account, provided that the several employers each accept such suitable rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions of this act as may be drawn up by the Secretary for the conduct and dissolution of such pooled accounts.

(4) (a) Whenever it appears to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the assurance of the safety of the funds and the carrying out of the purposes of this act require a wider base than the individual account, he shall by order require the pooling of contributions of the employers in any industry and may make the necessary regulations to secure such pooling.

(b) Before making such order the Secretary shall hold a hearing at which an opportunity to be heard shall be afforded to any employer, or representative of employers, and the employees of any employer, or representative of employees, who may be affected by such order. A public notice of such hearing shall be given in such manner as may be fixed by the Secretary. Such notice shall be made at least 1 month before the hearing is held.

(c) All the employers in any pool shall be treated as a single employer for the purposes of contribution or of fixing rights to benefits, and the employees of all the employers in such pool shall be treated for the purposes of benefits as if they were the employees of a single employer.

PAYMENT OF CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 22. (1) On and after the 1st day of July 1934 contributions shall be payable by each employer then subject to this act. Contributions shall become payable by any other employer on and after the date on which he becomes subject to this act.

(2) All contributions from employers shall be paid at such times and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE UNEMPLOYMENT RESERVE FUND

SEC. 23. (1) The contribution regularly payable by each employer shall be an amount equal to 3 percent of the pay roll of the employees for whom he is liable to pay benefits under this act. During an employer's first 2 years of contribution, he shall make contributions to the fund at the rate of 3 percent of his pay roll, and thereafter shall make such payments during any accounting period at the beginning of which his account amounts to less than $65 reserve per employee.

(2) If the employer has been continuously subject to this act during the 2 preceding years, the rate of contributions may be reduced or suspended by the Secretary under the following conditions:

(a) Whenever at the beginning of an accounting period, the employer's account amounts to $65 but less than $100 reserve per employee, such employer shall pay contributions to the fund at the rate of 1 percent of his pay roll during the continuance of such period.

(b) Whenever at the beginning of an accounting period, the employer's account has a reserve per employee of $100 or more, no contributions to the unemployment reserve fund shall be required of such employer during the continuance of such period.

AGREEMENT TO CONTRIBUTIONS BY EMPLOYEES VOID

SEC. 24. No agreement by an employee to pay any portion of the payment made by his employer for the purpose of providing benefits required by this act, either through the fund or otherwise, shall be valid and no employer shall make a deduction for such purpose from the wages or salary of any employee.

EMPLOYEES' VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS

SEC. 25. Employees individually or collectively may make voluntary arrangements with their employers or with groups of employers for the payment of contributions to increase the benefits paid them over the benefits provided by this act, and may authorize the deduction from their wages of such contribution. With the consent of the Secretary and of the employer, or of employer members of a pool, by whom any employee or group of employees is employed, such arrangement may provide for the payment of such contributions into the fund and for their distribution in the same manner and under the same conditions as are benefits under this act, and for other necessary conditions.

ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 26. (1) This act shall be administered by the Secretary of Labor, and for such purpose the Secretary shall have power to make all rules and regulations and to appoint such officers and employees as may be necessary in the administration of this act.

(2) The Secretary shall fix the accounting periods.

(3) The Secretary shall establish an advisory council composed of persons representing employers and employees in equal numbers and the public, which shall consider and advise him concerning policies and methods connected with the administration of this act. Members of such council shall be selected from time to time in such manner as the Secretary shall prescribe and shall serve without compensation. The advisory council shall have access to all files and records connected with the administration of this act and may recommend such changes in policies and methods as it deems necessary.

(4) The Secretary may establish and maintain as many employment offices as he deems necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

(5) It shall be one of the purposes of this act to promote the regularization of employment in the District. The Secretary shall take such steps as are within his means for the reduction and prevention of unemployment. To this end, the Secretary may employ experts and may carry on and publish the results of any investigations and research which he deems relevant, whether or not directly related to the other purposes and specific provisions of this act.

EXEMPTED EMPLOYERS

SEC. 27. (1) The Secretary may exempt from the provisions of this act requiring contributions to the unemployment reserve fund any employer or group of employers submitting a plan for unemployment benefits, whether the plan is submitted by an individual employer or by a group, or for an industry, by a trade association of which the employer is a member or by an employers' organization and an organization of employees, acting under a collective agreement, provided that the Secretary finds that such plan:

(a) Makes eligible for benefits at least the employees who would otherwise be eligible under this act and at least to the same amount;

(b) Provides that the proportion of the benefits to be financed by the employer or employers will on the whole be equal to or greater than the benefits which would otherwise be provided; and

(c) Is on the whole as beneficial in all other respects to such employees as the plan otherwise provided in this act.

(2) If under such a plan any contributions are made by employees, the accounts of the plan shall be so kept as to make clear what proportion of the benefits is financed by the employer or employers, and what proportion by the employees. If under such a plan any contributions are made by employees, the Secretary shall require that such employees be represented, by representatives of their own choosing, in the direct administration of such plan, and the Secretary may take any steps necessary and appropriate to assure such representation to contributing employees.

(3) As a condition of granting exemption, the Secretary may require the employer or group or trade association or organization to furnish such security as the Secretary may deem sufficient to assure payment of all promised benefits or wages, including the setting-up of proper reserves. Such reserves and other security and also the manner in which an exempted employer carries out his promises of benefits shall be subject to inspection and investigation by the Secretary at any reasonable time. If the Secretary shall deem it necessary he may require an exempted employer or group or trade association or organization to furnish additional security to assure fulfillment of his promises to his employees.

(4) If an exempted employer or group or association or organization fails to furnish security satisfactory to the Secretary, or fails to fulfill the promises made to employees, or willfully fails to furnish any reports that the Secretary may require under this act or otherwise to comply with the applicable portions of this act and the rules, regulations, and orders of the Secretary pertaining to the administration thereof, the Secretary may, upon 10 days' notice and the opportunity to be heard, revoke the exemption of such employer, group, association, or organization. In such case or in case any exempted employer, group, association, or organization voluntarily terminates exemption, such employer or each of such group or association or organization shall at once pay into the fund an amount equal to the balance which would have been standing to his account had he been making contributions to the fund and paying out the benefits provided in this act: Provided, That in any case where such balance cannot reasonably and definitely be determined, the Secretary may require such employer to meet his liability under the present subsection by paying into the fund a lump-sum amount equal to the contributions he would, if not exempted, have paid into the fund during the 12 months preceding the termination of his exemption. The account of any employer whose exemption has been terminated shall thenceforth be liable to pay to his employees the benefits which may remain or thereafter become due them, as if such employer had not been exempted under this section; and such employer shall thenceforth pay all contributions regularly required under this act from nonexempted employers.

(5) Such plans shall provide that upon the going out of business in the District by any employer, or the legal abandonment of the plan, the fund which shall have been contributed under such plan shall be retained for a sufficient period to meet all liability for benefits which may thereafter accrue, and that at the end of such period the proportion then remaining of employer contributions shall be paid to the employer or his assigns, and the proportion then remaining of employee contributions shall be distributed in such equitable manner as the Secretary may approve.

(6) The rules and regulations for the government of such plan must be submitted to and approved by the Secretary. The Secretary may, on the petition of any interested party, or on his own motion, and after public hearing, modify any such plan.

INDUSTRY EMPLOYMENT OFFICES

SEC. 28. (1) Any trade association for any industry, or any organization of employers and an organization of employees acting under a collective agreement, with a plan for administering its own benefits approved by the Secretary may, with the approval of the Secretary, establish an employment office to serve the industry, with such branches as it may think desirable. The expense of such office shall be a charge upon the unemployment fund of such association or organization. The governing board appointed in accordance with rules and regulations approved by the Secretary shall appoint and fix the remuneration of the officers and employees of such employment office, and shall, with the approval of the Secretary, make rules and regulations for its operation. The Secretary may at any time investigate the conduct of any employment office so maintained.

(2) There shall be an advisory committee of five members for each such office; two members shall be appointed by the employers of the industry, and two members shall be appointed by the employees of the industry in such manner as the Secretary may provide by regulation, and one shall be appointed by the Secretary. The advisory committee shall meet at least every 3 months and shall be consulted on the policy and operation of the office.

TREASURER OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CUSTODIAN OF FUND

SEC. 29. The treasurer of the District of Columbia shall be the custodian of the fund, and all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon vouchers signed by the treasurer or assistant treasurer. The treasurer shall give a separate and additional bond in an amount to be fixed by the auditor of the District of Columbia and with sureties approved by such auditor conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty as custodian of the fund. The treasurer may deposit any portion of the fund not needed for immediate use in the manner and subject to all the provisions of law respecting the deposit of other District funds by him. Interest earned by such portion of the fund deposited by the treasurer shall be collected by him and placed to the credit of the fund, and shall be allocated annually to the separate account of each employer or pooled account in the proportion which such account on June 30 in each year bears to the whole fund.

INVESTMENT OF SURPLUS

SEC. 30. Any of the surplus funds belonging to the fund may, by order of the Secretary, be invested in any obligations of the United States of America and of the District of Columbia. All such securities or evidences of indebtedness shall be placed in the hands of the treasurer of the District of Columbia, who shall be custodian thereof. He shall collect the principal and interest thereof, when due, and pay the same into the fund. The treasurer of the District of Columbia shall pay all vouchers drawn on the fund for the making of such investments when signed by the Secretary, or other officer or employee of the department duly authorized by the Secretary, upon delivery of such securities or evidence of indebtedness to him. The Secretary may sell any of such securities.

RECORD AND AUDIT OF PAY ROLLS

SEC. 31. Every employer shall keep a true and accurate record of the number of his employees and the wages paid by him, and shall furnish to the Secretary, upon demand, a sworn statement of the same. Such record shall be open to inspection at any time and as often as may be necessary to verify the number of employees and the amount of the pay roll. Any employer who shall fail to keep such record or who shall wilfully falsify any such record shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

COLLECTION OF CONTRIBUTIONS IN CASE OF DEFAULT

SEC. 32. If an employer shall default in any payments required to be made by him to the fund, after due notice, the amount due from him with interest at 6 percent from the date when due, shall be collected by civil action against him brought in the name of the Secretary, and the same when collected shall be paid into the fund, and such employer's compliance with the provisions of this act requiring payments to be made to the fund shall date from the time of the payment of said money so collected.

BANKRUPTCY

SEC. 33. In the event of bankruptcy or insolvency of an employer the amount due for contribution to the fund shall be a prior claim and shall be entitled to such priority in bankruptcy, as is provided by section 64, subsection b, subsection 7, of the Federal Bankruptcy Act.

DISCLOSURES PROHIBITED

SEC. 34. Information acquired from employers or employees pursuant to this act shall not be open to public inspection, and any officer or employee of the Department who, without authority of the Secretary or pursuant to his regulations, or as otherwise required by law, shall disclose the same shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

EXPENSES OF ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 35. (1) The Secretary and the auditor of the District of Columbia annually as soon as practicable after July 1 shall ascertain the total amount of expenses incurred by the department during the preceding fiscal year in connection with the administration of this act and shall add thereto one half of the total expenses of maintaining the public employment offices as established for the purposes of this act. An itemized statement of the total expenses so ascertained shall be open to public inspection in the office of the Secretary for 30 days after notice published as the Secretary shall provide before the Secretary shall make an assessment as hereinafter provided. The Secretary shall assess upon the fund and upon the exempted employers such total amount of expenses in the proportion that the total benefits paid from the fund or benefits paid by any exempted employer in such year bears to the total of benefits paid in such year. The Secretary shall apportion the share of such expense borne by the fund among the employers' accounts in the proportion which the benefits paid by or on behalf of each employer's account bear to the total benefits paid from the fund.

(2) No employer shall be assessed under this section in any fiscal year more than an amount equal to three tenths of 1 percent of the total wages paid by him to his employees during the year in which the assessed expenses were incurred by the department.

EXPENSES OF HEARINGS

SEC. 36. Fees of witnesses and other expenses, except legal services, involved in hearings and appeals under this act shall be paid at the same rate as similar expenses are paid in hearings under the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for disability or death resulting from injury to employees in certain employments in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes", approved May 17, 1928, and shall be treated as expenses under this act.

STUDY OF PARTIAL UNEMPLOYMENT

SEC. 37. The Secretary shall appoint a committee of not more than three persons who shall make a study of partial unemployment, and shall make recommendations to the Secretary in respect to provision for the inclusion of benefits for partial unemployment in this act. The Secretary shall transmit the report and recommendations of the committee, with his comments thereon and recommendations to Congress not later than the 1st of February 1934.

PENALTIES

SEC. 38. (1) Any person who wilfully makes a false statement or representation:

(a) To obtain any benefit or payment under the provisions of this act, either for himself or for any other person; or

(b) To lower contributions paid to the fund; or

(2) Any person who wilfully refuses or fails to pay a contribution to the fund; or

(3) Any person or corporation who refuses to allow the secretary or his authorized representative to inspect his pay roll or other records or documents relative to the enforcement of this act; or

(4) Any employer who shall make a deduction from the wages or salary of any employee to pay any portion of the contribution which the employer is required to make shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. If a corporation is convicted of any such violation, its president, secretary, treasurer, or officers exercising corresponding functions shall each be guilty of a misdemeanor.

(5) Any employer who fails to pay his contributions to the fund promptly and when due shall be liable for interest at the rate of 6 percent from the time due until the time of payment.

SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

SEC. 39. If any provision of this act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

APPROPRIATION

SEC. 40. The sum of ——— dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is authorized to be appropriated and paid for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this act in like manner as other appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 41. This act shall take effect immediately.

REVISION OF FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Commerce, and present a memorandum to accompany the bill showing the changes it proposes to make in the present Food and Drugs Act. I ask that the memorandum may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 1944) to prevent the manufacture, shipment, and sale of adulterated or misbranded food, drugs, and cosmetics, and to regulate traffic therein, to prevent the false advertisement of food, drugs, and cosmetics, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The memorandum presented by Mr. COPELAND to accompany the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON THE BILL FOR REVISING THE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT, INDICATING DIFFERENCES BETWEEN BILL AND PRESENT LAW

S. 1944	PRESENT LAW
SECTION 1. Title.
SEC. 2. Definitions of food, drug, cosmetic, advertisement, and other terms used in bill.	Definition of drug does not include therapeutic devices, or drugs or devices intended to affect nonpathologic conditions of the body. Cosmetic and advertisement not defined.
SEC. 3. (a) Food defined as adulterated if dangerous to health; if added poisonous substances present in excess of tolerances prescribed by Secretary; if filthy or decomposed; if prepared under unsanitary conditions; if from diseased animals; or if packed in poisonous containers.	No provision against packing under unsanitary conditions, or in poisonous containers. No authorization to establish tolerances for poisons. Other provisions essentially the same.
(b) Food adulterated if valuable constituent removed; if another substance substituted partly or entirely for the article; if damage or inferiority is concealed; or if any substance has been mixed with it to increase its bulk or weight or to reduce its quality or to create a deceptive appearance.	Contains essentially the same provisions.
(c) Confectionery defined as adulterated if it contains alcohol, resinous glazes, or nonnutritive substances.	Resinous glazes not prohibited and only certain enumerated nonnutritive substances banned. Otherwise essentially similar.
(d) Prohibits use of uncertified coal-tar colors in foods.	No similar provision. No action can be taken unless it can be proved that colors or their impurities are poisonous and that they are present in such quantities as may be harmful to health.
SEC. 4 (a) A drug defined as adulterated if under the conditions of use prescribed in the labeling it may be dangerous to health.	Contains no such provision.
(b) A drug defined as adulterated if its name is the same as, or simulates, a Pharmacopœial or National Formulary name, and it fails to meet all the requirements of the Pharmacopœia or Formulary. Where the tests provided by the Pharmacopœia or Formulary for determining the standard of strength, quality, or purity are insufficient, the Secretary is authorized to prescribe improved tests. Drugs exempted from this provision if labeled to show wherein their strength, quality, and purity differ from Pharmacopœial or Forumlary requirements.	Does not authorize establishment of new tests when tests prescribed are insufficient. Other provisions essentially the same.
(c) Drugs not recognized in Pharmocopœia or Formulary must meet the standards under which they are sold.	Contains essentially same provisions.
(d) Drugs defined as adulterated if any substance has been mixed with them to reduce their quality or strength, or if any substance has been substituted wholy or in part for them.	Contains no similar provision. Action, if possible, must be taken under other adulteration provisions or under misbranding provisions.
SEC. 5. (a) Cosmetics defined as adulterated if injurious to the user.	No provisions on cosmetics.
(b) Cosmetics defined as adulterated if they contain poisonous substances in excess of the tolerances prescribed by the Secretary.	No provisions on cosmetics.
SEC. 6. (a) Food, drugs, and cosmetics defined as misbranded if labeling is false or misleading in any particular.	No provisions on cosmetics. Otherwise essentially the same.
(b) Food, drugs, and cosmetics in package form must bear labels which show the name and address of the manufacturer or distributor and the quantity of the contents. Canned food which moves in substantial quantities from packing to labeling establishments, there to be labeled, is exempted from penalties if it is actually labeled properly before leaving the labeling establishment.	Neither food nor drugs required to be labeled with the name and address of manufacturer or distributor. No provision on cosmetics. While statement of quantity of contents, required on food, no such requirement of contents for drugs. No provision specifically exempting canned food from labeling to show quantity of contents, but by order of Secretary such exemption administratively allowed.
(c) All statements required by this and other sections of the act must be plainly and conspicuously set forth in terms readily intelligible to the consumer.	Specifically required only for statements of quantity of contents; otherwise required only by inference.
SEC. 7. (a) Food misbranded if in deceptive or slack-filled containers.	No similar provision.
(b) Food misbranded if offered for sale under name of another food.	Contains same provision.
(c) Food misbranded if imitation and not so labeled.	Contains essentially same provision.
(d) Food misbranded if it fails to meet the definition of identity legally promulgated by regulations, or if its label fails to bear the name of the article.	Definitions now promulgated have no legal effect, but must be supported by expert testimony. Name of food defined not required to appear on label.
(e) Food misbranded if standards of quality have been legally promulgated and its label fails to state the quality of the food.	A similar provision is applicable only to canned foods.
(f) Food misbranded if it is represented as one for which no definition has been prescribed	No provision for informative labeling. On the contrary, food sold under a distinctive name

Exemptions also made for articles sold as compounds and blends. Extent of these exemptions not fully clarified by court decisions.
SEC. 8. (a) A drug misbranded if labeled with the name of a disease for which it is a palliative but not a cure and fails to state that it is not a cure, or if its label bears any statement concerning the effect of the drug contrary to the general agreement of medical opinion	A drug labeled with disease names for which it is a palliative not required to be labeled to show it is not a cure. False statements of therapeutic effect are banned only if such statements are fraudulently made.
(b) Labels for drugs containing any narcotic or hypnotic substance must bear the name and quantity of such substance with the statement, "Warning! May be habit-forming."	Labels must bear the name and quantity of a limited number of such substances, enumerated in the law, and their derivatives. No warning legend provided.
(c) Presence and amount of alcohol, ether, and chloroform must be declared on the labels.	Contains same provision.
(d) Methods of use must be prescribed on the labels.	Contains no such provision.
(e) Drugs sold under names not recognized in Pharmacopœia or Formulary required to bear their common name, if there is any, and the name and quantity of each medicinal ingredient. The Secretary is authorized to require such further information on the label as may be necessary to protect public health.	Contains no similar provision.
(f) Pharmacopœial and Formulary drugs must be packed and labeled as required by these authorities.	Contains no such provision.
(g) Drugs liable to deterioration must be packaged and labeled as required by regulations.	Contains no such provision.
(h) A drug misbranded if its container is deceptive, or if it imitates another drug, or if it is offered for sale under the name of another drug.	No provision regarding deceptive containers. Otherwise the same.
(i) Germicides and antiseptics must kill micro-organisms under conditions of use indicated in labeling.	Contains no such provision. Some of more flagrant abuses can be reached by general provisions against adulteration and misbranding.
SEC. 9 (a) and (b) Advertising of food, drugs, and cosmetics defined as false if misleading in any particular.	Contains no such provision.
(c) Public advertising of drugs for diseases wherein self-medication may be dangerous prohibited.	Contains no such provision.
SEC. 10. Secretary authorized to prohibit added poisons in food and cosmetics, or prescribe tolerances for them.	No provision on cosmetics. Expert testimony must be brought in each contested case on food to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the poison is present in such quantity as may be harmful to health.
SEC. 11. Secretary authorized to establish definitions of identity and standards of quality and fill of container for food.	Law authorizes establishment of standards of quality and fill of container for canned food only. Present definitions and standards for other food do not have the force and effect of law, and in all cases expert testimony must be introduced to sustain their validity.
SEC. 12. Secretary authorized to require permits for interstate shipment of classes of food, drugs, and cosmetics which by reason of conditions surrounding their manufacture may be injurious to health, and where their injurious nature cannot be adequately determined after interstate shipment.	Contains no such provision.
SEC. 13. Inspectors authorized to make inspection of factories, warehouses, and other establishments in which food, drugs, or	Contains no such provision.

cosmetics are manufactured or held. Provision made to enjoin interstate shipments from factories or warehouse refusing privilege of inspection.
SEC. 14. Interstate carriers of food, drugs, and cosmetics, and interstate consignees of such articles, required to permit inspectors to copy records showing interstate shipment.	Contains no such provision.
SEC. 15. Authorizes the Department to investigate food, drugs, and cosmetics, through its own agents or through State or city officials. Prescribes duties of United States attorneys to whom violations of the act are reported. Requires Secretary to give opportunity for hearing before criminal prosecution.	Hearing is not required except in prosecutions against dealers who have received and distributed goods in violation of the act. Nevertheless, the administrative practice has always been to afford hearings to prospective defendants. Other provisions essentially the same.
SEC. 16. Authorizes seizure of articles in violation of the law by process pursuant to libel, or in cases where there is probable cause to believe that articles are adulterated so as to be imminently dangerous to health, upon the order of an officer of the Department, after which jurisdiction of the court attaches. Where recovery is had in a suit against an officer by reason of seizure on probable cause, judgment will be paid out of appropriations for the administration of this act. Courts authorized to dispose of articles condemned after seizure by destruction or sale. Proviso made that seized goods may be returned to the claimant under bond for destruction or for bringing them into compliance with the law if this can be done.	Contains no provision for executive seizure, even though product imminently dangerous to health. Other provisions essentially the same.
SEC. 17. Provides penalties of imprisonment and fine for both first and subsequent violations of act; repeated offenders and willful offenders subjected to heavy penalties. Exempts publishers and radio broadcasters and advertising agencies from penalties if they furnish name of person responsible for the advertising. Exempts dealers from prosecution who hold guaranties. Prohibits forging of label identification devices authorized by regulations under sections 12 and 22.	Penalties are very small, and imprisonment authorized only on second offenses. No special penalty provided for willful violation. Contains no penalties for false advertising. Contains same exemption for dealers.
SEC. 18. Provides for liability of officers of corporations violating the law.	Contains similar provision.
SEC. 19. To avoid multiplicity of seizure and criminal proceedings United States courts are vested with jurisdiction to restrain repetitious violations by injunction.	Contains no such provision.
SEC. 20. Lays down procedure for excluding adulterated, misbranded, and falsely advertised food, drugs, and cosmetics from importation.	No provision on cosmetics. No provision against importation of falsely advertised food and drugs. Otherwise essentially the same.
SEC. 21. Secretary authorized to publish all court proceedings and to disseminate such other information regarding food, drugs, and cosmetics as may be necessary to protect the public health or to protect the public against fraud.	Authorizes publication of judgments of the court only.
SEC. 22. Secretary authorized upon application of manufacturers to designate supervisory inspectors in factories of food, drugs, and cosmetics, who, if the goods conform to the requirements of the act, will permit the use of marks showing compliance with the act and such other information as the regulations may provide. Such services to be paid for by appli-	Contains no such provision.

cant and proceeds to be turned into the Treasury for use by the Secretary in expenditures incurred in carrying out this section.
SEC. 23. Secretary authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of the act except those relating to imports. Secretaries of Treasury and Agriculture authorized to prescribe regulations covering imports. Sections 9 and 10 of Federal Trade Commission Act incorporated by reference.	Regulations made by Secretaries of Treasury, Agriculture, and Commerce. No provision similar to sections 9 and 10 of Federal Trade Commission Act.
SEC. 24. Authorizes suit for personal injuries caused by violation of the act.	Contains no such provision.
SEC. 25. Separability clause.	Contains no such provision.
SEC. 26. Effective date and repeals.

The outstanding changes in the bill from the provisions of the present law are:

1. Extension of jurisdiction to advertising.
2. Inclusion of cosmetics.
3. Authorization to limit added poisons in food to specific tolerances.
4. Authorization to establish definitions and standards for food.
5. Authorization to require permits when food may be injurious and public cannot be effectively protected by other provisions.
6. Provision to control more adequately false or misleading therapeutic claims on drugs.
7. Requirement for fully informative labeling of food and drugs.
8. More adequate remedial provisions.

REQUEST FOR RETURN BY THE PRESIDENT OF RAILROAD-RELIEF ENROLLED BILL

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, there is an urgent matter which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate.

In the passage of the railroad bill the conference report left out two words. The bill has gone to the White House, and we are anxious to have it recalled from the White House.

Out of order, therefore, I ask unanimous consent to submit a concurrent resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before granting permission I should like to have the concurrent resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 5), as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 1580) to relieve the existing national emergency in relation to interstate railroad transportation, and to amend sections 5, 15a, and 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

Resolved further, That in the event the said bill is returned by the President, the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice President of the United States in signing the said enrolled bill be rescinded, and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reenroll the said bill with the following amendment, namely: In section 13, after the word "conditions", insert the words "and relations."

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

REDUCTIONS IN PERSONNEL AND COMPENSATION AND CURTAILMENT OF SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. McNARY. Let it be reported.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported.

The resolution (S.Res. 101) was read, as follows:

Resloved, That the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce are requested to furnish the Senate at once all available information as to any reductions in personnel, cuts in compensation, or curtailment of activities within the past year in connection with Federal scientific research or experimentation, carried on or conducted by said Departments or any bureau or agency thereunder.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

THE HOME-OWNERS LOAN CORPORATION (S.DOC. NO. 74)

On motion by Mr. HAYDEN, on behalf of the Committee on Printing, a statement by W. F. Stevenson, Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, entitled "The Home-Owners Loan Corporation" was ordered to be printed as a Senate document.

COST OF LIVING AND WAGE CUTS—STATEMENT BY ETHELBERT STEWART

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask to have inserted in the RECORD an article relating to a statement by Ethelbert Stewart, former Chief of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, dealing with governmental cost-of-living figures and wage cuts, which appeared in Labor, June 6, 1933.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Labor, June 6, 1933]

STEWART HITS "COST OF LIVING" FIGURES; USE TO DEFEND WAGE CUTS CALLED A CRIME—FAMOUS STATISTICIAN DECLARES GOVERNMENT DATA ARE MISLEADING AND VICIOUS; WORKERS NEVER REACHED DECENT STANDARD

One of the world's outstanding economists and statisticians, Ethelbert Stewart, former Chief of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, who during his 45 years with the Federal Government became internationally famous for the accuracy of his findings, has come out of retirement to deliver a smashing broadside against the widely prevalent practice of using the Government's "cost of living" figures as a basis for fixing wage rates.

One of the main arguments used by employers—from Uncle Sam down to the owner of a "hole-in-the-wall" bookstore—in their wage-cutting drive throughout the depression, has been that "living costs have come down."

FIGURES ARE MISLEADING

The figures on which that conclusion is based, Stewart points out in an article which will appear in the June issue of the Railroad Trainman, are 15 years old and their use as an argument, or as a basis for reduction of wages, "is a crime, a fraud, and an outrage." They are so misleading, he says, "as to be actually vicious."

"The Bureau of Labor Statistics never intended for 1 minute that this survey of 1918 should be used as a basis of computing the cost of living in 1933", Stewart emphasizes. And particular weight attaches to that statement in view of the fact that he was in charge of the Bureau when it made the survey.

As far back as 1926 Stewart protested that the 1918 standard-of-living figures had become obsolete. They are still more unsound today. Furthermore, he points out, the 1918 survey merely undertook to secure statistical information as to how the workers in 92 industrial centers lived and what it cost them.

NEVER MEANT AS STANDARD

"The bureau", he explains, "never said and never meant to indicate that the conditions it found were to be set up as a standard, or to be considered even normal, much less ideal."

Yet all the wage cutters base their arguments—when they feel it is necessary to offer an alibi for sandbagging their employees—on the cost-of-living indices as put out by the Bureau of Labor Statistics today which, Stewart solemnly declares on his reputation as a statistician, "are based upon standards that no longer exist and as far as the individual families are concerned could not possibly exist."

Stewart, a pioneer in the old Knights of Labor movement and a veteran of that organization's early struggles, sounds a fighting note in his statement—the first public utterance he has made since he retired from Federal service.

BLASTS "COST OF LIVING"

"I will not keep still", he says. "I will not by my silence seem a party to an attempt to crowd the American workmen back to the living conditions, into the status of 15 years ago."

And this is what he thinks of the whole theory of the "cost of living" basis for wage rates:

"The fixed standard of living is perhaps the most vicious fallacy in all the realms of statistical thinking. * * * There can be nothing that could produce greater mental anguish and physical discomfort than to crowd the workers back into an economic condition which they had outgrown.

IGNORES HUMAN RIGHTS

"I never did believe and do not now believe in 'cost of living' or 'standards of living' as a basis for wage rates. The whole theory and idea grows out of a system of economics utterly lacking in social outlook and utterly oblivious of human rights. I have hated it progressively with my advancing years." (He is 76 years of age.)

And the old veteran drops this verbal bomb into the camp of the wage slashers:

"Much of our financial and industrial trouble today results from clinging to a system of political economy which defines itself as being the 'science of wealth.' Its wage theory is that labor is a commodity to be secured at the lowest possible price.

"HANGOVER FROM SIMPLE ERA

"Its dictum of 'natural wages' is the lowest amount upon which a worker can live and reproduce another worker to take his place when his life ends or his working power is exhausted.

"Our present thought on this whole subject of the cost of living in its relation to wages is a hangover from a day when economics was concerned with producing enough for the people's sustenance and not to this period when the problem is how to distribute the enormous surplus.

"It is the 'Breeders' Gazette' theory of labor, and until it is abandoned there can be no adjustment of our social life with our enormous powers to produce in a machine age.

"If there be a possible standard of living, the workers of the United States have not reached it yet."

THE OIL SITUATION—ARTICLE BY SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article appearing in yesterday's New York Times. The article is entitled "The Crisis in Oil—A Huge National Problem", and was written by the Secretary of the Interior. Following this I ask to have printed in the RECORD three pages from the Federal Oil Conservation Board report which I have indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article and excerpts from the report are as follows:

[From the New York Times, Sunday, June 11, 1933]

THE CRISIS IN OIL—A HUGE NATIONAL PROBLEM

By Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior

With respect to oil we are writing the most amazing chapter in the history of our dealings with our natural resources. We have laid waste our forests, leaving slashings exposed to fire hazards with resultant wanton destruction, not only of potential future forests but of soil fertility. Soil erosion has followed as a natural sequence and raging floods in their turn have periodically drowned out fertile farms and taken heavy toll of animal and human life.

Uncontrolled grazing on the public domain is destroying the forage necessary for the herds that we need to furnish us with meat and wool and hides. We have given away precious land by the millions of acres. We have alienated valuable water-power sites, flung to the greedy exploiter mineral resources of untold value, and allowed our water fronts to be stolen.

IRREPLACEABLE RESOURCES

But, compared with oil, we have been as frugal as a Scotchman in our management of our other natural resources. After all, we can replant our devastated forests. We can prevent further soil erosion and mitigate floods by protecting our watersheds as nature did originally. But we cannot replenish a depleted oil pool. We cannot recapture out of the air the billions of feet of natural gas which we have allowed to escape. Once gone these natural resources are irreplaceable, and for the oil there is no known substitute.

If an individual should squander his property as the Nation is squandering its oil resources, the courts would appoint a conservator to manage his affairs. He might even be adjudged an insane person. There can be little doubt what the finding of posterity will be when it reads the record we have written on oil. Unless we put a stop to this wanton waste, this profligate dissipation of an indispensable natural resource, our children will feel for us the pitying contempt that we will so richly have earned.

A NECESSITY FOR THE NATION

For our children cannot live without oil any more than we can. Nor can our country defend itself against an enemy without oil. If we continue to exploit our oil at the present rate, those who follow us will either have to go without a domestic supply altogether or pay so much for it as seriously to curtail its use. Such a result might well have an adverse effect upon our civilization and gravely weaken our defensive ability in time of war.

The huge oil industry of the greatest oil-producing country of the world is being brought to its knees. Unscientific exploitation, overproduction, oversupply in storage above the ground, reckless and improvident methods of capture, ruthless dissipation of the natural gas occurring with oil, and just human greed are to blame. So great is the production of oil that it has entered into keen competition with coal. The result is that about half of our oil production is today displacing the equally effective use of coal, the supply of which is virtually inexhaustible. Unless this waste is checked, this most valuable and necessary natural resource upon which our national defense and general welfare so vitally depend must inevitably soon reach practical exhaustion.

EXTRAVAGANT METHODS USED

Methods of capturing oil at the surface still in use are extravagant and enormously wasteful. To quote from the New Republic for June 7:

"The chaos of the oil industry has long been recognized, and especially the effect of this chaos in waste, both of natural and other economic resources. As J. Howard Marshall and Norman L. Meyers wrote in the Yale Law Journal of November 1931 (Legal Planning of Petroleum Production):

"'In the ill-planned production of the competitive system as much as 80 and 90 percent of the oil is lost and abandoned in the sands, natural gas is blown into the air, and the function of gas energy disregarded in the mad scramble for "more oil now." * * * In Texas two wells on the top of a dome were allowed to blow dry gas in the hope that oil would eventually be drawn up. After blowing for 34 and 18 days, respectively, and expending approximately 250,000,000 cubic feet, oil appeared; one well yielded 10 barrels a day, the other 26. Recently at Kettleman Hills in California a billion cubic feet of gas a day, enough to supply the industrial needs of San Francisco and the whole northern part of the State, has been allowed to escape into the air.'"

Pools of oil, of course, occur in large subterranean units; at the top there is likely to be free gas; in the oil saturating the sands below there is gas in solution; around and under the oil there is water. If the pool were properly tapped according to engineering principles, with the right number of wells strategically placed, the pressures of gas and water would be utilized to the utmost to facilitate a natural flow, and thus to extract most of the oil and eliminate the expense of pumping, and the gas would be saved.

In addition, there would not be incurred the considerable cost of drilling and maintaining superfluous wells or building storage facilities above ground—storage facilities which in turn incur losses through evaporation and occasional burning. A properly engineered oil pool would supply the demand almost as simply and economically as turning on and off a water tap in a city water system.

FAILURE TO ENFORCE STATUTES

The oil-producing States have undertaken conservation programs, but failure or inability to enforce State statutes, widespread evasion of both State and Federal taxes, and illegal production and distribution of excess oil and its derivatives have tended to break these down. The public is vitally concerned in bringing production of crude oil into balance with the demand for petroleum derivatives. Once this is attained, all concerned will be protected—royalty owners, landowners, the consuming public, and the marketing and manufacturing agencies.

A minority in the industry has thus far nullified voluntary cooperation or the carrying-out of State conservation plans by clandestinely purchasing and transporting oil illegally produced. This means that crude oil in excess of demand is being dumped on the market in unknown quantities but variously estimated at from 250,000 to 500,000 barrels a day. This oil pays no tax to the State or Federal Government.

These lawless interests are diminishing State and Federal taxes, evading royalties due, and threatening owners and operators of more than 300,000 oil wells with the possibility of having to abandon their wells, as the price in many areas has been driven below the cost of production. In brief, these refiners and marketers are undermining the capital structure of the whole industry as a result of their unfair practices.

A CHANGED INDUSTRY

The oil industry, as we know it today, is different from the oil industry of tradition and legend. In its modern phase, it may almost be said to date from the beginning of the second decade of this century. It is a long step from the small beginning of "mineral oil" production in western Pennsylvania to the far-flung oil empire of today.

The modern oil cycle began with the rise of the automotive industry, with its dependence on gasoline. The oil industry has been one of the most highly organized in our time. Conditions peculiar to it have made it unavoidably speculative. The difficulties of locating and recovering oil from the ground, the uncertainties of the results for drilling, and the possibility of rich rewards have been incentives to the venturesome who are willing to take the chances involved.

Today this is the second industry in the country. Its manufacturing methods have constantly improved and are generally efficient, although there are still admitted wastes. Its growth has been phenomenal, keeping step with the rapidly increasing demand of the ever-multiplying millions of motor vehicles. The number of petroleum products has been increased far beyond the realization of most people, and the processes by which these have been recovered from crude oil have been constantly improved. The cracking process for converting heavier elements into more volatile ones is the best known of the many of these improvements.

The most important modern product of the industry is gasoline, displacing kerosene, which in the earlier period represented the largest value in crude oil. Today gasoline can be bought almost anywhere on any busy highway in the world. The distributing system has been developed to an extent and with a rapidity that stand out as one of the astonishing achievements of modern business. It may even be doubted whether the distributing system has not overrun its legitimate possibilities. In the country's foreign trade petroleum products have come to rank among our foremost contributions to the commerce of the world.

The country's oil supply comes from something like 400,000 wells, the great majority of them producing from a fraction of a barrel to a few barrels daily. These are scattered through nearly half of the States of the Union. We hear little of most of these wells because they are not spectacular; we hear much of gushing wells and flush fields. These latter are responsible for the trouble at the production end of the industry. Yet if new fields were not discovered and brought into production from time to time, the industry could not keep up with demands. The trouble is not with newly discovered fields but with uncontrolled production.

CYCLES OF PRODUCTION

From its beginning in 1857 the oil industry has been a series of cycles—excess of production from new fields followed by periods of threatened scarcity and serious concern about future supplies. Within a decade the industry has seen itself in one of these periods of seriously threatened shortage of supply. Today it is literally swamped by the excess of its liquid wealth. We may be quite sure that, as oil is a resource which does not reproduce itself, we shall again swing to the lower arc of the cycle. But for the present our problem is one of coping with an overproduction which is more serious than perhaps ever before since the beginning of the industry, when Colonel Drake first pioneered for oil in Pennsylvania.

Enormous quantities of excess production have gone into tank storage, which is both expensive and wasteful. It is said by experts that the wells now producing and being drilled in the east Texas fields alone could, if allowed to flow at their full capacity, supply the entire national demand for an indefinite period. A reasonable price for crude oil, as well as a reasonable price for its products, is manifestly necessary for the health and solvency of the industry and the prosperity and well-being of the country.

The natural, logical, and economic storage for oil is in the ground, where nature put it. If we could be sure that just enough would be found and brought up each year to meet requirements, conditions would be ideal. Experience has demonstrated that under a regime of unrestricted competition in production no such balance of supply and demand can be even approximated. Some effective measure of public control must be introduced for the sake of both the industry and the public interest.

In recent years the chief oil-producing States have made some progress toward rationalizing, conserving, and stabilizing production. In this they have had the cooperation of by far the greater part of the industry. Their experience, their failures, as well as their partial successes, have provided the way, I believe, for a possible cooperation between the interested States, the Nation, and industrial groups by which the industry may be well served and the community's concern for the future reassured.

FEDERAL LEGISLATION NEEDED

Federal legislation of some sort is necessary and, in my opinion, will sooner or later be enacted. It should be written in broad and liberal terms, trusting much to the discretion of administrators, but it stands to reason that the greater the necessity for the legislation the more drastic it will be. Real statesmanship calls for legislation now, and the oil industry would be serving its own best good by cooperating to obtain such legislation.

We must not impose conditions that would discourage the exploration of new fields, for only by discovering new sources can we be assured of an adequate domestic supply. But, on the other hand, we cannot afford to allow the industry to swamp itself. The results of any prolonged overproduction would be to destroy the value of hundreds of thousands of small producing wells which are the only source of income to thousands of royalty owners.

COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Representatives of the governors of the principal oil-producing States met at Washington at my invitation on March 27. At the same time representatives of the industry itself, including independents as well as the major companies, came together. There resulted, after a series of conferences, recommendations submitted by a Committee of Fifteen representing all interests, together with a report by a group known as the Independent Petroleum Association Opposed to Monopoly.

The Committee of Fifteen made several recommendations which the Federal Government felt it could not wisely undertake, but which seemed rather to call for action by the oil-producing States, provided they could and would act. Therefore, the President, on April 3, transmitted the findings to the Governors of the oil-producing States and recommended that the States take necessary and appropriate action. At that time the President endorsed the suggestion of the Committee of Fifteen and the Independent Petroleum Association that Federal legislation be enacted barring from transportation in interstate and foreign commerce oil or its products produced in violation of the laws of the State of its origin.

More than 10 weeks have elapsed since this oil conference; and instead of action to correct the abuses complained of, the industry has gone from bad to worse. Oil has sold as low as 4 cents a barrel in Texas, and the posted price today is still so low that the producer can expect nothing but a heavy loss. Oil has been selling in Oklahoma and Texas at 25 cents a barrel, and it is fair to say that in every oil field in the country it is selling well below the cost of production.

THE HELPLESS STATES

As a result there is fear in the oil fields of an utter collapse of this basic, essential industry. The States have frankly confessed they cannot cope with the situation. "Gentlemen's agreements" have failed. State commissions have clashed with courts, courts have enjoined orders of State commissions, and legislatures have adopted resolutions on both sides of the question. Finally the Governors of the principal oil-producing States have thrown up their hands and asked the Federal Government to step in and save the industry.

If oil were not an irreplaceable natural resource essential to the very life and well-being of our country, we could sit by with folded hands and complacently watch the producers kill themselves off if they lacked the will or the enterprise to remedy their own situation. But we cannot. The Federal Government has a paramount interest in oil. We cannot permit men, even though they invoke the theory of the sanctity of private property, to allow to flow into the gutter what may prove to be the very lifeblood of the Nation.

DANGER IN UNCONTROLLED INDUSTRY

The situation is this: An industry unregulated, lacking self-control, and free of adequate State restraint can do irreparable damage to our economic situation. Collapse of the oil industry would mean a terrific strain on banks, the closing of wells, the shutting up of refineries, and the throwing out of employment of many thousands of men now at work. Such a collapse would not be felt alone in such States as Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas, and California, which are large producers of oil. It would have serious repercussions in every part of the country.

The Governors of the States of Pennsylvania, Kentucky, Kansas, Oklahoma, and Texas have pleaded for Federal assistance in helping the oil industry to right itself. President Roosevelt has definitely recommended legislation in line with the wishes of the Governors. That the Congress will pass sooner or later such legislation as is asked for there can be do doubt. Let us hope that such legislation will be enacted before further damage is done to the economic structure of the country.

APRIL 8, 1925.

Subject: Conservation of helium gas.

Dr. GEORGE OTIS SMITH,
United States Geological Survey,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR DR. SMITH: I do not know whether or not I have ever discussed with you anything more than the incidental conservation of gas under the plan I have recommended to you for the conservation of oil.

I have a partially developed program, but as you can imagine, I get but little time for work of this character after meeting the demands made upon my time in connection with my business. Up to date, most of my time and all of my research work have been devoted solely to oil conservation.

My attention has just been called to a bill introduced by Senator Wadsworth for the "Conservation of helium gas." This, of course, is a very important matter as a war measure, but as contrasted with the need of conserving our oil resources it is of minor importance, simply because oil conservation is primary and vital. However, possibly the conservation of helium gas would alone warrant the adoption of the plan I recommend.

I had planned to give special study to this problem and had expected to have had a communication in your hands on this subject prior to this time. Unfortunately, I am weeks behind my schedule. However, in view of the introduction of this bill, I thought it best to write you at this time on the problem of gas conservation, including helium gas.

I will touch on some facts in connection with oil production in this letter, which you and your experts know as much or more about than I do, because I am going to ask you to communicate with those interested in helium conservation, and to save your time I am trying to write this letter so you can use it if you wish, rather than to prepare a new communication.

Under our present system of oil production practically all the gas leaks into the upper sands or is wastefully blown to the air. The great bulk of this gas is never measured, and, in fact, it cannot be measured, and therefore no one knows accurately what it amounts to. It will undoubtedly be contended by some of the oil men who will appear before your Commission that this waste of gas amounts to no more or even less than 1,500 cubic feet per barrel of oil.

In my opinion, it amounts to far more than the biggest estimates heretofore placed on it. The underground waste alone is a large amount. Recently at Cromwell our men estimated the waste of gas at from 500,000,000 to 700,000,000 cubic feet a day, and other competent authorities estimated it to be as much as 1,200,000,000 cubic feet a day. The latter quantity in energy value would be equivalent to 48,000 tons of coal a day, or 200,000 barrels of oil a day.

I think up to date I have only discussed with you the incidental advantage of conserving this gas as a means of increasing oil production. Of course, I have in mind the conservation of this gas for its own value as well. I am not yet prepared to say what all can be done under a rational system of operation. Even if this loss is only 1,500 cubic feet per barrel of oil produced, it would amount to an energy value equal to 25 percent of the gross production of oil. The plan under which we now operate makes it impossible to save this gas. Under the plan I recommend it can practically all be saved.

Every gas and oil pool, if properly developed, becomes a gas-tight reservoir for the storage of gas. This is of vast importance from an economic standpoint. Gas or oil pools found near the cities supplied with natural gas, after once being emptied of their original contents, can be used to store natural gas during the summer months for use during the winter months. For instance, there are large areas of natural gas in the panhandle of Texas, also large areas in Louisiana. If I could create some gas-tight reservoirs in the neighborhood of Kansas City and the other cities supplied by the Kansas Natural Gas Co. in Kansas and Missouri, then a pipe line to these distant fields could be operated at maximum capacity both in the summer and the winter, and the excess gas transported in the summer could be stored during the summer to take care of the excess demands in the winter.

These reservoirs are, of course, absolutely gas-tight before we drill into them, and if we do not have to drill in a frenzy of haste they can be drained of their oil and gas and remain absolutely gas-tight. In fact, one exhausted gas pool near Buffalo is so used and is said to be absolutely gas-tight.

Now, getting down to helium, our only supply, so far as I know, is in association with natural gas. While I know of no gas found in direct association with oil that contains recoverable amounts of helium, nevertheless there is no known reason why we should not find helium in the gas associated with oil. Even the dry gas in the upper sands containing the helium cannot be conserved under our present system, but can be conserved, no matter under what conditions it is found, under the system I recommend.

My present thought is to create some tight ground reservoirs for the storage of helium. To then set up plants in connection with one or all of our sources of helium-contained gases for concentrating the helium. We will then store this concentrated gas in our gas-tight reservoirs. When I say "concentrate" I mean to remove by refrigeration and condensation, or by other means, everything but the hydrogen and helium. There are no gases that do not condense way above the temperature of these two gases.

It would be uneconomical to attempt to produce a pure helium gas and to store it in exhausted oil and gas pools, for it would be contaminated by the oil vapors and gases remaining in the sands and it would have to be repurified before it could be used.

If my gas-tight reservoirs are near my gas pools which carry helium gas, then I will carry the helium gas to these reservoirs by pipe lines. If the distance is long I would propose carrying my gas by means of airships. The ship could carry the concentrated helium gas to the gas-tight reservoir with a heavy ballast, and after discharging a portion of its gas and all the excess ballast it could return and repeat the trip, or another plant could be installed at the gas-tight reservoir for the production of hydrogen, and the airship could return with pure hydrogen in place of the combination of hydrogen and helium. In this way huge quantities of helium could be accumulated against our war needs. I am assuring that gas carrying inflammable quantities of hydrogen can safely be transported in this way and under peace conditions, or that even straight hydrogen can be used. Hydrogen can easily be secured in the gas fields by cracking CH_4 down to lampblack and hydrogen. I have made a relatively pure hydrogen in this way, and by that I mean a gas of sufficient purity to have a greater buoyancy than helium.

Now, I am ashamed to send you this communication, knowing how little work I have been able to do on the problem. My plans may seem very amateurish to those who have given our helium problems much study. However, I felt that those interested in the conservation of our helium should be advised that conservation of helium can be practiced under the plan I recommend for the production of oil and gas and can, in my opinion, be practiced in no other way. I do not know whether those interested in the conservation of helium know what bearing the Oil Commission has on their problem. They should have time to study the problem and then to lay their recommendations before the Oil Conservation Commission. Should we discover natural gas associated with oil or overlying an oil deposit that contained a helium content beyond our present most optimistic dream, we could neither collect any considerable portion of it nor store what was collected under our present system of operation.

At the present time we are wasting or using for fuel purposes large deposits of natural gas containing helium, and while we all expect to find new deposits of natural gas containing helium, there is no certainty that we will do so.

In event you do not wish to prepare your own communication on this subject, I am enclosing you four additional copies of this letter, with the request that you send them to the four men most interested in our helium conservation, giving your endorsement to such portions of the representations as you can that I have made in the above letter.

Yours cordially,

(Signed) HENRY L. DOHERTY.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5495) to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Great Lakes Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.", approved June 25, 1930, and to extend the times for commencing and completing construction of said bridge.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1513. An act to amend Public Act No. 435 of the Seventy-second Congress, relating to sales of timber on Indian land;

S. 1634. An act to provide for the redemption of national-bank notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and Federal Reserve notes which cannot be identified as to the bank of issue;

H.R. 5495. An act to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Great Lakes Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.", approved June 25, 1930, and to extend the times for commencing and completing construction of said bridge; and

H.R. 5645. An act to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

On June 10, 1933:

S. 804. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to grant a right of way to The Dalles Bridge Co.;

S. 1536. An act giving credit for water charges paid on damaged land;

S. 1745. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Umpqua River at or near Reedsport, Douglas County, Oreg.;

S. 1746. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Yaquina Bay at or near Newport, Lincoln County, Oreg.;

S. 1747. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Alsea Bay at or near Waldport, Lincoln County, Oreg.;

S. 1748. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across Coos Bay at or near North Bend, Coos County, Oreg.;

S. 1749. An act granting the consent of Congress to the State of Oregon to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Siuslaw River at or near Florence, Lane County, Oreg.;

S. 1783. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Overseas Road and Toll Bridge District, a political subdivision of the State of Florida, to construct, maintain, and operate bridges across the navigable waters in Monroe County, Fla., from Lower Matecumbe Key to No Name Key; and

S. 1808. An act to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary in 1936 of the independence of Texas, and of the noble and heroic sacrifices of her pioneers, whose revered memory has been an inspiration to her sons and daughters during the past century.

On June 12, 1933:

S. 1513. An act to amend Public Act No. 435 of the Seventy-second Congress, relating to sales of timber on Indian land; and

S. 1634. An act to provide for the redemption of national-bank notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and Federal Reserve notes which cannot be identified as to the bank of issue.

RELIEF OF MUNICIPAL DEBTORS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] a question, if I may, in his capacity as the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

There are a great many of the larger municipalities of the country which would deem it absolutely a calamity if the present session of Congress were to adjourn without the passage of House bill 5950, which is now in the Senate Judiciary Committee, and which authorizes a national formula for the composition of municipal debts. I wish to ask the Senator from Arizona whether there is any reasonable prospect of a report from his committee today in respect to that bill? I am referring to the so-called "Sumners bill."

Mr. ASHURST. Which has passed the other House?

Mr. VANDENBERG. It has passed the other House, and deals with the composition of municipal debts, and now impends in the Senate Judiciary Committee over which the Senator from Arizona so ably presides as chairman.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the able Senator from Michigan, I wish to say: That bill, which reached the Senate only 3 or 4 days ago, was immediately referred at my request to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, as I realized its importance. Immediately after the reference to the committee had been made I appointed a subcommittee to examine the bill, as it bristled with legal questions. Our Judiciary Committee certainly would not report off-hand a bill of such enormous magnitude without some consideration. The subcommittee is composed of the following Senators: The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], chairman, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT].

I say here, Mr. President, that not within my experience as a Senator has any subcommittee labored more diligently on a bill. Indeed, the subcommittee met the very day the bill reached the committee. They sent for experts from the Treasury Department and have given this bill a close scrutiny, and I could not justly do less than to offer the subcommittee my tribute of respect for the diligence and assiduity with which they have addressed themselves to this bill. It is my opinion, and I much regret to say so, that it will not be within the domain of probability to secure a report on the bill during this day. I am not attempting to speak for the subcommittee; it would not be proper for me to attempt to do so.

I see here before me one of the members of the subcommittee. They are all able lawyers; they would not consider me presumptous in requesting an expression from them, and I should like, therefore, to hear from the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], one of the members of the subcommittee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very happy to yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, the bill as to which the Senator from Michigan has made inquiry of the Senator from Arizona was referred to the subcommittee, as I recall, along about Thursday or Friday of last week. Immediately we held a meeting on it; and the next day another meeting was held, at which the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury came before us, and also a number of others who are interested in the passage of the measure. Correspondence has been received by the chairman of the subcommittee protesting against the passage of the bill. The correspondence, I would say, has not been voluminous, but is in the nature of a few telegrams.

We are trying to make a study of the bill, and we have earnestly tried to arrive at an agreement on it; but I say candidly, from my observation of the attitude of the members of the subcommittee—and I had rather speak for myself individually than for them—that the bill is of such magnitude and of such far-reaching significance that I cannot see a possibility of an intelligent report being made on it within the next 2 or 3 days, assuming that the subcommittee could consider it all the time for 2 days.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Of course, there is nothing in my inquiry which reflects in any degree, intentionally or otherwise, upon the members of the subcommittee. I fully realize that this measure, House bill 5950, did not reach the Senate until the last few days of the session, and that it did not pass the House until June 9, so that none of us are at fault for not sooner presenting the matter in the forum of the Senate.

The fact remains, however, Mr. President, that this bill addresses itself to a critical situation which, in my judgment, we dare not desert in the adjournment program of this session of Congress. Except as orderly municipal financing is provided as contemplated by this legislation, there are many of the large municipalities of this country which will not know where to turn or what to do in respect to their fundamental municipal services. I refer to such essential services as police protection, fire protection, and education. They will not know in what direction to turn in the maintenance of these and other services except as this measure shall become a law, and the insufferable burden of debt service shall be temporarily lightened.

I am speaking, Mr. President, in no mere parochial or localized sense. It is true that Mayor Frank Couzens, of Detroit, in my own home State, is one of the prime petitioners for action before we adjourn; it is equally true that Mayor Curley, of Boston, is a prime petitioner, and it is further true that there are more than 4,000 municipal debtors—I am referring to municipal corporations—in 41 States that are in default at the present time in respect to their municipal obligations, and they uniformly sustain this prayer.

In addition to these 4,000 municipal debtors in 41 cities that are already in default—and I may say that these are not minor municipalities in any sense of the word, for I am referring to such cities as Mobile, Ala., Miami, Fla., Flint, Mich., Pontiac, Mich., Detroit, Mich., Asheville, N.C., Greensboro, N.C., Akron, Ohio, Charleston, S.C., Toledo, Ohio, and so forth—the list will include very shortly such cities as Chicago, and many others.

Now, what is the condition in these cities? I want to read to the Senate a telegram which has just been handed me from Mayor Frank Couzens, of the city of Detroit. I read:

DETROIT, MICH., June 12, 1933.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
Senate Office Building:

I cannot too strongly urge Congress Senate to adopt before adjournment the Sumner bill, H.R. 5950. If this bill is not adopted the city of Detroit, with many other large cities of the United States, will be facing an unavoidable default which would only bring about financial litigation and chaos in the city government. The amount of taxes which it is possible to collect this year will not cover more than the operating expenses of the essential functions of government in our city. This is just as important to the bondholders as it is to the Government and the taxpayers, because without this bill the bondholders cannot, under any stretch of the imagination, receive any money from our Government. Thank you for your fine cooperation with us.

FRANK COUZENS,
Acting Mayor of Detroit.

That condition is now duplicated or will be duplicated between now and the next session of Congress many, many times in the key cities of the United States. That jeopardy will be duplicated in a desperate challenge except as orderly municipal financing is charted under some such rational composition as this bill anticipates.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, some of the members of the subcommittee have come into the Chamber since my reply to the question of the Senator from Michigan. I repeat, that not within my experience has any subcommittee labored more diligently or more faithfully, in view of the fact that the bill bristles with many legal questions.

I want the Senate and the country, and particularly my able friend from Michigan, to know that I stand on no technicalities. My feelings are not easily hurt, and I would not at all consider it a reflection upon the Committee on the Judiciary—and I do not think any other member thereof would consider it so—if the Senate should discharge that committee from the further consideration of the bill.

Many Senators, men of delicate feeling and excellent judgment, seem to consider it a reflection upon them or their committees when someone presses their committees for an early report. I do not view the matter in any such light. The committee is not master of the Senate; the committee is only an agent of the Senate; and whilst I am not trying to induce or solicit any Senator to move to discharge my committee, I want it distinctly understood that I am not so thin-skinned, so tender and so sensitive a hothouse plant as to consider it offensive in any degree if some Senator should move that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill.

I wish again to say, in conclusion, that personally I am impressed with the vast importance of this bill. The telegrams that have come to our committee have been numerous. They have come from all parts of the United States urging the enactment of the proposed legislation. I have replied to the telegrams—sending my replies "collect", because I would decimate, in fact, probably exhaust, the contingent fund of the Senate if I were to reply at Government expense—saying that I had appointed an able subcommittee and that that subcommittee would give its undivided attention to this legislation. Whenever I go to my committee room I find this able subcommittee at work on these bankruptcy bills. That is all I care to say and all I need to say.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is all the Senator need to say. I repeat, there is nothing in my observations, of course, which implies the slightest reflection upon the subcommittee.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator certainly has a right to move to discharge the committee from the further consideration of the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wholly realize the difficulties under which this adventure has proceeded in the Senate. There was no time until almost within the last 48 hours when the issue could be effectually raised. I do intend to pursue the course which the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee is gracious enough to suggest, but I want first to conclude my brief statement so that the Senate will understand the nature of the paramount problems with which we are attempting to deal through this proposed legislation. Mr. President, we are not free agents——

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan, because of the importance of the matter, yield to me to suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Kendrick	Russell
Ashurst	Cutting	King	Schall
Austin	Dale	La Follette	Sheppard
Bachman	Dickinson	Lewis	Shipstead
Bailey	Dieterich	Logan	Smith
Bankhead	Dill	Lonergan	Steiwer
Barbour	Duffy	Long	Stephens
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Fess	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thompson
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Townsend
Bratton	George	McNary	Trammell
Brown	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Bulow	Gore	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrd	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Capper	Hastings	Overton	Walsh
Caraway	Hatfield	Pope	Wheeler
Carey	Hayden	Reed	White
Clark	Hebert	Reynolds
Connally	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.
Copeland	Kean	Robinson, Ind.

Mr. HEBERT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK].

Mr. VANDENBERG. I desire to announce that my colleague the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] is necessarily absent from the Senate in attendance upon the London Economic Conference.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is necessarily detained from the Senate by reason of his attendance as a delegate representing our Government at the London Economic Conference. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

I desire further to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] is necessarily detained from the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, before a quorum was called I was submitting to the Senate the matter of needed action on the so-called "municipal moratorium bill." I shall detain the Senate but a moment before making a motion in connection with it.

We confront a condition and not a theory. There are 4,000 municipalities in default of their municipal obligations now. Many of them are among the largest municipalities in the country. If there is no intervening legislation between now and New Year's, I venture regretfully to prophesy that there will be at least 4,000 more municipalities in default in respect of their municipal obligations before the Congress shall reassemble.

We are not free agents to choose the particular course we may wish to pursue. We can only choose the lesser of evils. None of us would voluntarily embrace a moratorium formally, of any nature. But in the face of this condition, I repeat, as differentiated from a theory, there are only three things that can happen:

First, these municipal defaults can run the legalistic course of ordinary defaults with a threat not only to the credit and essential human services of the municipality, but also with a definite threat to the bondholders themselves in respect to recovery of values they have invested in these securities.

Or, second, these defaults can result in an impulse to turn entirely to the Federal Government and ask for sufficient funds out of the Federal Treasury to finance the municipal deficits of the country. There is a growing school of thought in the country which embraces this second alternative. It was submitted at the White House very recently. The President specifically stated that this second alternative cannot be embraced, and I agree.

That only leaves a third alternative, the alternative of voluntary composition with debtors, the precise theory upon which the Senate already has amended the bankruptcy act in respect to many other types of debtors. The pending bill is an emergency formula which permits 30 percent of the municipal debtors to initiate composition under the auspices of the United States court, and that composition becomes mandatory only when 75 percent of the debtors have acceded to the formula.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I do not know whether the Senator knows it or not, but I let him take the floor away from me, so I want to interrupt him just long enough to make a little statement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I hope the Senator will not be long.

Mr. LONG. Only a minute. It is a matter of absolute practical impossibility to get the bill through the committee. I am a member of the committee.

I want to say further to the Senator that there is another suggestion here, I think in the form of an amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], to finance municipalities through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the extent of $300,000,000 or $400,000,000. I think the President is making a mistake not to have acceded to that proposition. I think it is going to be disastrous to his administration, in large part, but I see no hope whatever to get the legislation through. I think we had better call it a day.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I decline to call it a day until I have made the final effort which I am to make as soon as I have concluded a brief statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I hope before the able Senator concludes he will yield to me for a moment, because the motion might not be debatable, and I owe it to candor to say a word on the subject.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I shall be very glad to yield before I make the motion, but I prefer to continue now myself.

In the face of this reality—and I repeat that it is a condition and not a theory—the problem for the Senate to determine is the best course in respect, first, to the public welfare; and, second, in respect to the inherent values of these municipal securities in the hands of the bondholders themselves. What course is the best for both these interests and factors?

I submit that from the public viewpoint the pending so-called "Sumners bill", H.R. 5950, which has passed the House of Representatives and comes to us with a presumption of utility because of the fact that it has passed the House, should receive serious consideration.

Secondly, the bill has the unqualified approval of the Treasury Department and the Department of Justice, as I understand the situation. Therefore, in respect to public authority, the pending measure has all the credentials that anyone could hope to bring to the support of a proposition of this nature.

Furthermore, I may say parenthetically that a municipal moratorium bill far more controversial and objectionable in many of its features was introduced in the last session of the Congress and was reported out in 48 hours by the Senate Judiciary Committee, a bill which bore the name of the then chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS].

So that we have behind this bill, first, the action of the House of Representatives; second, the approval of the Treasury Department; third, the approval of the Department of Justice; and, fourth, the fact that this same Judiciary Committee of the Senate did favorably report a less uniformly approved measure from the standpoint of its critics within the last 3 or 4 months.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. VANDENBERG. In just a moment. Let me continue my line of thought for a moment, and then I shall be glad to yield.

So much for the answer to the question as to what is best from a public-policy standpoint.

What is best, now, from the standpoint of the bondholders themselves? Is it best for the bondholders who find their municipal securities in default to be left at the general mercy of the usual chaotic default situation, with volunteer bondholders' committees, and infinite litigation of one sort and another? Is that the best thing for them; or is it best for them to have an emergency 2-year formula available under which all of their rights can be composed and protected in an orderly way and they can be sure that every bondholder has precisely the same common treatment?

I submit that the best proof of the fact that the pending measure can be answered affirmatively in behalf of the interest of the bondholder is the fact that the large insurance interests of the country—and certainly they represent the largest possible municipal-bond-holding class in the country—have signified their willingness to accept House bill 5950.

So we confront the proposition that simply through lack of time for the Senate subcommittee to complete investigations, which I earnestly wish they could have had time to pursue, simply because of the pressure of time, we are threatened with an adjournment without conclusive Senate action upon this measure, which has all of these moving, affirmative, compelling impulses behind it.

Mr. FLETCHER and Mr. McCARRAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield first to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator that this is no new proposition, either.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. FLETCHER. It has been pending before. I offered an amendment to the bankruptcy bill in the last session of the Congress. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS] was chairman of the subcommittee. I endeavored to arrange for a hearing; but such pressure was brought to bear to get through the bankruptcy bill that the committee felt it wise to lay this amendment to one side, and so they did not report upon it. It has been pending, however. It has been discussed. It is important.

At the beginning of this session I introduced a similar bill. My associate and colleague in a way, Mr. WILCOX, of Florida, introduced a similar bill in the House. The bill has been pending before the Judiciary Committee ever since the beginning of this extra session, and has been pending in the House. I advised that they go on with the hearings before the House committee, because no matter what we did here it might not be approved in the House, and I felt that they ought to go on with the investigation. Extensive hearings on this subject were conducted in the House. The Department of Justice was consulted, and all the other departments, as the Senator has said. Finally the House committee reported out this bill, which passed the House, and has the approval of the various agencies and forces which the Senator has so well mentioned.

I am in favor of the Senator's motion to discharge the committee and act on the House bill. I think we ought to take up the House bill and act on it now. I believe we can pass the House bill, and that, if we do, a great thing will be accomplished for the benefit of the municipalities throughout the country.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his statement.

I yield now to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], who is a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I desire to address a question or two to the Senator from Michigan.

Under the Senator's understanding, is there anything in law or necessity right now that requires an immediate adjournment of this body?

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is not that I know anything about, and I am opposed to any such surrender until we have done the things we think we ought to do.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. Then why should a regular committee of this body, one of its standing committees, be forced to rubber-stamp a bill on which there is a divided opinion, simply because somebody wants to adjourn this body now?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am proceeding on the well-known theory that it is the majority intention, if possible, to adjourn the body very shortly, tonight or tomorrow night. In the face of that well-known purpose, because of my belief that it will be an absolutely fundamental calamity if we adjourn without attending to these municipal debts, I have no alternative except to use such means as I can find and embrace to precipitate the issue.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the junior Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if it does not seem that the interests generally that would be concerned in regard to a law of this character seem rather uniformly to favor legislation on it at this time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that is entirely true.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That is my observation from the correspondence which I have had. I fully agree with the Senator. I spoke last Friday night on behalf of this legislation being very essential, and that was one of the reasons why I urged that we should not adjourn on Saturday night.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President——

Mr. TRAMMELL. I want to add this statement:

I have the pleasure of being situated here close to the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for whom I have a very high regard. I know that he has been pushing this matter with every possible expedition, and I am sure the subcommittee has. In view of the fact that there is going to be an effort to adjourn, probably tomorrow or the next day, with the possibility of a majority favoring that, no one now, in calling up this bill, means any reflection whatever upon the esteemed and able Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, nor on the members of the subcommittee. When I vote along the line suggested by the Senator's motion, I want it understood as being no reflection whatever upon the committee or the subcommittee, but merely a matter of meeting an emergency.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to reclaim the floor again just long enough to say that I entirely concur in the observations just submitted, and further to testify that so far as I am concerned I could not have had more complete cooperation in the effort to consider this bill in the Judiciary Committee than I have had, not only from the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the chairman of the committee, but also the able Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the chairman of the subcommittee, and all the members of the subcommittee. We simply confront the cold fact that there is not time to pursue the normal routine.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me, not only for a question, but for a short statement?

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I do not lose the floor; because I must keep the floor for the purpose of making my motion.

Mr. ASHURST. Just for a short statement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I do not wish to make the point of order, but there is nothing before the Senate, and I think the Senate should proceed in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from the consideration of House bill 5950; and, if it is in order, I make the parliamentary inquiry whether in the same motion I may ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT.. It is not in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then I move that the Senate Judiciary Committee be discharged from the consideration of the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Just a moment on that motion, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, there is no question about the importance of the measure to which the Senator from Michigan has referred. It is apparent, however, that some of those who have been complaining about the administration railroading legislation through the Senate are now resorting to efforts to force premature action on this measure, of which the Senate knows very little.

I have had perhaps 15 long-distance telephone calls this morning asking if this measure cannot be passed immediately, stating that no one desires to delay the adjournment of the Congress. It is apparent, further, that some of the ablest Members of the Senate have been devoting all of their time to a study of the bill ever since it was received by this body.

Usually, when a motion is made to discharge a committee, it reflects the attitude of the mover and of those who support it as in opposition to the committee. If the subcommittee has been diligent, if in the conscientious performance of its duty it has been studying the measure almost constantly since it was received, then the Senate ought not to discharge the committee; and, if it does so, we shall be compelled to undertake to write the legislation on the floor of the Senate.

We have been in the habit of imposing on the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the obligation to finance many things—almost everything—but we have not entered very far into the sphere of financing State governments and their local subdivisions. This is one of the biggest movements ever undertaken permitting the Federal Government to finance the local governments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think the Senator mistakes the nature of the legislation. Nothing of that sort is involved in the legislation. Its purpose is precisely opposite—to permit a composition of municipal debts without any reference to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well. I think perhaps I did overstate the terms of the legislation; but here is the proposal that addresses itself with force to my mind:

If the Federal Government is going to undertake the supervision of the financial condition of the States and of the municipalities, if it does so, will it not inevitably result that we shall be asked to put behind these local governments the power and resources of the Federal Government to finance them?

I think we have gone a long way in this direction already. It may be necessary, some time in the future, to enact legislation on this subject; but everyone should agree that it should be studied by a committee and that it ought to be worked out carefully. It does not seem to me to be a measure that should be passed hastily, whether it be regarded as primarily a financing measure or merely as supervision of the financing of the local governments.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. It seems to me the question of propriety is involved here, whether Congress ought to pass a law permitting cities to take the bankrupt law, for that is what it amounts to; and if we are going to start out by doing it for cities, whether we ought not to offer the inducement for the States to take the bankrupt law; and then, if that is to be done, why cannot the Federal Government itself take the bankrupt law and discharge all debts?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator is right. Now, I go back to my original proposition. It was not so far wrong at first. If we put the Federal Government behind a system of bankruptcy for the local divisions of the State governments, will it not inevitably follow that whatever compositions are made and are regarded as beneficial to the local governments, that cannot be financed by them, will be brought back for the assistance of the Federal Government? Uncle Sam cannot go on financing everybody, with nobody financing Uncle Sam!

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there further?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course the suggestion as to the result, the ultimate goal, it seems to me is inevitable. Those who hold obligations against cities are not going to be willing to compose them unless they are able to receive a cash sum. Those cities have not the money, and they will be coming to Washington and asking the Government of the United States to loan it to them.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Or to guarantee the loan.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or to guarantee their obligations, which means that the Government of the United States is to step in and take charge of municipalities all over this country.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. If I may volunteer a suggestion, all of the debate I have heard on this matter has considered only the outstanding and existing municipal debts. It seems to me that the strongest reason against the passage of this bill, and against the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] lies in the destructive effect upon the credit of these municipalities in all that they have to do in the future. If we desire completely to destroy the credit and borrowing power of the municipalities of America, this is the way to do it, because no man would lend to them with the understanding that on a plea of embarrassment they could come in and in effect repudiate part or all of the obligation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. While the Senator is speaking of the credit of the municipalities, may I ask him what effect he thinks it would have on the credit of the Government itself——

Mr. REED. A very bad effect.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. To provide a system of bankruptcy for Government agencies and divisions which are in no wise related to the Federal Government?

I think this subject is a very large one, and I request Senators not to embark upon so broad an enterprise in the closing hours of this session.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, some opportunity should be extended to the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. VAN NUYS] to say a word before the vote is taken.

It will be remembered that this proposed legislation came to the Senate late last week. Within half an hour after the bill reached the Senate I asked that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. And within another half an hour I, as the chairman of that committee, appointed a subcommittee to consider the bill. That subcommittee is composed of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], chairman; the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN]; the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY]; the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS]; and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]. Not heretofore within my experience here has any subcommittee addressed a subject with more assiduity and more diligence than has this subcommittee performed its task. Telegrams from all over the country have come to the committee urging the passage of this bill, and some telegrams and letters in opposition to the bill have arrived.

I am sure that no member of the Judiciary Committee would feel himself aggrieved, affronted, or insulted if the Senate, as it has the right to do, should reclaim its original jurisdiction on this bill. We of the Judiciary Committee are not so thin-skinned and tender as to see any reflection upon us in the motion to discharge the committee and thus return the bill to the Senate for consideration.

If the Senate should recall this bill from the committee, neither the Senate nor the country should construe such action to mean that the subcommittee has been lacking in diligence, because I am here to pay my tribute to the members of that subcommittee for their diligence and for the assiduity with which they addressed themselves to this task.

I call upon the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], to bear me out as to the diligence of the subcommittee in the consideration of this subject. That is all I have to say.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I want to add but a word to what the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] has said.

I think I speak the sentiments of the subcommittee in saying that we have no disposition in the world to obstruct or delay this important legislation. We have spent hours and days in the consideration of the different bills relating to the subject. Just to show that there is a controversial subject here, I will say to the Senator from Michigan that I received two telegrams this morning from two of the largest insurance companies in the State of Indiana, one of them investing 70 percent of its assets in municipal bonds, and they say that, in their opinion, the enactment of the proposed legislation would be suicidal, and they ask for an opportunity to be heard.

I also have a similar telegram from the National Insurance Co. of the Knights of Pythias Order, extending throughout the length and breadth of the Union, who say their funds, trust funds for widows and orphans, are invested in municipal bonds, and they object strenuously to the enactment of the proposed legislation. I say this only for the purpose of proving that this is a highly controversial subject.

As far as I am concerned personally—and I think I speak the sentiment of every member of the subcommittee—if the Senate wants to take the responsibility of rubber-stamping these bills, we will be very glad that they assume jurisdiction and proceed. I shall not vote on this pending motion, because I am wholly disinterested, but I hope the subject will be given that consideration which it deserves.

Mr. BYRNES. I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] on the table.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will not the Senator withhold his motion a moment? I want to ask him a question.

Mr. BYRNES. I withhold the motion.

Mr. REED. As things now stand, I expect to vote as emphatically as I can against the motion of the Senator from Michigan; but there has been no disposition to filibuster, and I do not like motions to table, because they are practically gag motions. I shall be compelled to vote against the motion to table, although I am not at all in sympathy with the motion to discharge the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

The motion was rejected.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—FURTHER CONFERENCE

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments numbered 1 to 46, inclusive, and numbered 48, to the bill H.R. 5389, the independent offices appropriation bill, agree to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on all amendments in disagreement.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. Presiden, I should like to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina. There was some confusion in the Chamber, but as I heard the motion the Senator just made, it was that we agree to the request for a conference with respect to all questions save amendment numbered 47 as the bill passed the Senate. Am I right in that?

Mr. BYRNES. The motion was, in addition, that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, in which the Senator was interested, and that we ask for a conference with the House on that amendment. As no conference was asked of the Senate in the preliminary stage, it is necessary for us to ask for a conference. That is the only reason for the difference in the language.

Mr. STEIWER. The result would then be——

Mr. BYRNES. To put the whole matter in conference.

Mr. STEIWER. If the Senator's motion is agreed to, and if the House agrees to the request for a conference, the whole proposition will be thrown into conference?

Mr. BYRNES. Exactly.

Mr. STEIWER. And that it would then come back to the Senate finally in a conference report?

Mr. BYRNES. Absolutely.

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the motion made by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES]. I intend at this time, however, to discuss the compromise amendment entered into by the House.

When the proper time comes, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and I intend to make a motion instructing the Senate conferees to insist on an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment adopted by the House. I desire at this time to explain the very material differences between the amendment adopted by the House and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon and myself.

Let me remind the Senate, first, that there are three classes of cases with which we are dealing. There are, first, the Spanish-American War veterans. As to them, there is no question that they are entirely left out of the House compromise. The only guaranty concerning the Spanish-American War veterans is contained in a letter from the President to the chairman of the special Democratic Caucus Veterans' Committee of the House of Representatives in which the President says:

> If the Congress sees fit to substitute the language attached hereto in lieu of the Connally amendment, I will issue a regulation which will give some assistance to those Spanish-American War veterans who are 55 years of age or more who are substantially disabled and who are in need.

I think it requires little argument to show that that means little or nothing.

When the Economy Act was originally passed, we were assured that justice and sympathy would be meted out to all who served their country. Several times during the last few weeks we have been assured that the Spanish-American War veterans who were unable, for obvious reasons, to prove service connection of their disabilities, would be treated in a generous spirit. Nothing is now promised except that a regulation will be issued which will give "some assistance." That is what Congress is asked to accept as a guaranty in behalf of the veterans of the Spanish-American War over 55 years of age—"some assistance."

There is a second class of veterans, called "combat-connected cases." As to those veterans, we have had a number of assurances on the floor of the Senate. In March, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] offered an amendment to the original Economy Act which he guaranteed would take care of all these cases, so that not one of them could be stricken off the rolls. Unfortunately, the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts contained the provision "except as to rates", and on account of the inclusion of those words the law has been construed by the Veterans' Administration and by the Director of the Budget as giving authority to cut down those veterans to less than 10 percent. When they are cut to less than 10 percent, they get no compensation at all, and therefore are actually stricken off the rolls.

On May 30 I offered an amendment to the independent offices bill which would take care of that small class of combat-connected cases by guaranteeing that no man who came in that class, and no dependent or widow of any man in that class who had died, should be cut more than 25 percent in the compensation being paid. The language of that amendment was clear. The amendment was accepted by the leaders of the majority in this Chamber. The Senate, however, voted to take up a stronger amendment which was proposed by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL]. That amendment limited the cut to 15 percent, and included presumption cases.

After a good deal of discussion, and after practical assurance on this floor that the President of the United States would veto a 15-percent limitation, but would not veto a 25-percent limitation, the Senate adopted the so-called "Connally amendment", which provided a 25-percent limitation, and included the veterans of the Spanish-American War as well as the veterans of the World War. The Connally amendment was likewise clear in its language. It limited the authority which the President would have to reduce compensation to 25 percent in the case of this class of veterans.

The assurance was given us by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] that within a few days regulations would be issued by the Executive which would take care of combat-connected cases, whether or not Congress passed a law of that kind. Last week we were furnished with a regulation, and, as I think I demonstrated to this Chamber, it did nothing of the sort. It did not guarantee that any man now on the rolls should remain on the rolls. That Executive regulation contained the word "properly"; it contained the words "on a permanent basis" and it contained references to other sections of the law which completely took away any protection from the veterans whom the President's regulation pretended to protect.

Mr. President, after all that history, we are presented with a compromise in these cases which contains language infinitely less liberal than the language which was contained in the Executive order sent down here last week. The "joker" here, I am sorry to say, is a little less obvious than the "joker" contained in the Executive order issued last week. Instead of providing that the payments being made to any individual service-connected case shall not be cut more than 25 percent, it uses this language:

> In no event shall the rates of compensation payable for directly service-connected disabilities—
> And so on—
> be reduced more than 25 percent.

As anyone who has had any dealings with the Veterans' Administration knows, "the rates of compensation payable" are something altogether different from the compensation being paid. The phrase "rates of compensation payable" refers to a schedule stating that for a certain percentage of disability a certain amount of money shall be paid. Those are "the rates of compensation payable." All that we get in this so-called "compromise" is that those rates shall not be cut down more than 25 percent below the rates "payable" at the present time. An individual veteran may be rated down just as deep as it may be desired to rate him or just as deep as Mr. Douglas wants to rate him or just as deep as the employees of the Veterans' Administration want to rate him. He can be rated down to 10 percent, and then it is provided by this amendment that "the rates of compensation payable" shall not be cut down more than another 25 percent; so that the individual veteran may get 7½ percent instead of 10 percent of what he was getting under the old law.

While I am on this point, I wish to say that that "joker" escaped my attention until late Saturday night, although I had been studying the compromise all day. The amendment offered by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and myself was prepared before we had discovered that "joker" and still contains the same "joker." Therefore, at the time when my motion shall be in order, I shall ask to perfect my amendment in order that it may actually take care of the compensation being paid to individual veterans and have no reference to the rates of compensation whatever.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from New Mexico has no doubt that the Veterans' Administration would interpret the language exactly as he has stated? Experience in the past has indicated that the Bureau always takes the side of the Bureau instead of the side of the veteran?

Mr. CUTTING. That has been my experience, Mr. President.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator's conviction is that the interpretation of the Bureau of the language would be exactly as the Senator has interpreted it here?

Mr. CUTTING. That has been my experience; and I think the Senator from New York has had as much experience as I have had of the manner in which the Bureau interprets language of that kind. If they had not meant to interpret it in that way, why should that language have been put in? Why not use the perfectly direct and clear phrase "compensation being paid"?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I have no doubt that the Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. CUTTING. So, Mr. President, the Spanish-American War veterans get nothing out of this compromise. Furthermore, the directly service-connected cases get nothing out of this compromise; the men who were wounded in action are left to the mercy of the Veterans' Administration just as much as they were 2 weeks ago when we began discussing the whole question of veterans' disability compensation. The only ones who, in my judgment, will obtain some benefit from this compromise are the widows and dependents of deceased World War veterans. The language in their case is pretty clear. It reads:

> And in no event shall death compensation * * * being paid to widows, children, and dependent parents of deceased World War veterans—
> And so forth—
> be reduced or discontinued, whether the death of the veteran on whose account compensation is being paid was directly or presumptively connected with service.

That uses clear language in which I can find no flaw. It would have been perfectly easy to use the same language in regard to the cases of combat-connected disabilities themselves. The fact that that language was used in one case and not in the other demonstrates pretty conclusively that it is not intended through this amendment to give any protection at all to the combat-connected cases.

Now, Mr. President, I come to the third class of disabled veterans with whom we have been dealing, the so-called "presumptive cases"; that is, of men who are now suffering from tuberculosis and other diseases as to which it is impossible for anyone to prove that they came from a particular experience in the service. It is difficult for those who have had no direct experience to realize the misery and anguish which men in this class are undergoing as a direct result, in an enormous majority of cases, of the experiences which they went through at the time of the war. I shall discuss the justice of their cases at greater length later on. At present I merely wish to expound the compromise which the House entered into and which, in my judgment, gives these presumptive cases no protection whatever.

The President is authorized, under the House compromise, "to establish such number of special boards * * * as he may deem necessary to review all claims * * * in which presumptive service-connection has heretofore been granted under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, wherein payments were being made on March 20, 1933, and which are held not service-connected under the regulations issued pursuant to" the Economy Act.

These boards are to have the full power of review up to October 31, 1933. If a board finds that a man is improperly on the rolls, it can remove him from the rolls. If it does not so find, the man remains on the rolls and draws 75 percent of what he drew under the old law until October 31, 1933. On October 31, 1933, not only do the cases which the board has had no time to review go off the rolls but in addition there is no guaranty that the men whom the board found to be properly on the rolls shall not also go off at that date. There is not one particle of protection to a single presumptive case after October 31, 1933, a date at which I wish to point out the Congress will not be in session.

Now, Mr. President, let me go into a little further detail about this extraordinary provision. In the first place, as an apparent concession to the feeling of the country concerning the brutality with which the Veterans' Administration have been construing the Economy Act, it is provided that the majority of the members of such board shall not have been in the employ of the Veterans' Bureau at the date of the enactment of this act. In other words, the majority of these boards may not be present Veterans' Bureau employees. That, it might be thought, would liberalize their decisions; but, Mr. President, if you give the matter any thought, you will realize that the boards established all over the country—and they will have to be established in enormous number, if they expect to complete their labors before October 31, 1933—will not act merely on whim or caprice; that a board in New Mexico will not be able to keep on the rolls men whom a board in Massachusetts would take off.

It is perfectly apparent that even though these men were not employees of the Veterans' Bureau at the date of the passage of the act, they will be in the employ of the Veterans' Bureau during the administration of the act. The compromise itself quite naturally states that "the President shall prescribe such rules governing reviews and hearings as may be deemed advisable." The boards, of course, will follow the instructions laid down by the President, which, in effect, means instructions laid down by the Director of the Budget, Lewis Douglas, whose degree of sympathy for the disabled veterans we can judge by what he has done for them in the past. The fact that a majority of the members of these boards have not been in the past regular employees of the Veterans' Bureau gives us no protection at all.

Now we find an amazing and extraordinary sentence, and I ask any lawyer in this body if he can explain it—

> Such special boards shall determine, on all available evidence, the question whether service connection shall be granted under the provisions of the regulation issued pursuant to Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress—

Then we have in parentheses the following—

> (notwithstanding the evidence may not clearly demonstrate the existence of the disease or any specific clinical finding within the terms of or period prescribed by regulations 1, part 1, subparagraph (c), or instruction no. 2, regulation no. 1, issued under Public Law No. 2, 73d Cong.).

In other words, the boards shall determine the question of service connection "under the provisions" of the Economy Act, but not "within the terms" of the Economy Act. What explanation can be made of this strange sentence I cannot conceive. This compromise proposes to get away from the Economy Act with regard to this class of cases and so provides, within the parentheses; but outside of the parentheses it says the service connection "shall be granted under the provisions of the Economy Act." In other words, the boards shall act under the Economy Act but not within the terms of the Economy Act.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. STEIWER. With respect to the language included within parentheses, can the Senator state whether the provision is predicated upon the regulations that have been issued under the Economy Act? Is the language within the parentheses consistent with the regulations made under the Economy Act?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; the language in parentheses refers to regulation 1, part 1, subparagraph (c) or instruction no. 2, regulation no. 1, issued under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress.

Mr. STEIWER. It refers to that, but does it not then further provide that, regardless of that fact, certain concessions may be made? I have not the language before me and that is why I am asking the Senator the question.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico read again that particular sentence?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly:

> Such special boards shall determine, on all available evidence, the question whether service connection shall be granted under the provisions of the regulations issued pursuant to Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress (notwithstanding the evidence may not clearly demonstrate the existence of the disease or any specific clinical findings within the terms of or period described by regulations 1, part 1, subparagraph (c), or in instruction no. 2, regulation no. 1, issued under Public Law No. 2, 73d Cong.).

They refer to regulations issued by Executive order under the provisions of the Economy Act, and they first say that the board shall act under the provisions of the regulations and then they say it is not to act within the terms of the regulations.

Mr. STEIWER. That answers my question. It seems to me from the reading of the language that the first requirement is to be made under the terms of the regulations, and then we have language included in parentheses by which it is provided that they shall be made in a way contrary to the terms of the regulations. I am wondering if the Senator is able to advise the Senate, in the face of that equivocal reference, whether the action will be in accordance with the regulations or contrary to the regulations?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I have had no legal training, and I prefer to leave that question to the eminent constitutional lawyers who adorn this Chamber, but as a mere matter of lay experience, I should say that the Veterans' Administration will always construe any doubt against the individual veteran. I know that, because I have found it out in the course of a great many years.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. And that notwithstanding the law includes a provision giving the veterans the benefit of any doubt.

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; that is true. The law does in the next clause say that in their decisions they shall "resolve all reasonable doubts in favor of the veteran, the burden of proof in such cases being on the Government." That sounds very liberal until we remember that every veterans' law we have ever enacted contained exactly such a clause. In spite of the fact that every veterans' law, beginning with the act of 1924, contains that porvision—and I think, perhaps, some prior to that—the veteran has never, as a matter of practice, been given the benefit of the doubt where the doubt could be resolved against him. So I say the boards are going to be helpless. No matter how kindhearted and able may be the men who are placed on them, the boards will be helpless in view of the regulations under which they will act and which will be drawn up for them by the central office in Washington.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is making a heroic effort to construe this compromise. Was there any representative of the Senate who took part in arranging the terms so that we might have the benefit of construction, possibly, from those who had a part in it on behalf of the Senate?

Mr. CUTTING. So far as I know, there was not.

Let me continue reading briefly from the compromise:

Notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, the decisions of such special boards shall be final in such cases, subject to such appellate procedure as the President may prescribe—

We do not know that there will be any appellate procedure, and if there is none the decision of the special boards shall be final—and, except for fraud, mistake, or misrepresentations, 75 percent of the payments being made on March 20, 1933, therein shall continue to October 31, 1933, or the date of special board decision, whichever is the earlier date.

May I say for the benefit of those Senators who are interested in my remarks that the House compromise is contained on page 5656 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Saturday last:

Except for fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation.

Of course, if a man is on the rolls by fraud or misrepresentation, I am sure we should all agree that he ought to be taken off. But what about "mistake"? How will the Veterans' Bureau construe the word "mistake"? Is it not possible under that word that every veteran drawing compensation for a presumptive case may be called up for review? I ask the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] whether the mere fact of constant reviews is not in itself sufficient to jeopardize the chances of recovery on the part of a man suffering from severe tuberculosis?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I had no doubt of that at all. The first thing we say to a patient of that kind is "Do not worry." Certainly he is bound to worry if he has these repeated examinations and reviews. I entirely agree with the Senator.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If we tell the patient, "Do not worry, leave it to Lewis Douglas", I imagine the net result would be scarcely reassuring.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator from New York and the Senator from Michigan confirm the belief I have in this matter. The word "mistake" ought to be clarified. In an amendment which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and I are going to offer, it reads "unmistakable error", which has been previously construed by the Veterans' Administration in such way as to leave no doubt as to the construction to be placed upon it.

To continue quoting from the compromise:

Except for fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation, 75 percent of the payments being made on March 20, 1933, therein shall continue to October 31, 1933.

In other words, by legislative action 25 percent are going to be cut off, although perhaps if we had left it to the administration under the old law, there is a conceivable, theoretical possibility that some of these men might have been kept on at 100 percent of what they are getting. There are plenty of them that ought to be drawing 100 percent. I submit the bill should read "not less than 75 percent", so that if the Veterans' Bureau wishes to reduce to 75 percent, they should take the responsibility and not have Congress take the responsibility for forcing the Veterans' Administration to strike off 25 percent of the compensation in those cases.

After going into the cases or reviewing them, the special boards may strike from the rolls those who may be found unworthy. That goes on until October 31, 1933. At that date everybody whose case has not been reviewed automatically goes off the rolls. There is no provision in the House compromise as to what is going to happen to the veterans whom the boards shall decide to leave on the rolls. They, too, so far as this legislation is concerned, may also be stricken from the rolls or their compensation may be reduced, not 25 percent as is provided for the period previous to October 31, not 50 percent or 75 percent, but perhaps 90 or 95 percent, perhaps sufficiently as to prevent them from drawing compensation at all.

Mr. President, I cannot conceive how language could be used more clearly taking away from the presumtive veteran the rights which he enjoyed under the old law and which he believed he was enjoying under contract with the Government of the United States.

That is the compromise which we are offered; and we are told that if we do not take this we cannot get anything better.

All I can say to that is that if we cannot get anything better than this, we had better take nothing, and go down fighting, at least, for what we think is right.

But why must we take this or nothing?

Let me call to the attention of the Senate the fact that they have already taken action in all the matters with which we are now concerned, and that they have taken action by a very decided vote.

On June 2 the Senate voted to suspend the rules and take up the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] taking away from the President the authority to reduce more than 15 percent the compensation received by veterans whose disability had been traced to service connection; and that amendment included the presumptive cases as well as what are called the combat-connected cases. Fifty-nine Senators voted to suspend the rules. Twenty-one Senators voted not to suspend the rules. That is a vote of practically 3 to 1; and among the 21 who voted not to suspend the rules there were many who undoubtedly would have voted for a 25-percent limitation, although they did not vote for the 15-percent limitation.

For instance, the minority of 21 on that vote included the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], who cooperated with me in drawing up the amendment providing for a 25-percent cut. It included Senators like my own colleague [Mr. BRATTON] and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who are intensely interested in the presumptive cases, and whom no one could accuse of being unfair or hostile to the veterans. So when we say the vote was 59 to 21, the sentiment in this Chamber in favor of doing justice to the disabled veterans was far greater than can be expressed in any such figures.

A little later on the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] offered an amendment to the Trammell amendment which would have allowed the President the leeway of 25 percent rather than 15 percent in the reductions which he was allowed to make in these cases. That amendment was defeated by a vote of 51 to 25—more than two thirds of the Senate. It was impossible to vote in the negative in that case unless one were willing to go ahead and see that justice be done to these disabled service men, because it was simply a question whether the President might reduce them 25 percent or 15 percent; and the Senate by a 2-to-1 vote said that he might reduce them by only 15 percent. That included the presumptive cases.

The other vote which was had on that day is not so clear. It was a vote on the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] restoring the 25 percent limitation, but including the Spanish-American veterans. The vote was 42 to 42, and was broken by the Vice President in favor of the Connally suggestion.

If we look at that vote, we shall see that everyone who voted against the Connally amendment was voting for a greater measure of justice to the veterans than was provided by that amendment, because, although the Connally amendment included the Spanish-American War veterans, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] had already served notice on the Senate that if that amendment were defeated he would move to amend the Trammell amendment so as to include the Spanish-American War veterans on a 15-percent reduction. So the 42 who voted against that amendment were all in favor of more liberal measures in favor of the veterans. The list of those who voted for the Connally amendment contained perhaps a few names of Senators who did not want to change the Economy Act; but if we compare that list of names with those who previously had voted on the same day, we will see that it also included a great number of genuine friends of justice for the disabled veterans. Some of them were Senators who believed that 25 percent was a better figure than 15 percent; but a great many of them were influenced by the speech which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] made on this floor, in which he implied that a 25-percent reduction would be favored by the President, and that a 15-percent reduction would be vetoed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield just there?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. In justification of what the Senator is imputing to me, I desire to advise him that the Senator from Texas entertained the view he expressed there, that a 15-percent cut would not receive the approval of the White House and would be vetoed, but that a 25-percent limitation on cuts probably would be favorably received; and the Senator from Texas was acting on what he thought were assurances that could be relied upon.

Mr. CUTTING. I am perfectly certain of that, and I thank the Senator from Texas for having made it clear. No one on this floor, least of all myself, would impute to the Senator from Texas anything except the best of faith in any statement he makes on this floor; and that just emphasizes the point I am making, that repeatedly, since this veterans' matter has been under consideration, we have been given assurances by men acting in the best of faith, like the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], like the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], like the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] as to what was going to be done; and each time something different has been done. Those Senators, of course, were acting in good faith, but they were not able to carry out the things that they guaranteed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CUTTING. I do.

Mr. CONNALLY. With regard to the Senator's comment a moment ago as to those who voted for the amendment I offered, is it not also true that a perusal of the list shows that those who were most zealously supporting the administration, at least on the Democratic side, all voted in favor of the amendment which I offered?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; that is quite true, Mr. President—every one of them.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I should not want the statement of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] to pass unchallenged.

I voted against the Connally amendment because I was in favor of the Trammell amendment. I have supported the administration from start to finish, and expect to continue to do so. When it comes to protection of the veterans of my State and of the rest of this country, however, it is my purpose to vote according to the dictates of my conscience; and I think I best serve the administration by seeking to have justice done to the veterans.

That was the reason why I voted against the Connally amendment.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator's sentiments do him high honor. What I am trying to say is that the vote on the Connally amendment does not show the sentiment of the Senate, because on both sides we can find Senators who desired to do everything that they felt was in their power for these cases which we are considering. The sentiment of the Senate is much more accurately shown in the vote on the suspension of the rules and on the vote on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. In one case the motion was carried by 3 to 1, and in the other case defeated by 2 to 1.

Mr. President, I do not know just how much more I ought to add. I should like to hear some analysis of the House compromise which would give me any hope that it might be interpreted in a fair way. I have given it what study I can. I think there is nothing in it. I think that if that is all we can get, we had better let it alone. I think that if that is all we can get, we had better go home and tell the veterans in our States that we would not stultify ourselves by voting for something which was patently fraudulent and patently a sham.

If that is the best we can get, Mr. President, tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands of disabled veterans will be dead before we come back here in January. Perhaps we can do nothing about it; but we can at least vote for our convictions, and allow the responsibility for the death of these men to rest elsewhere than on our shoulders.

It is difficult for anyone who for 10 years or more has been engaged in trying to obtain justice for these helpless veterans of the war to realize that in most cases we simply cannot get the people of the United States to understand the questions involved. Propaganda has gone throughout this Nation to the effect that these men on the rolls are grafters; that it is all a veterans' racket, or a pension racket; that the fight for justice for these men has been waged by something that is called a veterans' lobby. If I have any criticism to make of the men who have been sent here by veterans' organizations to keep Congress in touch with the realities of the situation, it would be that they have not fought hard enough; that after the Economy Act was passed they trusted too long in the promises of decent and fair administration which were made at the time the Economy Act was passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. REED. How can we blame them for that? We trusted those promises ourselves.

Mr. BORAH. Some of us.

Mr. REED. Yes; some of us, just as a great many Americans trusted the promise about sound money, and about observing sacred covenants, and a number of other things.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I do not blame them very much. I am not attempting to allocate the blame which should be distributed in the history of the Veterans' Act from the day it was proposed to the present time. I think there might be a doubt in anyone's mind as to just how far we ought to assume bad faith at the start. I think there was every reason why Senators might have thought in March that the promises which were made were going to be kept. But there is no reason in the world why any Senator should believe the promises which are being made in June.

Mr. President, when we discuss an amendment like this so-called "House compromise" we have to deal in technicalities, in subtleties of language. We have to split hairs in order to discuss it at all. The subject is dull, and it is hard for most people to realize that the difference between one adverb and another adverb may mean the difference between life and death.

A few days ago a veteran came here from my own State, from the great tubercular hospital located at Fort Bayard, N.Mex., in the southwestern part of my State. He is a presumptive case. He cannot prove that his disability was due to any particular incident in the war, although he served in five major engagements, was decorated for gallantry, and was gassed at the Battle of the Marne. The men at Fort Bayard sent him on here, because, being unfamiliar with the rules of the Senate, they hoped I could introduce him to this floor so that Senators could look with their own eyes on a living example of what the Economy Act is doing.

Of course, that was impossible. I did the next-best thing I knew of; I asked the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to examine the veteran, and those distinguished medical men made a report, which I think the Senator from West Virginia has in his desk at the present time. I am sorry he is not on the floor. The report made by the Senator from West Virginia, however, very clearly shows that the tuberculosis from which this man is suffering, the tuberculosis which caused the ghastly wound which he is enduring, was due to the service. I had a photograph made of the man's back [exhibiting it]. If Senators care to examine it, they will have opportunity to do so. One can put his fingers into the wound in this man's back and feel his heart beating less than one eighth of an inch away.

Mr. President, this man received a medal for gallantry in action the first week in May, and the very next week it was cut down from $100 a month to $20 a month. He has a wife, and his wife has to dress that wound three times a day. They can live simply on $100 a month in my State. They cannot live on $20 a month.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, by the invitation of the Senator from New Mexico I saw this veteran, and I have no doubt that the statement made by the Senator is entirely correct. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] and I went over the case very carefully, and we were both satisfied that the man's disability was fully traceable to his war service.

As the photograph exhibited by the Senator from New Mexico shows, the veteran is suffering from the effects of a deep wound in his back, and as a result of the removal of his rib there is a furrow into which my forearm would go. The man is a wreck; there is no hope of recovery; and to my mind it is only one of many examples which have come to my personal attention of the failure of the Veterans' Administration to recognize and deal generously with a case clearly of service origin.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, the last statement made by the Senator from New York is a most important part of this whole subject. I am not referring to this veteran because his is an exceptional case. His comrades from Fort Bayard who sent him on here to Washington did not send him on because he was an exceptional case. They sent him on because he is almost a typical case, because there are hundreds of thousands of men whose lungs are in equally bad shape who are being treated just as this man is being treated, although in most of those cases the suffering and the wounds are not so visible to a layman. It is because this is exactly typical of what is being done to the veterans of this country that I have ventured to exhibit this very painful photograph to the Senate of the United States.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. Is this the case of Peter J. Reno?

Mr. CUTTING. That is the case.

Mr. HATFIELD. If the Senator will permit, I have the case record here. I was so much impressed with the soldier's condition that, as a physician, I felt that I should check up on the case, get his history, and so on, which I did, and, with the permission of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, I will give a little bit of a historical sketch of this soldier.

Mr. CUTTING. I should very much like to have the Senator do so.

Mr. HATFIELD. This soldier, as I understand, is connected by presumption; or is he directly connected?

Mr. CUTTING. He was connected by presumption before the enactment of the economy law. He now comes under the class which is called "peace-time service-connection."

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, if I may observe, I do not think there is any question but that this soldier should be directly connected. His history is that he is 36 years of age. His father died at the age of 62, his mother at the age of 55. The cause of the deaths of his father and mother—that is, the direct cause—is unknown to him, but he does know that they did not die from tuberculosis. He has one brother living, in good health. He has two sisters living, both in good health. There was no record of tuberculosis in the family to the veteran's knowledge. His father lived in Passaic, N.J., and the veteran was born there.

In childhood the veteran had the usual diseases of childhood, but no scarlet fever, no typhoid fever, none of the many diseases which he might have contracted. He escaped them all.

He enlisted January 30, 1915, in the Sixth Field Artillery, which was split up in 1917, when he was transferred to the Tenth Field Artillery, and went overseas with that outfit in April 1918.

The veteran was in five major operations in the war. He was cited by division headquarters for gallantry in action in October 1918 for establishing communication between regiment and battalion commanders near Montfaucon, France, Meuse-Argonne sector, under heavy shell fire. He was gassed in the second battle of the Marne, after volunteering his service to carry the wounded back to first-aid stations. He, himself, lay in a first-aid station for 2 or 3 days in a semiconscious state, vomiting and spitting blood. He had loss of appetite. He states that his chest felt tight, and he had the sensation of suffocation during the period following his having been gassed. That was in July 1918.

The last battle in which the veteran participated was on November 11, 1918, the day the armistice was signed. He then hiked with the Army of Occupation into Germany. He returned to the United States in August 1919. He was not then in good health, in his judgment. He lost weight—about 8 or 10 pounds—and had loss of appetite. He reported sick and was given pills. He believed his condition was due to his gas experience. He was discharged from the service September 19, 1919, without examination.

The veteran reenlisted immediately, September 20, 1919, also without examination, and served again with the Tenth Field Artillery, and was sent to Detroit, Mich., on recruiting service, where he remained about 6 months. He contracted influenza in the epidemic of 1920 and was taken to the hospital on a stretcher. He was taken to Fort Wayne, Mich., and remained there about 2 weeks, with high temperature, coughing a great deal, and raising blood. He evidently had an involvement of the lungs. His chest felt swollen and he experienced difficulty in breathing.

After discharge from the hospital he was sent back to Camp Pike, Ark., with his regular organization, the Tenth Field Artillery, Third Division. The veteran states that he felt "dragging" after his recovery from influenza, developed a cough which continued, and was eventually told he had fluid in his chest. In the early part of 1921 he was discharged from the Army without examination.

The veteran then went to Passaic, N.J., and stayed out of service for 9 months. In that interim he stayed with his brother, and states he felt sick and did not feel he was physically able to work. He was running a temperature and spitting blood, and had heavy night sweats. He had no knowledge that the Government would take care of him, and reenlisted in 1922, without examination, notwithstanding that he had a cough, was raising blood, had night sweats, and had lost weight. He was sent to Panama from Fort Slocum, N.Y., on the first available transport.

In Panama, in August 1924, he grew worse. He had grown worse steadily from the time he entered the tropics. He ran a temperature continually, was spitting blood all the time, had many night sweats, and vomiting after breakfast. He reported to the sergeant in charge and asked for some pills or salts, stating that he had a cold. The colonel of the Medical Corps then examined him and said he had tuberculosis, far advanced, in both lungs, outlined an area on the left side of the chest, and told him he had an involvement of that entire side. He was put into Ancon Hospital, Panama, and kept there about a month, awaiting a transport to bring him back to the United States.

He returned to the United States in September 1924, where he was taken to the Letterman General Hospital, San Francisco, Calif., remaining there about 1 week, when he was sent to Fitzsimons General Hospital, Denver, Colo., where he remained from September 1924 to November 1928. During this time was given pneumothorax, that is, pumping artificial air into the lungs, after which he experienced a spontaneous collapse. Then developed fluid and was tapped and the fluid drained from his lungs. The veteran states that he experienced a great deal of pain in his chest and lungs.

Then Colonel Bruns, Chief of Medical Service, and Major Thearle, Chief of Surgical Service, with Major Pollock as assistant, recommended the rib operation, and Major Thearle operated in June 1925 for an empyema of the left chest, beginning at the posterior angle of the ribs, involving a complete resection of all ribs beginning with the last and ending with the first, removing the ribs, 12 in number, to their articulation with the vertebral column, permitting a complete collapse of the left lung. Upon inspection posteriorly, when the cavity is pulled apart, the pulsations of the thoracic aorta can be seen, and overlying this pulsation can be felt the pulsations of the heart against this scar overlying the heart, which represents the collapse or folding in of the skin and the tissue underlying the skin, overlying the heart, and the remainder of the lung.

Upon auscultation no breath sound is found, indicating that there is complete collapse of the left lung.

The surgeon arrived at the conclusion that the lung could not possibly repair itself unless it was put to rest, and that the only way it could be put to rest, Mr. President, was to perform this operation, collapsing the lung, and consequently doing away with the lung on the left side entirely.

In the right chest, pressing the right lung upon auscultation there is a harsh, rough breathing heard in every part of the lung, indicating an involvement of the lung, due no doubt to the invasion of the gas upon the normal texture of the lung tissue, resulting in a roughened breathing wherever the lung tissue is to be found, with numerous fine, dry, and hissing râles.

The soldier presents a bulging mass on the left side at the free boundary of the ribs, which were joined together by cartilage, when he undertakes to extend his diaphragm, which is the muscle which separates the abdomen from the thoracic cavity. This is due to the fact that there is no anchorage, it having been separated from the spinal column.

The only way this could have been obviated by the surgeon would have been to remove the ribs surrounding the costal margin. The reason the surgeon did not do this was the weakened condition of the soldier, feeling that the collapse of the one lung was as far as he could go and that to undertake additional surgery in all probability would mean the loss of this patient.

There was an abscessed cavity which had been draining from the early part of 1921 because of the accumulation of fluid which became infected, and which, no doubt, was primarily of tubercular origin. The only way to get rid of that abscessed cavity was the collapsing of the lung. So this operation was performed, bringing the posterior and the anterior wall of the chest cavity together, and by so doing obliterating this abscessed cavity, as well as collapsing the lung. The surgical operation was entirely successful; the soldier was cured, so far as his left lung was concerned, by obliterating the lung altogether, leaving him only an impaired right lung, which had been primarily involved by the gas, resulting in more or less of a pathology of the entire lung structure on the right side.

The veteran is 5 feet 7 inches tall; girth measure is 28 inches.

Has complete collapse of left lung; general impairment of right lung, with active tuberculosis bacilli in the sputum.

Veteran is emaciated, although he has a moderate amount of nutrition and resistance.

In this condition, Mr. President, he is living today; but what is the picture in this case? He was out of the service for a period of 9 months in 10 years of service. He developed a cough; was raising blood soon after he was gassed in France, and he continued to raise blood and continued to exemplify lung involvement. After his attack of influenza he was sent to his old camp in Arkansas, and there he was discharged. He remained out of the service for 9 months. Notwithstanding this out-of-the-service period, he continued to raise blood; he continued to cough; he continued to have night sweats. Yet we are told that this soldier's disability is connected by only a presumption in the law.

This soldier unquestionably, Mr. President, developed tuberculosis after he suffered the gas attack in France. Then his resistance was greatly lowered by the influenza attack in 1920 at Detroit while he was in the service there. Reenlisting in 1922 he was sent to Panama and remained there for a period of 2 years, continuing to have night sweats, continuing to run a temperature, continuing to lose flesh. It was finally discovered by the physician that he had a tubercular condition involving both lungs. He was then sent back to the United States and finally fell into the hands of a good surgeon who knew what to do. He was operated on, and because of the medical attention given this soldier he is living today. I may say, however, that this soldier is suffering at the present time from a chronic tubercular condition of his right lung.

Yet, Mr. President, notwithstanding all this experience, and notwithstanding all the service rendered by this patriot, though he was allowed, upon a presumptive conclusion, $100 a month, he was notified that the amount of compensation that he was to receive would be reduced to $20 a month, beginning July 1. He has a second notice informing him that his compensation has been increased to $30 a month—this soldier with one crippled lung left. You can place your finger on the large blood vessel which carries all the blood to the upper extremity, known as the "thoracic aorta", and you can see it pulsate through this gaping wound, and, resting anteriorly, or on top, of this large blood vessel, you can see the heart pulsate, with only a very small amount of tissue overlaying the heart, possibly less than one sixteenth of an inch, where the blood vessel enters the right auricle of his heart.

Mr. President, this is the picture, the horrible picture, of the treatment accorded this World War veteran. This is the treatment which he will receive by the rules and regulations adopted by and put into operation by the Veterans' Administration, to be administered through the direction of the President. I submit that this case is one that is worthy of the consideration and the sympathy and the support of every Member of this body, as it is likewise entitled to fair consideration by the other House of Congress.

When I first met this soldier I felt that I should make this investigation. I made the suggestion to the distinguished Senator from New Mexico, and the investigation was made in conjunction with Senator COPELAND. I am quite sure that the accuracy of the picture which I have portrayed here will be vouched for by my good friend the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], who is a distinguished physician and who has demonstrated his ability in his profession by the service he has rendered to the people of the city of New York. I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, it is for me to thank the distinguished Senator from West Virginia for the care and trouble he has taken in examining the case of this constituent of mine and in rendering such a thorough report. Of course, no matter what laws we may pass we are going to confront the question of interpretation. The care and competence with which these men are examined is the important thing, after all. We have in the Veterans' Bureau doctors not all of whom, but most of whom, give a mere cursory examination to a case like that. They are under orders to cut expenses whenever they can, and those orders have got to be carried out, or the doctor leaves the service of the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I ask a question of the Senator?

Mr. CUTTING. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON. I gathered from what the Senator from West Virginia has said that this man was first reduced to $20 a month, and then was increased to $30. Is that correct?

Mr. CUTTING. I believe so; I believe that, after having his compensation cut to $20 a month, later on he was munificently rewarded by an extra $10 a month.

Mr. JOHNSON. I wanted to call the Senator's attention to that extraordinary generosity by a grateful Republic first, but next to demonstrate that this very case has been reviewed during this period of discussion by those who are administering the veterans' law. That is so, is it not?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. So that we have a case here of a man just barely living, married, who under the law was getting $100 a month——

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. And a man with a hundred percent disability.

Mr. JOHNSON. Yes; a man with a hundred percent disability, getting a hundred dollars a month and reduced by this grateful country of his to $20, for him and his wife to live upon. This case, thus presented, leaves him nothing else to do but die. Shades of generosity; shades of gratitude; shades of Morgan & Co., for the love of God, are we not strong enough and big enough in the Congress of the United States to prevent that sort of wrong and that kind of injustice?

Mr. CUTTING. For 10 years this soldier served his country, Mr. President, and at the end of that time we give him a bit of ribbon with a few bars on it and a citation for gallantry in action, a medal——

Mr. JOHNSON. Has this man had citations for gallantry in action?

Mr. CUTTING. After getting these medals and the ribbon, which I hold in my hand [exhibiting], his Government decided that he was thereafter to get a pittance on which he could not possibly live.

Mr. JOHNSON. O Economy, what crimes are committed in thy name!

Mr. CUTTING. These doctors decided one day that his $100 a month should be cut down to $20 a month, and on another day they decided that the $20 a month should be increased to $30 a month, and based their decision on no evidence which they had not had in their possession right along. They did not examine this man in between. They sent him a letter—I do not know whether the Senator from West Virginia has the letter, but it matters not. It is the regular form of letter which the Bureau sends out. It states nothing except the fact that his compensation has been cut down.

Mr. President, I have the letter now, and I think I will read it to the Senate, because it is exactly the kind of letter sent to every veteran who is being cut; and I want the Senate to realize that when a man gets a letter like this there is nothing he can do about it.

Mr. JOHNSON. It is, I have no doubt, couched in the most kindly and generous terms, and I shall be glad to hear the letter read.

Mr. CUTTING. The letter reads:

DEAR SIR: A review of all claims in which payments of benefits were being made on March 20, 1933, was undertaken for the purpose of determining entitlement to benefits provided by Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, entitled "An act to maintain the credit of the United States."

I call to the attention of the Senator from California the words "benefits"—"entitlement to benefits." I have indicated the "benefits" which this particular veteran is going to receive in return for having served in four major operations in the war: Champagne-Marne, Aisne-Marne, St. Mihiel, and Meuse-Argonne.

He was cited by division headquarters for "gallantry in action" near Montfaucon, Meuse-Argonne sector, France, October 1918, "for establishing communication between the regimental and battalion commander near Montfaucon, France, Meuse-Argonne sector, under heavy shell fire."

I continue the reading of the letter:

Your claim has been carefully reviewed and, in accordance with the provisions of the above-entitled act, and on the evidence of record in your case, it has been determined that you are entitled to, and there is being approved in your favor, effective July 1, 1933, an award of pension in the amount of $20 monthly, on account of your permanent and total disability not incurred in service.

"Permanent and total disability", Mr. President!

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, this young man entered the Army in 1915, at 18 years of age, at which time he states he was in perfect health. He remained in the service of the Government for 10 long years. He developed no manifestations in the way of a disease until after he was gassed in one of the major battles during the World War. He did not think at that time that he was permanently disabled; he thought that the lung condition from which he suffered after the gas attack would clear away; but he continued to cough and to raise blood from and after that attack until 1920, when he suffered a severe attack of influenza in that 1920 period, when influenza was rife throughout this land. He was in an unconscious state for a period of 2 weeks in the hospital in Detroit, Mich. He continued to raise blood after his convalescence there; then he finally was discharged from the Army. He was out of the Army for a period of 9 months, suffering all the while from night sweats, the raising of blood from his lungs, the loss of flesh, and the loss of appetite. Reentering the Army 9 months after his discharge, he was sent to the Tropics. He remained there for 2 years, and then was sent to a hospital in San Francisco, Calif., where he was transferred in a short period of time to Fitzsimons Hospital in Denver, Colo., where he was surgically treated, where his life was saved, where his left lung was sacrificed.

That is the history of the soldier, and yet the record discloses the fact that he is connected in the way of disability by presumption. Why, Mr. President, there is not one peg upon which any diagnostician can hang his hat that would enable him to arrive at a conclusion that this soldier did not contract tubercular involvement that lost for him his left lung while he was directly in the service of the United States Army.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I want to say that if the Veterans' Bureau were in charge of the Senator from West Virginia we could all of us go home without enacting any legislation at all and realize that justice would be done. It is because the Veterans' Bureau is in charge of men with other ideals and other methods of diagnosis that we have to stand here on the floor of the Senate and make the fight we are making.

Mr. JOHNSON and Mr. FESS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCGILL in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. CUTTING. I hope Senators will allow me to finish this very interesting letter from the Veterans' Bureau.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I make just one brief observation?

Mr. CUTTING. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON. I understood from what the Senator from West Virginia said and from what the Senator from New Mexico said in the matter of the history of this man that one could see his heart beat really from the gaping wound that exists in him now. Is that correct?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. Not only is that true, but one can see the heart pulsate.

Mr. JOHNSON. Let us take this veteran down to the Veterans' Bureau so that those in charge of it may see a human heart! [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. FESS. The recital of the Senator in reference to this soldier leads me to ask this question. He would be eligible for compensation under the War Risk Insurance Act of October 6, 1917. What compensation was he receiving? I assume this was an injury.

Mr. CUTTING. He was receiving $100 a month disability compensation. As to the insurance, I am not informed, but I should like to read the rest of the letter.

Mr. FESS. Does the Senator mean the whole compensation has been cut to $30?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes; first to $20, then to $30.

Mr. FESS. I was wondering whether it is not possible that we are under a misapprehension and whether the soldier was not receiving something adequate under the Compensation Act, and this is an increase?

Mr. CUTTING. That is all he is receiving.

Mr. FESS. I cannot imagine how that is possible.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator will find that it is happening in tens of thousands of cases, and they are all getting this identical letter, and that is why I ask permission to finish reading the letter now. There is just one more paragraph to the letter and I want to read it:

> Regulations promulgated pursuant to the provisions of Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, provide that, except as to degree of disability, an application for review on appeal may be filed within 6 months from the date of this notice, or July 1, 1933, whichever is the later date. In the event you contemplate filing such an application, it is suggested that it be deferred until after July 1, 1933, when the condition of the work incident to the review of claims will permit of expedited action on applications of this character.

What would an ordinary man do if he received such a letter as that? He is told he has the right of appeal, but no right of appeal as to the degree of disability. The decision is final as to degree of disability. He can appeal as to something else, but there is doubt in the letter as to what he can appeal from. He is merely told that owing to the Economy Act he is going to get some benefit and that the benefit in his case is $20 a month. He is told that a very careful review was made before they came to the conclusion.

They sent that letter on May 6. On May 18 they wrote him another, stating again that his claim had been carefully reviewed. In fact, the letter of May 18 is an exact duplicate of the letter of May 6 except for one word. The letter of May 18 contains the word "$30" monthly instead of "$20." It also says that "this letter supersedes the letter dated May 6." First they gave his case careful review and said he was to have $20 a month, and then in the next 12 days they gave another careful review and decided he was to get $30 a month. He can appeal from those decisions, but how in the world is that man or any other man to know what course he is to pursue in filing an appeal? I do not believe any Member of the Senate would know how to reply to a letter of that sort. How these unfortunate suffering veterans can know the facts in a case like that I leave for the Senate to try to figure out.

Let me call to the attention of the Senate the third statement of the letter, that although previously these cases had been dealt with with great care and careful review has been given to them, after July 1 the review of cases is going to be expedited. We are going to have rapid action from that time on. It will not take 4 or 5 days to knock a man out and give him $20 instead of $100. After July 3 that is going to be done in 5 minutes.

So much for this case, which I did not mean to discuss at such length; I make no apologies for having done so, because it is an entirely typical case. I may add that the man is here in the building and any Senator who desires to see him can do so.

The point in this case and the point which this man makes is not that his case deserves particular attention. He is just one of the victims of which every State in the Union can furnish thousands of examples. Then we are asked to accept an assurance that from now on some degree of generosity is going to be shown to such cases. We are appointing boards and we are allowing them to act under rules and regulations laid down by the bureau. If these boards are going to act in the way in which we want them to act, we have got to write the regulations into the law on the floor of the Senate and the House and not leave Mr. Lewis Douglas to do it in the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUTTING. I am always glad to yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HATFIELD. The mistreatment of the veteran, the lack of understanding of his case, in my candid judgment, goes back to the lack of understanding on the part of the men who are operating the Veterans' Bureau. I do not wish to cast any opprobrium upon any of them. I have no feeling in this matter whatever. Soon after I came to the Senate of the United States I appeared before a committee and made certain declarations there respecting the presumptive period that was then in operation. I pointed out and proved the statement that I made, by eminent authorities in this and other lands, that the presumptive period then in operation, 5 years, was not a sufficient time within which certain diseases might well develop that had been picked up by the veteran during his service in the Army.

We had the attitude of the then President of the United States upon that subject and referring to the then President, I have no feeling in the matter other than to observe that he has no right to a medical opinion, as is the case with the present Chief Executive of this Nation. When we survey the organization of the Army, with the surgical service and the Surgeon General in the Army, when we make a survey of the surgeon in charge of the Navy, when we make a survey of the Health Department of the Government, and compare the efficiency of those departments with the efficiency of the medical division of the Veterans' Bureau, we find they are not to be compared, notwithstanding the Veterans' Bureau is many times greater in the way of service and in the way of responsibility and has larger problems to deal with than any of the other departments to which I have referred.

In my opinion, the Chief Executive who passed into history on March 4 and the Chief Executive who is now in control of the destinies of this country which include the veterans, overlooked the fact that the inefficiency from which the veteran suffers, the mistreatment which he receives is due to the fact of the lack of understanding of the veterans' diseases, the conditions which develop respecting the veterans. In my candid judgment, if there was a complete and efficient medical organization in charge of the Veterans' Bureau we would not have experiences brought here to the floor of the Senate such as are exemplified by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico in the last case to which he has referred.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I am glad to have the statement of the Senator from West Virginia, and I again remind the Senate that he himself is an eminent physician.

Mr. President, we are told in the press of the country that it is better to let the Executive pass on these cases, that Congress is incompetent to decide which man shall obtain benefits on account of disability, and which man shall not.

It may be of interest to remember that almost immediately after the Revolutionary War the duty of selecting the men entitled to compensation for disability incurred in the Revolution was taken away from the President and given to the Federal courts. After the courts had passed on a particular claim it was then submitted to Congress, which was to determine whether or not the veteran in question was entitled to be placed on the pay roll. The Chief Executive was left out of the picture entirely; and the reason given for the passage of that act was that the power to place men on the pay roll might put the President "in a position to destroy the fundamental principles of democracy." It was not until many years after that that the executive branch of the Government was given any discretion at all.

Now we have divested ourselves of all authority in this matter. We have left it all to the Executive. We have been attempting in the past few days to recover some slight part of the authority with which we then parted. So far, we have been unsuccessful.

The compromise into which it is proposed that we enter takes away all rights from the Spanish-American War veterans. If I read it rightly, it takes away all rights from the direct service-connected cases. In the case of the presumptives the language is so involved and so obscure that no man can guarantee that any presumptively connected case will remain on the rolls.

The case of Peter Reno, as I said, is a presumptive case.

Many people have not thought out the question of what actually constitutes a war casualty.

The other day I received a letter from an eminent physician, himself a war casualty, from which I should like to quote:

At Camp Cody we received thousands of men from civil life. We could not supply them with proper clothing for winter—light summer uniforms only. They slept 12 in a tent, spoon fashion, to keep from freezing. We did not have blankets enough to cover them. Pneumonia ran riot. They died 3 to 5 a day all winter. Were they war casualties or were they not? I buried at sea, with grate bars tied to them, 57 men dead of pneumonia, until we ran out of grate bars. I piled the rest of the dead, one on top of another, in an unused room on the ship. Were these dead war casualties, or were they not?

A fat old doctor was made to walk 3 miles uphill from Cherbourg to Tourleville. He dropped dead at the top. Was he a war casualty, or was he not?

Another distinguished medical man, my own dear friend, examined thousands of cases of ear disease by candlelight. His right eye has never been any good since. Was he a war casualty, or was he not?

Another friend of mine got flu at Camp Dix, followed by pneumonia, then a series of operations, with removal of ribs on one side. He has been a total wreck ever since. Was he a war casualty, or was he not?

An old doctor of Detroit got flu at Coblentz after November 11, then was hospitalized for tuberculosis. Is now a far-advanced and very feeble consumptive. He will be totally without funds when August 1 rolls around.

In view of the new compromise, we shall have to change that date to October 31—

Was he a war casualty, or was he not?

I am so outraged at what is being done to others that my own troubles are forgotten.

This man himself, Mr. President, was one of the most eminent tubercular specialists in the Southwest. He is not now a constituent of mine. He enlisted in the war when over age, left a very lucrative sanitarium which he was conducting, and went into the service. I shall read a few sentences from another letter which he wrote me:

It is against my instinct to ask anyone to help me, but now, in my 63d year, with my race about run, I am in dire need of it. The Veterans' Administration has taken from me my retired pay. I am sick and old and no longer able to earn enough to support my family, consisting of my wife and two minor children, a very old father-in-law, and for 2 years past I have had to support two adult children out of work and still out of work. I have been able to survive the depression and do these things by means of my retired pay. I have also helped a daughter with a consumptive husband and her two children.

I will quote a portion of a communication I received from the Veterans' Administration.

And here again we note the generosity with which the Veterans' Bureau conducts its correspondence:

The above-named former officer has been granted retirement pay on account of tuberculosis, pulmonary, chronic, active, moderately advanced; emphysema, severe, chronic myocarditis with hypertrophy and extra systole.

I assume that is rather a serious condition; is it not? I address my inquiry to the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

Mr. COPELAND. I should say it is.

Mr. CUTTING (reading):

The evidence shows that the above-named former officer is not entitled to continue to receive retirement pay, as the disability for which he was retired with pay is not shown to have been caused by a factor arising directly out of the performance of actual military or naval duty during the World War.

I now quote further from this doctor's letter:

When the war broke I had been in the Reserve Corps since 1907, and just before had been promoted from first lieutenant to captain, and examined for promotion at Fort Bliss, Tex. So I must have been in good health then. The day before Colonel Buswell went to Washington in April 1917 he examined me for active service at Fort Bayard, N.Mex., and ordered me to duty shortly after he got to Washington (by telegraph).

Again, at Camp Dix, I was examined by the Overseas Medical Board, and the fact that I was sent to France as surgeon of the One hundred and thirty-third Infantry shows that they found me in good health. When I went over I was 47 years old, 2 years over military age.

When I was discharged from service at Fort Bayard in the spring of 1919 the major who examined me told me I had active pulmonary tuberculosis, and I was discharged with that diagnosis. I never applied for compensation; it came to me automatically as a result of my discharge with tuberculosis. In fact, the then Veterans' Bureau wished to hospitalize me for the same.

The first two or three checks I received I returned with the statement that I had not served for money and did not wish help as long as I could earn my way. The Veterans' Bureau official who got my letter wrote me and returned the check, and advised me to take them, so as not to prejudice my case in the future. From then on I took the checks. Ever so often the Veterans' Bureau ordered me up for examination, and each time my compensation was increased. In March 1925 I was ordered to go to Albuquerque for examination, and there given permanent total disability. When the retirement bill was passed I was placed on the retired list.

That I have survived the depression, as I stated before—that is, so far—has been due to this retirement pay.

* * * * * * *

On the ship going over I cared for, alone, 500 cases of flu—87 pneumonia, and had 57 deaths on the cold, unheated old English freighter. I never had my clothes off for 17 days going over. I landed at Liverpool with a fever of 101, and it did not come to normal for 3 months. My old cured trouble broke out. I never went off duty a day—worked all the time, slept in the mud, on cold marble floors, on barn floors, on cots (wire) with no mattress. From Cherbourg to Tourleville I carried my clothing roll 3 miles uphill, and never got my breath back from that day to this.

At Base A, Evacuation Hospital No. 2, I had 2,500 men under my care as chief of medical service.

On top of all this, after granting me compensation on the basis of what they found on discharge, they arbitrarily claim that my disability does not arise out of the war.

If your conscience says help me, please do it, for God knows I need it.

This letter is written in an almost illegible handwriting on account of the disability from which this very eminent doctor is suffering. He was cut down, if I remember the case, to $40 a month. That statement of "benefit" was conveyed in a subsequent letter. When he received from the Bureau the particular letter to which I am referring he was informed that his retired pay had been cut off entirely, and nothing was substituted therefor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to cite one case very briefly?

Mr. CUTTING. Surely.

Mr. COPELAND. It happened last year. A man came to see me out at my farm. I had leisure and I gave time to him. He had been engaged a few months before to shovel the snow off the roof of his mother's house up in Watertown, N.Y. He became heated and immediately had a paralysis which paralyzed one side of his face and one side of his body. The question was, Could that in any way whatever be a war-connected case?

I inquired from the man if he had had any paralysis during the war, and he said he had. He was in the army of occupation, and on a forced march had a paralysis from his waist down. He had no hospital record; but they put him in an ambulance and carried him along, and in 2 or 3 days he recovered from it.

Of course, it is easy to state that there could be no possible war connection. I inquired if he had had any injury in the war. He said he had a shrapnel wound, and as a result of it had an infection of the tear sac and of the angle of the eye, and had serious blood poisoning, which continued for several months. In the absence of specific disease it is perfectly apparent to me that this man had an inflammation of the lining of the heart, what is called an endocarditis, as a result of the blood poisoning, and following this there were vegetations upon the valves of the heart. One of these broke loose when he was on his way up to Coblenz. Fortunately, it was disposed of. In the second case the vegetation went to the brain, and as a result of it he had a paralysis. He is permanently disabled, unable to work.

To my mind, that man is just as much a casualty of the war as if he had been shot and wounded in battle in such a manner as to have produced the paralysis of which I have spoken. It is directly traceable to an injury the effects of which are dated back to the shrapnel wound, with the subsequent infection.

Mr. CUTTING. I entirely agree with the Senator. I have known terrible cases that were directly connected with the service by positive proof, and I have endeavored to secure justice for such cases. I agree with what the Director of the Budget said in March, that men who have lost 2 legs and 2 arms or 2 eyes should be drawing $275 a month, although the Director of the Budget himself has issued no administrative orders and has allowed his subordinates to issue no administrative orders which would give any such compensation. But, Mr. President, I have known men who have lost two legs, I have known men who have lost two arms, and are able to carry on business and make a small income for themselves. They are not quite so helpless, not quite so miserable, not quite so wretched as men I know who are lying on their backs in hospitals as the result of military service, men who can do nothing except breathe. It is a question of how long they can continue to breathe.

These are the presumtive cases. These are the cases as to which the Economy League has issued a pronunciamiento in which they say that we must establish the principle that they fought for their country, and not for a pension. This man whose picture I hold in my hand fought for his country and not for a pension, and therefore he is cut down to $20 or $30 a month.

Mr. President, I want to give the records of just a few cases which were called to my attention the other day.

The first case is as follows:

Pre-war occupation, barber. Age at enlistment, 39 years. Wounded in action Meuse-Argonne. He received a severe gunshot wound of the right thigh with marked loss of muscle, causing a tumor of the bone. This has caused the knee joint to stiffen badly. He was also wounded by gunfire in the right hand, which has caused a palsied condition, or marked shaking of his right hand as a result of this injury. This disabled veteran was drawing $58 a month with which he was supporting two aged aunts, one of whom is totally blind. Under the Economy Act regulations his pension has been set at $20 a month, a reduction of 65 percent. His present age is 55. He is now unable to work as a result of his injuries and has no means of support.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, under the regulations established by industry respecting employment after a certain age, this man having arrived at the age of 55 years, it would be almost impossible for him to get employment of any kind. Is not that true?

Mr. CUTTING. That is absolutely correct.

The second case to which I want to refer is that of a farmer, wounded in action, Meuse-Argonne, October 5, 1918. He received two severe shrapnel wounds in the neck, shoulders, and back. The scars are still so large that you can put your fist in them. These injuries have resulted in a useless right shoulder and right arm, in addition to two very painful wounds. He has been drawing $46 a month for many years. Due to inadequate description of wounds and their effect, he was recently reduced to $10 a month and unless this description can be corrected he will be further reduced to $8 a month, or a pension denied him altogether.

Third case:

Gunshot wound, Meuse-Argonne, October 15, 1918. This disabled veteran was in a shell hole when German shell exploded killing six of his comrades and severely wounding him. He has very extensive and unsightly wounds and scars with muscle destruction of left arm, shoulder, and back, which has rendered the left arm and shoulder useless for purposes of work. He was drawing $67 a month for this disability. The Economy Act and its regulations have set his pension at $8 a month, a reduction of 88 percent.

Fourth case:

An aviator who made fifty-odd flights over the German lines. On November 8, 1918, while cranking his airplane propeller preparing for another flight over the enemy lines the propeller cut off the major portion of his left hand, leaving only his thumb, and cut off the thumb of his right hand and severely injured this hand also. In addition, his right arm was broken so severely that he cannot raise this arm to his shoulder and is consequently useless for work. Having only a thumb on his left hand, this hand also is useless for work, and he has not been able to work since injury. He has no means of support other than his pension. He had received $125 a month for many years on account of his injuries. The Economy Act regulations has set his pension at $40 a month, a reduction of 68 percent.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, there is no consistency in the proportion the two soldiers are receiving based upon the injuries they sustained, and that is the experience which will be found in connection with the ratings of these soldiers who are disabled; that no consistency is maintained based upon the disabilities which the soldiers have suffered.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator is entirely correct. Just one other case, that of a veteran with the service-connected disabilities of deafness and severe sinus trouble, heart and lung trouble, rheumatism, and mental disability, who has been cut from $102 a month to $20 a month under the new regulations. He has had 18 operations by the Government since the war for service-connected disabilities. He was severely gassed at the Battle of St. Mihiel, but refused to be evacuated. He served in the Battle of the Argonne, where he was again gassed, this time so severely that he had to be carried off the battlefield. He has a wife and five children, and the Government is from now on to pay him the princely sum of $20 a month.

Mr. HATFIELD. The soldier is 100 percent disabled?

Mr. CUTTING. Of course.

Mr. HATFIELD. And he must be cared for by his family?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.

Mr. HATFIELD. He is to receive $20 a month from the Government which he served to take care of him and to provide for him, and because of the paltry contribution made by the Government of the United States the family must go out and support the breadwinner of the family, the soldier?

Mr. CUTTING. Exactly. We could multiply these cases by the thousands and the tens of thousands, of course, but we have not the time to do so, and I will leave those cases before the Senate as samples of what is being done over all the country.

The other day I read from the RECORD a statement given by the adjutant of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War of Fort Bayard, N.Mex., showing the degree of cuts which had been made in the compensation of those in that hospital.

I have here a statement sent to me by someone in Detroit as to the first cases which they looked into at random in the Veterans' Bureau in that city. I shall not read the statement, but I should like to have it go in the RECORD at this portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Below is list of claims picked at random that have been rated under the new veterans' legislation, which have been brought to my attention by individual veterans showing claim number, nature of disability, old rating, new rating, and whether in combat, or not in combat

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, there is the situation which has been confronting us since the 31st of March, when the regulations under the Economy Act were issued.

The Senate has acted. The Senate has decided by several overwhelming votes that it wants to do justice to these men. How can it possibly reverse its stand now because a so-called "compromise" has been adopted by one House of the Congress, although that compromise is a complete surrender of every principle for which we fought on this floor?

Mr. President, we have been treated in bad faith, and when I say bad faith I am not criticizing the Senators who have stood on the floor of this Chamber and assured us as to what was going to be done if we passed such and such an act or adopted such and such an amendment. Those Senators were acting in good faith, but the people for whom they spoke did not back them up.

I am not charging bad faith to the President of the United States. We know perfectly well that he is too busy with other matters to give to this matter the detailed attention which is required if justice is to be done. But the people who wrote the regulations, the people who wrote the Executive order which came down on June 6, the people who have written this infamous amendment knew exactly what they were doing, and those are the people who have deceived Members of this body, who have induced them to stand up on this floor and promise things when the promises were not going to be kept.

Are Senators going to trust them again? Whatever benefit may be done for these unfortunate cases is going to be done by Congress and anything we do not write into the law might as well not be considered at all, because it will not be granted by the Veterans' Administration or the Bureau of the Budget. We know that, because we have had the experience.

This is not a partisan fight, and everyone knows it. In the list of Members who voted to take up the Trammell amendment, and who voted to reject the substitute amendment of the Senator from Arkansas, will be found in about equal numbers Senators from both sides of this Chamber. The Members of the House who accepted this compromise accepted it, undoubtedly, in good faith, believing it was the best they could get, but I do not think they had given it the study or the analysis which has been possible since Saturday night.

I am confident that the compromise contains nothing which will benefit anybody, except possibly the widows and dependents of the service-connected cases. The language in that respect seems to be positive, yet my experience of the last few months is such that I would hesitate to stand on the floor of the Senate and guarantee even that sentence, because there may be some hitch in it, some catch in it, which I have overlooked.

There are no men in the Congress of the United States to whom the veterans should be more grateful than the three ranking majority members of the Veterans' Committee of the House of Representatives, Mr. RANKIN, of Mississippi; Mr. JEFFERS, of Alabama; and Mr. CONNERY, of Massachusetts. Those men, rejecting every consideration of partisanship, stood up on the floor of the House of Representatives and made a fight for a decent compromise, a compromise which would have meaning, a compromise which would be clear in its language, a compromise which the man on the street could interpret and construe, a compromise under which the veteran himself would know exactly what rights he had and what rights he did not have. I think that if the House had had more time to consider the matter, it would have followed these distinguished Democratic gentlemen whose names I delight to honor.

Why is it that we cannot get a compromise which in its language will bear out the promises previously made in its behalf? The Senator from Massachusetts stood here in March and promised that his amendment would do a certain thing. When the amendment was interpreted, we discovered it did nothing of the kind.

The Senator from South Carolina stood here 10 days ago and promised that a certain kind of regulation was going to be written into the Executive administrative orders. When the regulation came down it was something totally different. The Senator from Arkansas introduced into the RECORD a statement of the purport of those very regulations, a day before they came in; and when the regulations came before the Senate, it was found that they did not correspond at all with the statement which the Senator from Arkansas had previously introduced into the RECORD.

The Senator from Texas, while he made no direct promise, certainly implied in his language, and he has been brave enough to stand up and say so this morning, that there would be no Executive objection to a 25-percent limitation, but that there would be Executive objection to a 15-percent limitation, and, relying on that statement, many Senators voted for the 25-percent rather than the 15-percent limitation. Now, we find that that statement, while made in the best of faith by the Senator from Texas, has not been backed up by the people for whom the Senator was supposed to speak, and for whom we hoped the Senator spoke.

Now, here they are again at the same old game. This compromise is represented to us through the newspapers and through preliminary statements, as though it guaranteed a 25-percent limitation in service-connected cases, but it does nothing of the sort. It is represented to us as providing a method by which presumptive cases may be kept on the rolls; but it does nothing of the sort. Nobody even claims that it does anything for the veterans of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. CUTTING. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I am not anything like so familiar with this legislation as is the Senator from New Mexico. I read over a couple of times the agreement that is contained in the conference report. Does the Senator think he understands it? I am merely asking for my own information.

Mr. CUTTING. I know that I do not understand one sentence in it. I think I understand the other sentences, and if I do understand them, they are the most illiberal, the most fraudulent, and the most perfidious provisions which have ever been written into a statute.

Mr. LONG. I was trying to give it some other interpretation than that. I was giving it a more charitable interpretation, that it was written so that we were not expected to understand it, to be honest with the Senate.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Louisiana is quite correct in saying that we are not meant to understand it; but I think if we give it sufficient study to understand it, we will find that everything in it is against the disabled veteran and everything in it is in favor of the methods by which the Veterans' Administration has heretofore cut deserving cases from the rolls.

Mr. LONG. I notice one thing that has been put into the regulations which the Senator from Texas, with almost unanimous support in the Senate, himself struck out. The Senator from Georgia suggested that he put in the word "directly." I notice they have inserted the words "directly service-connected disabilities."

Mr. CUTTING. That is true; but, as I explained a little while ago, they not only put in those words, but they made the limitation on the reduction of the "rates of compensation", not of the compensation itself, so that even the directly service-connected cases might be thrown off the rolls by a manipulation of the individual rating, under the rating schedule.

Mr. President, it is easy for any Senator on this floor to talk for hours or days on individual cases which may come to his notice. I just want to conclude by saying a word about the principle involved.

The newspapers have been full of statements to the effect that the Director of the Budget thinks this is a matter of principle. Now, what is the principle? Just after we adopted the Connally amendment, as Senators will remember, the statement was made that if the Connally amendment remained in the law we should have to add $200,000,000 of taxation to the bill in order to take care of it. Mr. Howe, the President's Secretary, speaking on the following evening over the radio, made the principle to be the fact that if taxation were raised it would cost every human being in the country $1.25. So, obviously, the principle at that time was one of finance; it was the principle that we did not want to be taxed any more, or it was the principle that we could not have the legislation for which the Senate had voted unless we were taxed some more. In other words, the only principle involved was one connected with balancing the Budget.

However, since then we have had another principle held before us—a principle unconnected with money at all. We are now told that there is some fundamental moral injustice in taking care of these men who were connected with service by statutory presumption.

I submit that both those things cannot be questions of principle. If the principle is that we must take off the rolls the presumptive cases, then, Mr. President, why were such shocking cuts made in cases directly connected with combat? Why in this very compromise which we are offered are the combat-connected cases left in the air, without the slightest guaranty that they will be taken care of in the future?

The principle which cuts out presumptive cases cannot be used as an argument to justify the cuts which have been made and which will continue to be made. So I can only believe that the other principle is the one which really concerns Mr. Douglas. It is the principle of balancing the Budget. Yet in no other measure which has been before the Senate have we been urged to consider the impossibility of passing it on account of the taxation involved. That argument is used merely when it comes to human flesh and blood. Now is the time when we hear that these men who fought for their country did not fight for a pension, and as a result we must establish the "principle" that they are to die as expeditiously as possible.

At the proper time, Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and I will submit a substitute for the House amendment to the Senate amendment. It will not be so liberal as the Connally amendment which the Senate adopted 10 days ago. It will accept the President's plan for reviewing boards, but it will write into the law the duty of such reviewing boards. It will write into the law the principles under which they are to act. It will write into the law such provisions as may make it of benefit to the presumptive cases. It will, furthermore, take out of the compromise the weasel words which were put in with regard to directly service-connected disabilities. In the third place it will include the Spanish-American War veterans on the same terms on which we included them in the Connally amendment last week.

I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will "stand to its guns" and will insist that whatever we are going to do for the veterans be written into the statute and not left to Executive order and administrative regulation.

Mr. VANDENBERG obtained the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me to make a suggestion?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. The motion now pending before the Senate is simply to accede to the request of the House for a conference. I wonder if the Senator would not, in the interest of facilitating the consideration of the bill, agree to that? If the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from Oregon desires to present a motion to instruct the conferees, it would then be in order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should be very happy to proceed on that theory. I am only going to take a moment of time.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GEORGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. I should like merely to make an inquiry. As I understand, the amendment or the instruction may be submitted before the conferees shall be appointed, and that particular instruction might be voted upon by the body?

Mr. BYRNES. That is a correct statement of the parliamentary situation.

BONDS UNDER HOME LOAN MORTGAGE ACT

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, Col. Louis M. Howe, the President's secretary, made the second of his $1,500 weekly radiobroadcasts last evening. Of course, information from the White House radiospokesman, and particularly information put out at the rate of $1,500 a broadcast, should be accurate. In the present instance, lest the country should be misled respecting a very important proposition, I feel that it is quite necessary to straighten out the record and the White House secretariat at the same time.

Colonel Howe undertook to instruct and inform the country last evening about the operations of the new Home Loan Mortgage Act. Of course, he spoke with high authority. I read one sentence from his definition of the bill, as reported on page 5 of the New York Times of June 12. Quoting Colonel Howe regarding the securities which are to be issued to implement the new home-mortgage bill:

> The Government gets out a special issue of its own bonds which are just as good as any other Government bonds.

Mr. President, for Colonel Howe's information, in case he wants to revert to this same subject in his third $1,500 broadcast next Sunday, I call his attention to subsection 3 of section 4 of the Home Loan Mortgage Act, which clearly demonstrates, in the first place, that the $2,000,000,000 worth of bonds involved in this transaction are not to be issued by the Government at all, but are to be issued by the so-called "Home Owners Loan Corporation"; and, in the second place, I call his attention specifically to the language, which says that—shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed as to interest only by the United States.

These bonds—

Quoting from the law—

In other words, Mr. President, these bonds are in no sense an issue of Government bonds, as Colonel Howe unfortunately indicated to the country; they are not "just as good as any other Government bonds." They have a Federal guaranty as to interest only. Their principal is only as good as their own inherent value. We all hope they will be good bonds; their interest is guaranteed, but they are in no sense the equivalent of Government bonds, and we have taken sufficient care in the passage of the act to make it sure that the investors of the country should not misunderstand and that the credit of the Government should not be mistakenly involved in this connection.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. FESS. That same question arose in reference to the joint-stock land-bank bonds and in connection with the farm-land-bank bonds. It was represented to purchasers through the salesmen that those bonds were instrumentalities of the Government, and, therefore, purchasers were left under the impression that they were Government-guaranteed bonds. In the home loan central bank system measure, which we passed at the close of the last session, in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it was written in the law that the bonds should state that they were not Government guaranteed.

I am amazed if someone who can be construed as speaking for the administration would lead the public to believe that the bonds now issued are on a par with Government bonds, and lead the purchaser to believe that they are Government guaranteed. That is a dishonest thing to do, to say the least. I am amazed to hear that that was stated by the Secretary to the President, for when he speaks, no matter how often he says that he does not speak for the administration, the public will interpret it that he is speaking for the administration.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for his observations. His analogy is perfectly justified. I was coming to that point.

I do not mean to be petty about this thing, but it seems to me one of the most unfortunate things that heretofore has happened in respect to the securities of these so-called "instrumentalities of the Government" has been that investors have been misled into believing that the securities issued by these instrumentalities were in fact issued upon the faith and credit of the Government of the United States. That is just as much a fraud upon investors as any other fraud is or can be. We do not want to encourage or repeat these misunderstandings. So I have taken the liberty of quoting this erroneous statement from Colonel Howe's speech of last evening. My authority for the quotation is the New York Times. Apparently the quotation is literal. The speech misstates the facts. If this section of the Colonel's address last evening used up 1 minute of his radio time, since the secretary to the President and his troupe are paid $1,500 for 15 minutes on the radio, this is $100 worth of misinformation so far as he is concerned, but it might be many millions of dollars' worth of misinformation so far as the investors of the country are concerned.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bankhead	Borah	Byrd

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—FURTHER CONFERENCE

The Senate resumed consideration of the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] to insist on the amendments of the Senate to the independent offices appropriation bill (H.R. 5389) and to ask for a further conference with the House.

Mr. STEIWER obtained the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Oregon let the Senate vote on my motion to agree to the conference requested by the House, and then the Senator may submit his motion with reference to instructing the conferees?

Mr. STEIWER. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The understanding of the Chair is, in case the motion of the Senator from South Carolina is agreed to, the Chair will then recognize the Senator from Oregon to move to instruct the conferees. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina to insist on certain amendments of the Senate and to agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate conferees be instructed to insist upon the following amendment as a substitute for the House amendment which was adopted as a substitute for the Senate amendment no. 47. I send the amendment to the desk and ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon as a substitute for the House amendment will be reported for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Oregon proposes, in lieu of the matter inserted by the House amendment, to insert the following:

The President is hereby authorized under the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, to establish such number of special boards (the majority of the members of which were not in the employ of the Veterans' Administration at the date of enactment of this act), as he may deem necessary to review all claims (where the veteran entered service prior to November 11, 1918, and whose disability is not the result of his own misconduct), in which presumptive service connection has heretofore been granted under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, wherein payments were being made on March 20, 1933, and which are heretofore or hereafter held not service connected under the regulations issued pursuant to Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress. Members of such boards may be appointed without regard to the Civil Service laws and regulations, and their compensation fixed without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. Such special boards shall determine, on all available evidence, whether service connection shall be found in such cases, and shall in their decisions resolve all reasonable doubts in favor of the veteran. For the purposes of this section the granting of service connection in such cases shall not be based upon the requirements of regulation no. 1, part I, subparagraph (a), or instruction no. 2, regulation no. 1, issued under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, it being the intent of this section to preserve service connections as granted by section 200, World War Veterans' Act of 1924, as amended, title 38 of the Code (other than disability resulting from the claimant's own misconduct), unless affirmative evidence clearly discloses that the disease or disability had its inception before or after the period of military or naval service, and not aggravated thereby.

Notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, the decisions of such special boards shall be final in such cases, subject to such appellate procedure as the President may prescribe, and, except in those cases where the special boards shall find that the award was based upon fraud, misrepresentation of a material fact, or unmistakable error not less than 75 percent of the payments being made on March 20, 1933, therein shall continue to October 31, 1933, or the date of special board decision, whichever is the earlier date: Provided, That where any case is pending before any one of the special boards on October 31, 1933, the President may provide for extending the time of payment until decision can be rendered. The President shall prescribe such rules governing reviews and hearings as may be deemed advisable. Payment of salaries and expenses of such boards and personnel assigned thereto shall be paid out of and in accordance with appropriations for the Veterans' Administration. In all cases where service connection shall be preserved under the review herein provided, not less than 75 percent of the payments being made on March 20, 1933, shall continue, and the determination of service connection in such review shall be final in all cases: Provided, however, That in the event of a change in the degree of disability of any such veteran the amount of compensation payable shall be determined pursuant to the provisions of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and the rating schedule in effect prior to March 20, 1933, and such amount shall not be reduced by more than 25 percent.

Notwithstanding any of the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, in no event shall the compensation being paid for directly service-connected disabilities to those veterans who entered the active military or naval service prior to November 11, 1918, and whose disabilities are not the result of their own misconduct, where they were, except by fraud, misrepresentation of a material fact, or unmistakable error, in receipt of compensation on March 20, 1933, be reduced more than 25 percent: Provided,, however, That in the event of a change in the degree of disability of any such veteran the amount of compensation payable shall be determined pursuant to the provisions of the World War Veterans 'Act, 1924, as amended, and the rating schedule in effect prior to March 20, 1933, and such amount shall not be reduced by more than 25 percent; and in no event shall death compensation, except by fraud, misrepresentation of a material fact, or unmistakable error, being paid to widows, children, and dependent parents of deceased World War veterans under the World War Veterans' Act of 1924, as amended, on March 20, 1933, be reduced or discontinued, whether the death of the veteran on whose account compensation is being paid was directly or presumptively connected with service, except that the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply with respect to veterans residing outside the limits of the continental United States or its territorial possessions, or with respect to any veteran who is being furnished hospital treatment, institutional, or domiciliary care by the United States or any political subdivision thereof, if such veteran has neither wife, child, nor dependent mother or father.

Notwithstanding any of the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, the pension paid to veterans of any war prior to the World War, or to any widow and/or dependent of such veterans, shall not be reduced more than 25 percent of the amount being paid prior to March 20, 1933.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the proposed instructions of the Senator from Oregon take the place of what is known as the "Connally amendment" and the substitute adopted by the House of Representatives. The Senator from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I shall attempt as briefly as possible to make some explanation of the differences between these several proposals.

The matters which are before us, either directly or indirectly, are the Connally amendment, the substitute agreed to upon Saturday afternoon by the House of Representatives, and the proposal which I have offered upon behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] and myself, which, as the Chair has just stated, is in the nature of a substitute for the House action.

All three of these proposals have certain elements in common and certain differences.

Senators will remember that the Connally amendment placed a limitation of 25 percent upon the cuts to be made by the Veterans' Administration. That limitation was placed upon all pensions and compensations payable to World War veterans whose disabilities were connected either by direct proof or by presumption, and also upon all cuts made upon pensions of Spanish-American War veterans.

In the Connally amendment, no exceptions of any kind were made. In the proposal which emanated from the House, and in the substitute which the Senator from New Mexico and I are now presenting to the Senate, there are numerous exceptions in which there are no restrictions against the amount of the cut. If time permits I shall refer to those in detail as I proceed, but I will say now that they are chiefly these:

The exception that the misconduct cases will not be protected against a cut of more than 25 percent.

The exception that the post-armistice enlistment will not be protected against the cut.

The exception that cases finding their way upon the pension rolls through fraud or misrepresentation of material facts or unmistakable error shall not be protected against the administrative cut.

Still, besides that, protection is afforded in two classes of cases which heretofore have been covered by regulations, and in which reductions exceeding 25 percent are permitted. Exceptions are made so that those regulations may stand. They relate to veterans who are eligible for pension but who are presently outside of the United States, and to others without dependents who are presently hospitalized at the expense of the Government.

These exceptions, Mr. President, all appear in the House proposition, and they appear in the substitute which has just been read at the desk. In these respects, both of these new proposals differ from the Connally amendment; and both enable the United States to make certain savings which could not have been made under the Connally amendment.

I am not prepared to tell the Senate the exact amount which may thus be saved. It depends upon administrative action yet to be taken, and also upon the construction which the Veterans' Administration may place upon the language of the amendment. That is especially true of the language adopted by the House upon Saturday afternoon, because portions thereof are most equivocal and subject to differences of opinion as to meaning. I should say, however, that the allowance of the various exceptions which I have summarized, giving to the Government the right to make cuts in the cases named, or to sever them from the rolls entirely, will result in saving many millions of dollars.

I have an estimate from the Veterans' Administration as to the savings in the cases of those veterans who are outside of the United States, and those other veterans who have no dependents and who are presently enjoying hospitalization at Government expense. The estimate is that if those two small groups are subjected to the reductions already ordered there will result a saving to the United States of something like $4,000,000.

Now I desire to invite the very critical attention of Senators to the language in which the House proposal is framed; and before I discuss that language I wish to say that it is chiefly on account of certain provisions contained in the House proposal that I am presenting this argument.

I had been told, before the House proposal was reduced to writing, that it would accomplish certain results. I made up my mind that I was in accord with it or at least that I was content to accept the proposition which I thought was to be presented to the Congress in that proposal. I was told that an agreement had been made between Members of the House of Representatives and the President of the United States, and that the resolution would proceed along a certain line which I had made up my mind would be a proper one; but examination of the language employed by the House of Representatives in its effort to effectuate this compromise agreement, and to bring about a proper solution with respect to the cuts in veterans' pensions, has led me to the conclusion that the Senate cannot possibly consent to the language employed in the House proposal.

I think, moreover, that the House itself acted with but little understanding of the meaning of some of the language which has been adopted. The fact is that during a part of Saturday the House was in recess. A further fact is that the proposal was amended, and then amended again. It was reduced to writing in one form, and then reduced to writing in another form, and, finally, in its present form was presented to the House late upon Saturday evening. Senators know that from the time the House started voting until the time they concluded was something like an hour and a half or 2 hours; and the RECORD discloses that in that time very little opportunity was afforded the Members of the House of Representatives to arrive at the exact meaning of the proposal which they were considering.

Thus they sent it to us—sent it to us with requirements that I now wish to explain to the Senate. I hope Senators will not think, because I am assuming this responsibility to my colleagues, that I arrogate to myself any special knowledge of this subject. It merely happens that I have endeavored to the best of my ability to study the subject, and I hope that I may be of some little service with respect to it.

There is a number of differences between the House language and the language proposed by the Senator from New Mexico and myself that are merely for the purpose of clarification. I shall not discuss those now. They need not be discussed at all unless some Senator may desire, as the debate proceeds, to call attention to them.

The differences between the two proposals that are vital in their nature are three, and it is these differences that I desire to point out.

The first is on page 3 of the proposal which I am now offering; commencing on line 19, Senators will find this language:

> In all cases where service connection shall be preserved under the review herein provided, not less than 75 percent of the payments being made on March 20, 1933, shall continue, and the determination of service connection in such review shall be final in all cases.

Mr. President, this language is in the Senate proposal, but not in the House proposal. The House proposal dealing with the presumptive cases does extend certain benefits to the veterans. It is provided in the House proposal on page 3, commencing in line 12, as follows:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, the decisions of such special boards shall be final in such cases, subject to such appellate procedure as the President may prescribe, and, except for fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation, 75 percent of the payments being made on March 20, 1933, therein shall continue to October 31, 1933, or the date of special board decision, whichever is the earlier date.

Then follows certain language providing that the President may extend the time for review by the boards, providing that the President shall prescribe the rules for the review, and providing for the payment of salaries of those engaged in making the review. The essential point involved is that although the House resolution protects the presumptive cases against any cut greater than 25 percent until the 31st of October 1933, no protection is extended in such cases subsequent to that date, or in cases where service connection is granted by the boards.

Now let us come back for a moment to the Connally amendment.

The Connally amendment included the presumptive cases as well as those directly service-connected, and provided that pensions or compensation received on March 15, 1933, should not be cut more than 25 percent not only between now and October 31 but, so far as the permanent relationship of those veterans to their Government was concerned, their pension should not be cut more than 25 percent at any time.

In the House action we have, as a substitute, the provision for the appointment of the boards of review; the provision that from now until the 31st of October, or until such time as the review is completed, or until the further action of the President, the cut shall not be more than 25 percent; and after that date, or those dates—whichever one may apply—we find nothing except an eloquent silence. Therefore we may know that if the House language is agreed to by the Senate, the presumptively connected cases will be subject to whatever cut in compensation the Veterans' Administration may want to make, to any subsequent review they may undertake; and the action we so bravely took with respect to the Connally amendment, so far as these veterans are concerned, will be absolutely annulled and set aside. The position of the Senate will be completely reversed with respect to those veterans who heretofore have been granted compensation under the presumptive provisions of the World War Veterans Act of 1924.

Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate in order to discuss the justice or the wisdom of the legislative policy which permits pensions to be paid to veterans whose disabilities are connected with their service by statutory presumption. I have heretofore expressed my views upon that question, and many other Senators have likewise done so. Still others are in disagreement and disapprove the granting of pension to any veteran where it is necessary to resort to statutory presumption.

Mr. President, I think the whole argument in behalf of granting pensions for disabilities presumptively connected with service may be summarized in the statement of one fact, namely, that with some five or six types of diseases from which veterans may suffer there is no way known to the medical world whereby the beginning of the infection can be definitely established. The veteran cannot produce the proof. The United States, through its doctors, cannot establish facts in such cases. The medical world everywhere agrees that the exact time cannot be established.

There is, therefore, no way to know whether a case developing in 1922 or 1923 or 1924 resulted from an infection taken into the system during the time of service, or possibly just before the time of service, or just after the time of service. In order to meet this undisputed medical fact, the various Acts of Congress, including the World War Veterans' Act of 1924, provided that in those cases where the facts could not be established one way or the other, statutory presumption should result in the service connection of the case.

The presumption results in giving the veteran the benefit of the doubt, and in the establishment of service connection, where otherwise a disability, in fact, the result of military service would not be compensated.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. HATFIELD. There is no doubt in the Senator's mind but that 1 year is certainly too short a time, as I understand the limitation to be adopted in the regulations?

Mr. STEIWER. Yes, it is too short a time. I took the trouble to read the hearings before the special veterans' committee, to read the testimony taken at other hearings, during the time the policy was being formulated, and to read much of the testimony taken with respect to the World War Veterans' Act of 1924, and I find that medical authority everywhere holds that these infections may continue dormant in the human system for a very long time. I find much authority with which the Senator from West Virginia is familiar, which indicates that the date fixed in the World War Veterans Act, 1924, namely January 1, 1925, does not provide a presumptive period of sufficient length.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, there is no question in the world about that. There is no difference of opinion among medical authorities upon the subject of meningitis, and Parkinson's disease, that the period of incubation, that is, from the time the involvement enters the brain until the manifestation takes place, in the way of a tremor of the hand, and finally a lack of control of coordination, of the ability of the individual to walk, of the ability of the individual to feed himself, is over a period of anywhere from 10 to 15 years.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire whether or not the provision that the burden of proof shall be upon the Government in those cases does not answer the argument made by the Senator?

Mr. STEIWER. No; it does not. The provision that the burden of proof shall be upon the Government is a very helpful provision in a doubtful case. In disposing of a marginal controversy undoubtedly it would bestow benefits upon the veteran, but in certain other cases there cannot be any decision made upon proof, because no proof exists on either side of the case. Therefore, giving the benefit of the doubt as to burden of proof, when there is no proof either way, except that the disease became manifest within a certain period of time, does not solve the difficulty, except in a very limited number of cases where the manifestation becomes apparent 2 or 3 years after the war and after the separation of the soldier from the service. It may be, of course, that his disability is not the result of his service, or it may be that it is the result of his service. If we are going to exclude the veteran whose disability is the result of service in order to exclude the veteran whose disability is not the result of service, we are going to do a serious injury to tens of thousands of veterans, and it is for that reason that I am interested in these presumptive cases.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it happened that I was chairman of the committee which wrote the World War veterans' law of 1924.

Mr. STEIWER. The record which I examined disclosed that fact.

Mr. REED. I myself have the responsibility or credit, whichever it may be, of having written the presumptive clauses into that law. I mean that I was the author of the text which the committee recommended, and which was adopted. That was only done after long hearings of medical men, who testified as to which of these diseases might in reason and common sense be believed to be ascribable to the rigors of war service. It was not a reckless hand-out to the veterans, as so many people have pretended it to be. It was done studiously. It may have been mistaken, but it was done carefully and studiously, and we believed it to be just, and no more than just. I thank the Senator for permitting me to interrupt him.

Mr. STEIWER. I want to think the Senator from Pennsylvania for his contribution, and I may say that the examination which I have made of the record abundantly supports the Senator's statement, and discloses, moreover, that the consideration of that important subject started even before 1924. In 1922 a provision, not nearly so inclusive as that which was later agreed to, and not so broad in policy but yet a presumption, was considered and enacted. Over the years 1921, 1922, and 1924 the subject received almost continuous study at the hands of members of the committee, and various Members of the House and Senate, and I am sure the Senator is exactly right when he says that finally, when the result was arrived at, it was the deliberate and thoughtful judgment of those who had made a rather profound examination.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, as I understand the purport of the amendment of the Senator from Oregon, all presumptive cases will be subject to review, and doubts will be resolved in favor of the veteran. If the board which is to be constituted in accordance with the provisions of the Senator's amendment shall find that a veteran is not entitled to compensation, notwithstanding that finding, the compensation will continue automatically until October 31, 1933?

Mr. STEIWER. If the board makes its finding, and such finding is to the effect that the veteran is not entitled to compensation, the veteran is removed from the roll at that time.

Mr. HEBERT. I was in doubt about the language of the amendment on page 3.

Mr. STEIWER. Of the pending amendment?

Mr. HEBERT. Of the Senator's amendment to House bill 5389, as to whether in those cases where there had been misrepresentation or fraud in securing compensation, they would go off immediately the finding was had, but in other cases they would continue until October 31, 1933, if they were found not to be entitled to compensation, though there was no fraud.

Mr. STEIWER. If for any reason at all a case is held not to be deserving as a service-connected case, the veteran will be removed from the roll at the time the finding is made by the board.

Mr. HEBERT. I am glad to be advised of that. Those cases which are found to be deserving, and are continued on the roll, may nevertheless be subject to a reduction to the extent of as much as 25 percent?

Mr. STEIWER. Under the pending proposal that is correct.

Mr. HEBERT. Exactly, under the Senator's proposal.

Mr. STEIWER. But under the language agreed to by the House there is no restriction on the amount of reduction in cases kept on the roll after review. This is one of the objectionable features of the action taken by the House.

Mr. HEBERT. So that if the board which is provided by the amendment of the Senator, and which I understand is provided by the amendment adopted in the House, were to find that presumptive cases were entitled to compensation, and they decided to continue those cases on the rolls, notwithstanding all that, there could be a reduction of any amount in the compensation, and there is no limitation placed upon the amount of the reduction?

Mr. STEIWER. Not in the House language; but in the pending amendment the limit of reduction is 25 percent.

Mr. HEBERT. I wanted that made clear. I thank the Senator.

Mr. STEIWER. The Senator's questions are rather revealing, and very well illustrate the differences between the two proposals, so far as this particular point is concerned.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, I do not want the Senator to get away from what seems to me to be a very important point, namely, that in the presumptive cases it shall become necessary for the Government to prove that they are nonservice connected. I cannot quite get out of my mind the injustice of that. If it be true that under the law of 1924 there be a presumption in favor of the soldier, and he is now on the roll, and we place the burden upon the Government to show that he is not properly on the roll because it can be shown definitely that his disability is not service connected, I do not see that there is any great hardship in that, and I am anxious for the Senator to make that clear.

Mr. STEIWER. Within the limits of the Senator's question, there is no hardship, and there is no difference between the House proposal and the one which I am now offering. The chief difference is that in those cases where the board of review finds that the veteran is entitled to service connection by presumption, he may, under the pending proposal, be cut only 25 percent, whereas under the House proposal he can be cut any amount whatever.

Mr. HASTINGS. I understand that clearly.

Mr. STEIWER. I am trying to correct that. I am trying to bring some measure of safety to those men whose disabilities are found to be service connected after review shall have been had.

Now I want to take up another vital difference between these two propositions. In the House proposal, page 4, line 5, we find language which deals with the pensions paid "for directly service-connected disabilities." This is one of the most important phases of the House proposal and deserves our most careful scrutiny. The paragraph commences with this statement on line 3:

> Notwithstanding any of the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, in no event shall the rates of compensation payable for directly service-connected disabilities to those veterans who entered the active military or naval service prior to November 11, 1918, and whose disabilities are not the result of their own misconduct, where they were except by fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation, in receipt of compensation on March 20, 1933, be reduced more than 25 percent.

I have no quarrel with the main provisions of that language. It would appear on its face to be a restatement of the Connally amendment, so far as the service-connected cases are concerned. However, I want to call attention to the precise meaning of the language which has been employed. I read it again, "in no event shall the rates of compensation payable for" certain disabilities be cut.

The question is, what is meant by the phrase "rates of compensation payable" for these disabilities? It would be very easy to employ language which would make this proposal entirely clear and leave it without ambiguity. If it was stated that in no event shall the compensation being paid on March 20, 1933, be cut more than 25 percent, we would have a definite statement of the proposition for which the Senate voted at the time it agreed to the Connally amendment. It would state a definite and perfectly unequivocal matter of fact, binding upon everyone, known to everyone, and not subject to any speculation whatsoever as to its meaning.

In lieu of a definite statement, the House proposal is that in no event shall the rates of compensation payable for these disabilities be cut. It happens that in the Veterans' Administration the phrase "rates of compensation" has a technical meaning. It happens that in the Office of the Comptroller General practically the same or very similar language has been construed, and by the construction which has been placed upon it the phrase "rates of pay" has been distinguished from the word "pay" and in this particular instance "rates of compensation" may very well mean something different from "compensation." I submit to Senators who are interested in arriving at the meaning of this language that if the words "rates of" were removed from the sentence entirely and the words "being paid" were inserted in lieu of the word "payable", we would then have a definite statement, because it would then provide that in no event shall the compensation being paid be reduced more than 25 percent.

It happens, as the Senator from New Mexico stated, that in arriving at the compensation payable under the World War Veterans' Act there were involved two primary factors: One of those factors was the rate of compensation; the other the disability evaluation, which is arrived at by a disability table. Under the language as agreed to by the House of Representatives, although the rate of compensation would not be reduced more than 25 percent, the disability evaluation might be reduced to any degree whatsoever, and, because one factor of the equation is changed, this language leaves the proposition open, so that no protection at all is afforded a veteran suffering from disabilities directly connected with service. The Connally amendment, which provided that such compensation should not be reduced more than 25 percent, is completely abrogated, and there is nothing in the way of guaranty against prospective cuts in the cases of all battle-scarred veterans.

On the day the Senate agreed to the Connally amendment much was said by Senators in denunciation of drastic cuts—50-percent cuts, 60-percent cuts, 70-percent cuts, and 80-percent cuts, in cases of battle-maimed American boys who had lost arms or legs, as the case might be; men who had been wounded in action; men who had been reduced from rather generous amounts down to nominal amounts such as $8 or $16 per month. The administration of the law was generally attacked and apparently it was almost the unanimous desire of this body that some degree of protection be afforded those veterans and that there be a restriction placed upon the wholesale reductions, so that it would not be possible for the Veterans' Administration, in the name of balancing the Budget, to reduce these men from $80 a month down to $16 or from $70 down to $8, thus dishonoring the obligation of the United States to the disabled veterans who had made their contribution to their country in time of war. I say that was almost the unanimous expression of this body. Therefore we agreed to the Connally amendment.

By one vote only did the Senate reject the Trammell limitation of 15 percent. In agreeing to the Connally amendment the Senate gave expression to almost a unanimous desire; and we said, so far as we were able to say, that the Veterans' Administration would not be permitted to humiliate the whole Nation by repudiating the obligation to men who had made their sacrifice for their country; that we would not starve those men; that we would not make them beggars; that we would not send them out on the highways with a cup and some pencils to sell, or something of that kind. We expressed ourselves here in plain, unequivocal language. We restricted the cuts which could be made.

Now it comes back to us, Mr. President, with the language emasculated and so framed that there is no restriction left save the restriction which the Veterans' Administration may voluntarily want to apply in behalf of these veterans. It is because I am against that kind of a surrender that I have joined with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] in offering the substitute amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I should like to ask the Senator a question. As I recollect, those of us who were fighting for the Trammell amendment were informed by the Senator from Texas, who offered the Connally amendment, that his amendment would mean certain compensation, would mean something that was going through; and it was evidently in that belief that such a man even as our distinguished Presiding Officer broke the tie. In other words, it seemed like on the Republican side of the Chamber as well as on the Democratic side of the Chamber the more or less recalcitrant element, insofar as we were concerned, since we wanted to go even farther, rather acquiesced in that, because none made statements to the contrary. It seemed to be the view that we were sacrificing something to get a certainty. That was the impression that I got at the time, and I did not hear anyone dispute it.

Mr. STEIWER. I think the Senator is quite right, and yet I hope he will not insist upon a discussion of this matter. I do not want here to characterize my colleagues. I should like to accord good faith to everyone, and I now want their support. I should like to have this debate so conducted, if it may be so done, that we may all agree upon language which will carry out the manifest purpose of the Senate at the time they adopted the Connally amendment. We can do it better without criticism of our colleagues.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will let me add a word further, I meant by that that I think it was the belief of those gentlemen, as well as our belief—I think they all felt that way, those who voted for the Connally amendment—that it would mean certainty instead of uncertainty.

Mr. STEIWER. I hope that is true.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HASTINGS. I listened with much interest to the criticism of the Senator from New Mexico and also the criticism of the Senator from Oregon with respect to that provision which reads:

> In no event shall the rates of compensation payable for directly connected-service disabilities—

And so on. As I understand, and as was pointed out this morning by the Senator from New Mexico, it is perfectly possible for a man who is rated 20 percent to be reduced to 10 percent, or for a man who is rated 50 percent to be reduced to 30 percent. Is that the criticism?

Mr. STEIWER. No; not entirely.

Mr. HASTINGS. If it were—and that is what I understood it to mean—I was going to inquire whether under the law as originally written it was not entirely within the discretion of the Administrator to determine what particular class a veteran came under.

Mr. STEIWER. Not entirely, Mr. President. There was discretion, of course, in the Veterans' Administration in making proper evaluations of disabilities, in providing a table of such evaluations, and that was done, and under it the veterans who had suffered disabilities were rated by the rating boards and certain disabilities were fixed in each particular case. I said a little while ago, and I now repeat, there are two factors in arriving at the amount of compensation which a veteran receives: One is the rate of compensation and the other is the evaluation of his disability. To say that one of those can be cut down not more than 25 percent and to say nothing at all about the other of those factors leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the Veterans' Administration and takes away from the law the restriction which the Senate sought to put upon the action of the Veterans' Administration at the time the Connally amendment was agreed to.

I now wish to call attention to further language in the same paragraph, because it makes perfectly clear the construction for which I am contending. The last part of this paragraph, Mr. President, deals with compensation to be paid to widows and children and dependent parents. The language commences in line 11 and it is there provided—I quote:

In no event shall death compensation—

I omit some language—

be reduced or discontinued.

It does not say "the rate of compensation"; it does not refer to a part of the formula or to one factor of the equation; but it says in so many plain words that the "compensation shall not be reduced or discontinued."

So we find in one paragraph a distinction made by the technicians who formulated the language; we find with respect to widows and dependents that the compensation shall not be cut and that with respect to veterans themselves their "rates of compensation" shall not be cut. That distinction speaks eloquently to us and warns every Member of Congress that the reductions will be drastic beyond all justification unless a definite limit is provided by law.

We know where this language came from. The report is that one draft was made and then a disagreement was had, and afterward a new draft was drawn. I will not attempt to relate the incidents leading up to that, because I do not know what they were. We know that the Bureau of the Budget wants to balance the Budget at the expense of the veteran; we know that this proposal was called back and corrected, and when it comes back to the Congress we find a distinction in treatment between the restrictions upon compensation of the veterans and the restrictions upon the compensation of widows and other dependents.

Moreover, Mr. President, the language in line 3 does not say "the rates of compensation now being paid" shall not be cut or "rates of compensation being paid on March 20" shall not be cut, but it says "the rates of compensation payable" shall not be cut. That is a departure from the language which normally would be used in order to express the meaning that was implied in the Connally amendment, that compensation or pensions shall not be reduced below the amount paid at a certain time.

I may add, Mr. President, that two members of the legislative counsel to whom this matter was submitted agree with me in my construction of the language and tell me that if it is left in this way it will destroy the protection to this class of veterans.

I referred awhile ago to the fact that the Comptroller General had already construed similar language. It will be remembered that at one time the Comptroller General passed upon awards allowed by the Veterans' Administration. By the act of 1930, I think it was, we took away from the Comptroller General the right and duty to pass upon such awards and made the decisions of the Veterans' Administration final both upon questions of law and fact; but during the period when the Comptroller General was passing upon those awards a great body of law was written; decisions were handed down; they are in the Comptroller General's office and in the office of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs now, and they are the decisions that guide the attorneys of the Veterans' Administration in reaching conclusions upon questions of construction and interpretation of language. We know that by that body of decisions and rulings already made by the Attorney General the phrase "rates of compensation" is a different thing from "amount of compensation."

In the face of that warning I want to declare to the Senate that if we agree to the House substitute we do so with the knowledge that we are giving the veterans nothing; that we are yielding everything we stood for at the time we agreed to the Connally amendment, are permitting the Bureau of the Budget and the Veterans' Administration to deal with crippled and sick veterans exactly as they please.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President——

Mr. STEIWER. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. I regret that I was called out of the Chamber and have not heard all the Senator's remarks. Has he called attention to the fact that those words which he criticizes are contained in the printed copy of the amendment which he and I are submitting and that they have since then been changed?

Mr. STEIWER. I thank the Senator for calling that to my attention. I have not spoken expressly of it.

Mr. CUTTING. I think that should be called to the attention of Senators that the amendment as printed and on their desks has been modified in that respect.

Mr. STEIWER. I have, however, pursuant to my understanding with the Senator from New Mexico, modified the language of the present proposal. I modified it before it was sent to the desk to be read. As it was read, referring to the Senator's own proposal, we avoided the use of the word "payable" and it now reads:

In no event shall the compensation being paid for directly service-connected disabilities.

And so forth. That appears on page 4, in line 7.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The amendment known as the "Steiwer-Cutting amendment" as originally printed has been modified. The criticism which the Senator made of the Connally amendment in that particular applied with equal force to the Steiwer-Cutting amendment as first presented.

Mr. STEIWER. Not as first presented but as sent to the desk Saturday night. The clerk who copied it did not understand exactly what our purpose was and adopted the House language. When I discovered it, of course I modified it, and as the amendment was read at the desk the modified language was employed.

A third difference between the proposal which we are offering and the one agreed to by the House is with respect to the pensions of veterans of the Spanish-American War. It will be remembered that in the Connally amendment protection was given to those veterans, and it was provided that their pensions should not be reduced by more than 25 percent. In the proposal carried in the House resolution there is no reference to the Spanish-American War pensions at all. I am not going to argue this feature of the matter. I presume every Senator knows what his view is with respect to it. The plain fact is that the Connally amendment extended this protection, the House amendment strikes it out, and the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico and myself restores it. It is restored by the language at the end of the paragraph on page 5, the language being incorporated in one sentence, which reads as follows:

Notwithstanding any of the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, the pension paid to veterans of any war prior to the World War, or to any widow and/or dependent of such veterans shall not be reduced more than 25 per centum of the amount being paid prior to March 20, 1933.

Each Senator may determine for himself, therefore, whether he wants to accept the House proposal or whether he wants to support the substitute being offered here in order that protection may be granted to Spanish-American War veterans.

I shall not detain the Senate to argue the question. So far as I am concerned, and speaking for myself and the Senator from New Mexico, we favor extending the protection to those veterans. We favor it for many reasons, but chiefly by reason of the fact that the average age of these veterans is nearly 60 years, that they were separated from the service nearly 35 years ago, that the records are gone in many cases and in other cases are insufficient or inadequate, that so many have died that proof cannot be offered, and for other reasons all of which this great group of American veterans are under unusual handicap, and we therefore feel they are entitled to the protection proposed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Am I correctly informed that the House formula represents an expenditure of about $100,000,000?

Mr. STEIWER. I cannot answer the question. If the House formula gives protection to the service-connected disability to the effect that they cannot be cut more than 25 percent, that is one thing; but if, as I am assured is the case, it gives the service-connected veteran no protection at all in the matter of percentage of cut, that is another. Therefore, I do not see how anyone who wants to make an honest evaluation of the situation can assert any definite amount. I have viewed with amazement expressions that have appeared, which seemingly emanated from the Veterans' Administration, that the language would result in some certain saving. Whether it does will depend on what the language means.

Mr. VANDENBERG. For the purpose of salesmanship we are told that the House provision involves $100,000,000. My understanding is that the substitute proposed by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from New Mexico would not involve in excess of $120,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. STEIWER. That is possibly correct, but I would not want to guarantee those figures.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I would not ask the Senator to guarantee them.

Mr. STEIWER. I am perfectly certain that the amendment offered here by the Senator from New Mexico and myself will cost a good many millions more than the House provision. It will cost a great many millions less than the Connally provision. That is true, because the Connally provision was absolutely conclusive upon the governmental agencies and admitted no exceptions at all, whereas our proposition will enable the Veterans' Administration to protect adequately the interests of the Government.

We have included in it language that saves the Government from paying pensions in a large number of cases, including post-armistice enlistment cases, misconduct cases, cases of veterans presently out of this country, the cases of veterans who are being hospitalized at Government expense and who have no dependents, and that great class of cases where the award is based upon fraud or misrepresentation of material facts, or has resulted from unmistakable error. The accumulated forces of all these exceptions will make the amendment which we are now proposing much less in cost than the Connally amendment. It has been estimated by a clerk in my office who made an independent inquiry that it will be less by possibly $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 than the Connally amendment, but I do not like to underwrite that figure.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The thought I wanted to submit to the Senator was that if it is a perfectly orthodox thing in the view of the administration for us to accept the House proposition involving $100,000,000 without any supporting taxation to pay for it, we have not committed any very heinous crime against the Budget if we extend it to $120,000,000 without taxation, and knowing what we are doing when we do it.

Mr. STEIWER. Of course that is true. The essential difference between this proposal and the proposal of the House is not to be translated into dollars and cents. The chief distinction is that the House provision does not contain protective language which the Senate provision makes a part of the law.

Mr. President, I have concluded the discussion I want to offer with respect to the difference between the several proposals. For just a moment, however, I want to deal with another phase of the subject.

Some days ago, at the time this matter became the subject for controversy here and elsewhere, a communication was sent to the President by the chairman of the managing committee of the National Economy League. As published in the newspapers in quotation marks, that communication told the President to "stand for principle" and "that this is the time to clinch this principle." There apparently is a great principle involved in the attempt of these gentlemen to separate from the pension rolls neuropsychiatric cases and tubercular cases and other chronic cases of former soldiers of the United States, because they do not happen to be, under existing law, directly service connected. I say that the principle is not merely to make a certain cut. A Budget-balancing policy that has no object save to reduce expenditure to a certain figure cannot be based upon a principle that is worthy of that name.

The principle involved here relates to the duty of the Government to care for those who fought for the Government in time of war and who, on account of their service, were actually, or presumptively may have been, injured and who yet suffer from their injuries and will carry them through all their lives. I cannot see any principle in taking compensation from veterans for whom the war is not yet over, men for whom the war will never be over until they go to their graves, in order to effect a certain amount of cut in a Budget-balancing operation.

It seems to me that after all, even though we agree to the proposal which the Senator from New Mexico and I have made here, we are not extending very generous treatment to those who have worn the uniform. Let it be realized that when we compensate a veteran for disability, the most we give to him is restoration of his economic situation. We do not provide anything else in the world. That is not the basis upon which a generous Government ordinarily deals. When we settled up with the railroads we did it in terms of revenue and profit. When we made our contract with those who furnished money for the war, we did it by the issuance of bonds upon a basis of interest resulting in profit to them. When we settled with the war contractors, we settled upon the basis of profit in cases, and in most cases upon cost-plus, and we let them evaluate the amount of the cost. We let them administer the contract and we let them run the bills up which the Government had to pay. That was done by us on the basis of cost-plus, and the plus was profit and the cost was augmented so that the plus was augmented, and anyone who had a contract during the war drew some profit and the Government granted all that. But when we come to deal with human beings who took part in the war, the Government says to them, "We will give you merely economic restoration. If your hand is gone we will try to make you whole in a money sense by paying you compensation." We say, "We are going to cut that compensation 25 percent", and by the House resolution we propose to cut it any other amount, but we are certainly going to cut that 25 percent and say to the veterans, "Though all the pain and all the suffering that has been yours will still be yours, though the humiliation you suffer and the mortification you feel for the mutilation of your bodies, the humiliation that comes from sickness, from lacking courage and vigor of manhood, from suffering you have had and which you are going to endure, still continues, your compensation shall be reduced, perhaps discontinued entirely."

If a man runs his automobile over somebody he pays him for the injuries he causes; he pays him for the pain and suffering resulting from his action, and for the humiliation and the mutilation of the victim. All these things are considered and compensated for. But when a man offers himself in time of war, when the Government takes him from his home and puts him in the trenches, the most we can say to him is that we are going to compensate him for his economic loss, and all his pain and mortification and humiliation he must contribute to this glorious Government of his.

It seems to me that in such cases it is enough to ask of these boys that their compensation be reduced 25 percent. It is enough that we permit this thing to be done under that restriction. It would be an intolerable thing for the Congress of the United States to permit some bureau, in a Budget-balancing operation, to come here with legalistic and technical language prepared by the technicians there and make these boys the prey of the Budget-balancers, and permit them to be cut in any amount whatever.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STEIWER. I do.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator has been referring to the limitation of 25 percent on the cut. I heard the Senator say that additional flexibility was being given to the Bureau by the permission granted to remove from the rolls cases which were on there by fraud, misrepresentation of material fact, or unmistakable error. Did the Senator also call to the attention of the Senate the provision beginning on line 14 of page 4?—

That in the event of a change in the degree of disability of any such veteran the amount of compensation payable shall be determined pursuant to the provisions of the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and the rating schedule in effect prior to March 20, 1933, and such amount shall not be reduced by more than 25 percent.

It seems to me that provision is an important one, because it also gives the Bureau an additional chance to adjust the compensation if that necessity arises. That is something that was not in the Connally amendment, and I should like to hear the Senator comment on that.

Mr. STEIWER. I believe I have not referred to that provision, and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it.

One objection to the Connally amendment is that it was conclusive upon the governmental agencies, and it fixed the compensation at a certain percentage of the amount being paid. It did not permit any adjustments to be made in case the veteran should grow better or grow worse. That, of course, is not fair to the veteran. It is not fair to the United States. There ought to be adjustments in accordance with the disability; and for that reason, in preparing this substitute language, we wrote into it the provision to which the Senator from New Mexico has just called attention.

Mr. President, I have said all that I desire to say with respect to this subject for the present, and I desire to thank Senators for the attention with which they have listened to me.

EXECUTIVE ORDER—NATIONAL PARKS, BUILDINGS, AND RESERVATIONS

During the delivery of Mr. STEIWER's speech,

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator was so good as to allow me to interrupt him. I wonder whether he would permit me to interrupt to introduce a joint resolution and ask that it lie on the table. It is an emergency matter, or I would not make the request.

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. REED. I desire to introduce a joint resolution which I send to the desk.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I want to inquire of the Senator from Oregon whether the presumption mentioned by the Senator from Pennsylvania is not carried in this amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a point of order. The Senator from Pennsylvania interrupted the Senator from Oregon to say that he wished to introduce a joint resolution. Of course, that is contrary to the rules of the Senate and can only be done by unanimous consent. While a Senator has the floor, he cannot be interrupted for that purpose except by unanimous consent; in fact, the rules prescribe that it cannot be done at all. I think the Senator from Pennsylvania should obtain consent to introduce his joint resolution, and that the Senate should be permitted to know what the joint resolution is.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield, if it will not take me off the floor.

Mr. REED. Of course the Senator from Arkansas is right. If there had been any objection, it could not have been introduced.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Let the joint resolution be reported. Then any Senator who desires may object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the joint resolution by title.

The joint resolution was read by title, as follows:

A joint resolution disapproving sections 1 and 2 of the Executive order of June 10, 1933, relating to procurement and to national parks, buildings, and reservations.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no objection to the introduction of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution will be received and lie on the table.

After Mr. STEIWER's speech,

NOTIFICATION OF THE PRESIDENT

As in executive session,

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, members of the graduating class at West Point this year expect to receive their diplomas tonight. Their nominations as lieutenants in the Army have been confirmed at a previous session of the Senate, but the President has not been notified of that action. If the President be notified now, they may, in accordance with the custom that has prevailed for many years, receive their commissions at the time they receive their diplomas. If he be not notified, it will result in inconvenience not only to the students themselves but to the War Department. In view of these circumstances, and as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the several confirmations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—FURTHER CONFERENCE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate very long.

I wish again to declare my allegiance and esteem for and my fidelity to the American soldier; not only those who were the patriots of old, when America gained her independence and liberty, but those who have followed since those trying days when our forefathers gained independence and liberty for this wonderful land of ours. I have always honored the patriots of the early days of this Nation; but with equal honor and with equal tribute I appreciate and esteem the men of the great World War and those of the Spanish-American War and the men of the Union and the Confederacy of the sixties.

As the situation presents itself in my mind, there is here being waged a war between patriotism, loyalty, and devotion to country, on the one hand, and the dollar of the tax dodger upon the other hand. It looks as if thus far those who would place the dollar above manhood and patriotism and loyalty to country have won. My purpose is that, if possible, we shall check the victory they have attained through the amendment which was passed in the House and convert it into a victory for the veterans of our country. Those who wish may follow the Economy League, fostered by Morgan, the big bankers, the big corporations, and those who have no code of ethics except the furthering of their own selfish interests. For 2 or 3 years these men have carried on a war to drive many of the veterans into want and despair.

Up to this good moment the triumph seems to have gone to those who would worship the golden image before they would pay tribute and honor to the brave and gallant soldiers of the Republic. As for my purpose and my intention, I shall support the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. I think it is far better for the interest of the soldiers and that it will at least rescue them to some extent from the harsh treatment and the abuses which already have been perpetrated against them in the name of economy in this country. But for these brave men we would now have no nation to preserve.

It is useless to review or go over all the ruthless cases which have been brought to the attention of the Senate. They are numerous. There are hundreds of thousands of them. I have heard some persons say, when a certain case was mentioned of a totally blind person whose compensation had been cut from $100 to $20 a month, that that was an exceptional case; but if Senators will review with me my files they will find that it is not an exceptional case; that there are many other cases that will compare with it. I shall mention only one.

A poor man came here to see me at the Senate door a few days ago. He had formerly lived in Maryland, but now lives in Florida. He first called for the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], as he knew him very well. At Senator TYDING'S request I went out to interview the man. Both of his lower limbs were gone; one of his hands had been cut off, with all four fingers gone, and about two fingers had been cut off the other hand. He told me that he had lost his compensation of $200 a month for himself and $50 for an attendant, and that his total compensation had been reduced to $20 a month. It was a very pathetic case—a case where the man ought to be taken care of whether his disability is service connected or is not service connected.

Of course, we—that is a large majority of the Senators—have fought here for the policy of preserving the rights of the service-connected case. I told this poor man I would do all I could for him, but, of course, I did not have very much hope. He said, "The Veterans' Administration tell me that I can go to the hospital at St. Petersburg, Fla., and they will take care of me at that hospital; but the trouble is, I have a wife and three children. What am I to do with them on $20 per month?"

That is not an exceptional case, either. Senators could recite a great many others. These cases came to my attention before I proposed here in the Senate, some 10 days ago, an amendment to the independent offices bill providing that there should be no cut exceeding 15 percent in the compensation or pension of service-connected cases. I tried in that fight, however, to preserve the rights of those who had presumptive service connection. I tried to protect the Spanish-American War soldiers against excessive reductions.

Those of us who favored a policy of that kind had a victory won in the Senate for not exceeding a 15-percent reduction, and it was thoroughly realized on the part of those who were against it that we had won the victory. Then came the compromise proposition by Senator CONNALLY, which caught 10 or 15 votes, for a 25-percent limitation in preference to my proposal of not exceeding a 15-percent reduction. Upon this was a tie vote which was settled by the Vice President casting the deciding vote. It was thus that the veterans lost on my amendment of a 15-percent limitation.

I have no criticism to make of that. If a Senator who already had won a victory to the point of making the opposition seek a compromise was willing to withdraw and go with the other side, that was his privilege. That, however, is not the question which is confronting us now. That is water that has passed the mill. The question that is confronting us at this time is whether we will accept the House provision or the amendment as proposed here upon this floor.

I have read over the House provision. The question of setting up the board of review is, as I see it, about the only concession whatever that has been made; and that is nothing more than a gesture with no assurance of help for the veterans. I think it is all right to set up a board of review, but it is in no wise an answer for a remedy of the conditions we abhor and complain about. The board works under the direction of the Veterans' Administration. Unless there has been a change of heart on the part of those of this agent, their attitude is unsympathetic toward the veterans.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. The amendment which the Senator from Oregon and I have suggested retains the boards, but it does write into the law the principles which are to govern the boards in deciding individual cases.

Mr. TRAMMELL. That makes the boards that much more effective. As the provision is written into the House amendment, though, it contains no guaranty of protection of these patriots who have service disabilities against a continuation of the ruthlessness which has existed previously.

Mr. CUTTING. None whatever.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I am glad the Senator covered that feature in his amendment. I will concede, however, that as the House provision is worded it might bring some little benefit. It is a question of doubt, however, whether these boards would bring any substantial benefits to our veterans.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

Mr. TRAMMELL. What other provision is there in the bill passed and accepted by the House—many of whose Members were good friends of the soldiers, of course—that gives them any guaranty of protection? I challenge any Senator to state before the Senate any provision of the House proposal that will protect a soldier against any reduction that the administration may see fit to make in his compensation. It does say that while the board is carrying on its investigation, until October 31, or, if the investigation is concluded sooner, until the date of conclusion, the compensation shall be continued at a rate not exceeding 25 percent less than that formerly paid.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Florida has made a splendid presentation of the rights of the veteran. As he knows, I was glad to support him before and I am glad to do so now. I do have this feeling, that we have votes enough to instruct the conferees, and I wish that we might take the vote, because after we have taken action here it will be necessary for our conferees to convert the House conferees. I feel that the record made here is so substantial that the House can hardly fail to recognize its merits. I hope that we may speedily put the House to the test to see what the result may be.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I thank the Senator. I will accommodate him and stop speaking in a very few moments. I want to explain, however, that I do not see where there are any worth-while benefits whatever for the veteran in the House proposal. The pretended guaranty of no reduction to exceed 25 percent of the rate of compensation, as far as its effectiveness is concerned—and it is a legal construction when it gets to that point—is nothing more nor less than a catch gesture, which will not be binding upon anyone, and will leave ample latitude for the administration, if it sees proper, to reduce the compensation or pension even of service-connected cases by a far larger amount than 25 percent. There is not a word in the House provision that forbids a reduction of more than 25 percent in a veteran's compensation or pension.

They have been reducing service-connected cases heretofore all the way from 30 to 70 percent, according to my files. And with the House provision still allowing the same authority, what are we to expect in the future? What a triumph and victory those wishing to have unlimited authority to reduce the allowance to the veterans won in the House! The friends of the veterans in the House seem to have been put to sleep.

Do those in the Senate who are the friends of the soldiers desire to leave the bars down so that the already inaugurated policy can be continued if the administration sees proper to continue it? As for me, I do not want to have that opportunity continue, because I feel that whoever directed and controlled the dealing with the veteran under the Economy Act forgot all about them serving their country, forgot all about it being the duty of the Nation to pay tribute to those who defended our land in a crucial hour. They thought of nothing but dollars, dollars—economy. They apparently did not consider the rights of the soldiers, the rights of mankind.

What I plead for is that a touch of humanity might be put into the administration of the law, that a little recognition of patriotism and loyalty on the part of these men might be accorded. I have never seen the time yet in this country when the people generally have not honored their soldiers and their veterans. Some may think that they are appeasing a sentiment and a desire on the part of the people of the country when they regard slightly and condone maltreatment of the veteran, but if I am to gain my opinion upon that subject from those among whom I have lived, the person who has any thought of that character is very sadly mistaken and fools himself.

In spite of the effort to create public sentiment against those of us who have favored doing something to relieve the unhappy and distressing status of our veterans, in spite of the effort to bring us into disrepute throughout the Nation by broadcasting, I will say that I have not received one letter or one telegram of condemnation on account of my position in the Senate on these questions.

It happened that I was the one who made the motion to suspend the rule some days ago to attempt to help our veterans, and I was very active in the fight here that we might offer an amendment to this bill, as the RECORD will disclose. I prescribed a 15-percent maximum, and not one person has complained to me about my attitude. On the other hand, I have received letters and telegrams of commendation from thousands of the people of the country, and at least 25 percent of them have been from those other than veterans. There is no sentiment in this country to the effect that we should come down on the soldier and make him bear the brunt of the economy.

We all favor economy. I favor economy, and in many instances have brought about substantial reductions in expenditures. I have proposed economy a number of times in the form of amendments when we were asked to create new offices carrying salaries of ten or twelve or fifteen or twenty thousand dollars a year, but I have not had the assistance of many of those who now want to drive unrelentingly a campaign of economy against the soldiers.

I have offered an amendment in this body as many as two or three times to provide that salaries of officers should be decreased on a graduated basis, a bracket basis, starting with, say, $4,000 a year, beginning to increase by 20 percent, then 25 percent, and by the time we are up to $10,000 probably around 30 percent—I cannot remember the exact details—and when we reach the sum of $15,000 I know the suggested deduction was one third. I found on this floor but few to aid me in such efforts.

Mr. President, I have favored that character of reducing Government expenses. I favor the economy which would take 30 percent away from a $15,000 salary and still leave the recipient of that salary about $11,000 annually to live upon, instead of a policy which will take from a soldier, stricken, perhaps, by blindness or by lameness from the loss of a leg or an arm, or otherwise helpless, 30 percent to 70 percent of his compensation or pension in service-connected cases.

I believe in the character of economy which would go over this bill to which we now have this amendment attached—the independent offices appropriation bill—and sweep a hundred or two hundred million dollars out of the bill proposed to be appropriated from any unessential things. I heard a man well acquainted with Government affairs say a few days ago that he could take this independent offices bill and go through it carefully and cut out over $200,000,000 of unnecessary items, an amount sufficient to take care of all justice demanded by some of us for veterans. But that is not done.

These matters are a little foreign, yet they have some bearing upon the subject, especially upon the question of economy, when, as I see the picture, the principal effort has been to make the soldiers bear the brunt of the economy. I believe that is contrary to the wishes and sentiments of the American people, except of those who unthoughtfully have been led and dominated by the Economy League. That league has been composed mostly of people of wealth and affluence, of people drawing good salaries and retirement compensation, one drawing a Government salary and retirement pay in a total sum of about $20,000 annually. Yet they have gone all over the country and said, "You have to have a certain amount of reduction in the compensation of the soldiers." They fixed a certain amount to which they thought the compensation ought to be reduced. Some others have tried to follow their suggestions as to the amount of reduction asked. A great many innocent people have fallen into the clamor, because they really did not know the situation. But now they are becoming awakened.

I think the veterans' roll needed revision. There were a great many on the roll who should not have been there. I think there were others, not service-connected, getting more than they should have received, so that there should have been a general revision a hundred times over. However, these veterans were honestly upon the rolls. But whatever was done with the veterans' roll should not have been done in an indiscriminate and a disorderly manner. It should have been carried out sympathetically.

Mr. President, I believe that under the amendment proposed by the two Senators, with instructions to the conferees, we will get better results, that there will be no injury to the Government, and that there will be no danger to plans of economy. For that reason and others I plead for the adoption of the Steiwer and Cutting amendment.

I take this position because I see absolutely nothing except an empty vessel in the House provision. Some may take refuge behind the House provision and vainly retreat behind it as an alibi, but because it means so very little for the veterans when they are entitled to more, I anticipate the alibi will not be accepted by the veterans or those who honor and esteem them. The House has totally ignored the Spanish-American War veterans and their widows. We know what has happened to the Spanish-American War veterans before. The Veterans' Administration cut their allowances down to $6 a month and cut the widows off the roll entirely.

The House would leave it as an open question for the future as to whether or not an old Spanish-American War veteran 67 years old—and I am citing a case which came to my personal attention—with a wife and 3 or 4 children, who claims he has a service-connection disability, shall be totally ignored, and that his compensation shall be reduced, as it has been reduced, to $6 a month. The poor old fellow to whom I have referred wrote to me, "I do not know what to do. If I seek to get employment in commercial channels, or seek a Government position, everybody says I am too old. I am enfeebled. The Government refuses to give me more than $6 a month. The Government says I am too old to take a position."

Yet the House provision does not protect him against any kind of reduction. It does not provide the widows of Spanish-American War veterans any security whatever. I do not know why it was that they should have ignored them and made of them the forgotten men and women. I know a great many Spanish-American War veterans. During that war I had a very close association with thousands of them. I was quite a lad during the Spanish-American War, but I know that those with whom I was associated in camps and at ports of embarkation were all patriotic men, men who loved their country, and their services were volunteered to the country. I do not like the idea of turning the stony heart upon them. Most of them are over 60, and thousands of them are enfeebled and in distress and want.

Mr. President, the scene is quite different now from what it was 15 years ago. Fifteen years ago throughout this country, at the call of our great President at that time, hundreds, thousands, and not only thousands, but millions, of the stalwart, brave, and loyal young men of this country rallied to its call. Those men went into training, they went forth across the seas, and sustained America's traditions for patriotic men, brave and loyal men. They acquitted themselves with honor and credit to the Nation.

At that time throughout the Nation, in all parts of the country which I happened to visit, there was nothing but praise for these devoted men, and when they returned to their homeland we witnessed a great people thrilled with sentiments of honor and praise for them. What a tragedy it seems that in the passing of only 15 years it appears that at least to an extent among many of our people and a good many of our officials the heart has become cold and stony, and they no longer honor and give credit to those men who honored their country and served it creditably. As for me, I still honor these men, I still want the Nation to pay to them a fitting tribute, and that is why I shall vote for the most liberal legislation before me which I can support at this time on the question of compensation. Just one word, I believe, in all this upheaval, the veterans should be paid cash for their compensation certificates.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to detain the Senate long upon this subject. I favor the motion made by the distinguished Senator from Oregon. I favor the amendment which has been offered jointly by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico and the distinguished Senator from Oregon.

I favor this amendment, Mr. President, because it is right. It is not all that we should do for the World War veterans. But if we can accomplish this, it is about all that we can do under the policy of the present administration, and it is about all a veteran can expect under the present regime. We are doing little, indeed, through this amendment for the Spanish-American War veteran; but if this instruction is not given to the conferees, and the amendment which goes with it is not adopted, it will mean that practically the entire Spanish-American War group of soldiers will be left out, without any protection whatever given to them except the 12½ percent of this group who can easily prove service connection for their disabilities.

Speaking as a man of the medical profession, there is no question about the presumptive period of 5 years being too short as to many of the diseases which find lodgment in the human body and which develop after a much longer period of incubation than the 1-year period which has been ordained by the President through the Veterans' Administration. In fact, many of the germs remain dormant and do not develop into some secondary manifestation until a period of sometimes 15 or more years has elapsed after the germs have entered the human body.

When we take into consideration the character of the diseases which the Spanish-American War veterans were stricken with, such as the different forms of dysentery, typhoid, and paratyphoid, and when at that time neither sanitary nor immunization practices or methods were used or even known, I submit a great injustice has been done to these veterans by the regulations adopted, the changes made in the Senate amendment by the House, especially when the War Department medical records at that time had been acknowledged to be very inaccurate and incomplete. The Senate amendment had for its purpose the correction of an injustice which was inflicted on the veterans by the President's orders as provided in the so-called "economy bill."

I feel, however, Mr. President, that in the beginning of the debate upon this bill, which involves the veterans, when it was first considered by this body, a sufficient amount of positive proof was presented in justification for the adoption of the Senate amendment.

Now we find that the Connally amendment has been practically destroyed in the protection it would afford to the World War veterans and in the protection it would afford to the Spanish-American War veterans; and, in view of that fact, I feel that there is nothing left to do upon the part of those who stand for relief and protection of the veterans than to vote for the motion which has been made by the distinguished Senator from Oregon. Therefore, when my name shall be called, Mr. President, it will afford me much pleasure to vote for the adoption of the amendment presented by him and the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BYRNES obtained the floor.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Copeland	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Ashurst	Costigan	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Cutting	King	Russell
Bachman	Dickinson	La Follette	Schall
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Bankhead	Dill	Logan	Shipstead
Barbour	Duffy	Lonergan	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	Long	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McAdoo	Stephens
Bone	Fletcher	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	George	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	Glass	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulow	Gore	Murphy	Tydings
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg

Capper	Hastings	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hatfield	Overton	Walcott
Carey	Hayden	Pope	Walsh
Clark	Hebert	Reed	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson	Reynolds	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have a telegram bearing upon the subject which we are now discussing, and ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OTEEN, N.C., June 12, 1933.

United States Senator W. E. BORAH,
Senate Chamber:

One hundred beds have been ordered available for workers in reforestation camps at Oteen Hospital. Some patients already here, with transportation paid by Government to and from hospital. Men are not ex-service. Veterans of wars to get in hospital must be totally disabled, destitute, and can get in hospital only when legion or friends pay their transportation. Please use your influence to defeat Presidential compromise passed by House.

D. D. SILVERMAN,
Commander American Legion, Oteen, N.C.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to consume but a few minutes in advising the Senate of the situation now existing.

When the independent offices appropriation bill was before the Senate the Senate added what is known as the "Connally amendment," an amendment under which the appropriations for the veterans' benefits would amount to $170,000,000 in excess of the amount reported by the Appropriations Committee. The bill went to the other House. That body disagreed to the Connally amendment, and adopted in lieu thereof an amendment which was, according to the information I have, framed by the steering committee. The House, on Saturday evening, after the adoption of that amendment, messaged the papers over to the Senate. This morning the Senate concurred in a motion to disagree to the House amendment and send the bill to conference. After the adoption of that motion the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] moved to instruct the conferees to insist upon the amendment which that Senator has been discussing for the last 30 minutes or so.

Now, Mr. President, we may as well understand the situation as it exists. There is no subject embraced in the Steiwer amendment which is not covered by the Connally amendment. The Senate has already adopted a motion to disagree to the House amendment and insisting upon the Senate amendment; and the amendment that is insisted upon is the Connally amendment.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, surely the Senator from South Carolina does not mean to say that there is nothing in the amendment submitted by the Senator from Oregon and myself which is not covered in the Connally amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. I mean that all the subjects covered are also in the Connally amendment, and when the conferees on the part of the Senate enter into conference with the conferees on the part of the House the whole subject will be open for the consideration of the conferees. If, however, the pending motion shall be agreed to, the Senate conferees will be instructed to adhere to the Steiwer amendment. Certainly, if I am to serve as one of the conferees, I would consider that I would be in honor bound to come back to the Senate unless the House agreed to the Steiwer amendment as it is written. That being true, how many Members of the Senate have had the opportunity to examine the Steiwer amendment? We adopted the Connally amendment after 2 days' debate. I admit that I have not been able to follow the Steiwer amendment today to determine the exact differences between the Steiwer amendment and the House amendment.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BYRNES. I do.

Mr. McCARRAN. Am I not right in saying that the Connally amendment was drafted here on the floor and was first sent up to the desk in the handwriting of the drafter and had to be redrafted from time to time? There was no 2 days' debate on it; there was not an hour's debate on it.

Mr. BYRNES. I said the amendment was presented and agreed to after 2 days' debate on the subject. If the Senator from Nevada understood me to say that there was 2 days' debate on the Connally amendment, I certainly did not intend to make any such statement, as the Senate is familiar with what then occurred.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; I yield to the Senator.

Mr. STEIWER. The proposal that was sent to the desk which was offered by the Senator from New Mexico and myself was sent to the desk Saturday night. It was printed this morning and it has been available to Senators all day in its present form, except that upon the last page we changed two or three words in the way of a modification.

Mr. BYRNES. I have had the amendment on my desk since morning, but I say again that I have not been able during the discussion to determine the exact difference between the Steiwer amendment and the House amendment. But, nevertheless, Mr. President, if the Steiwer motion to instruct the conferees is adopted, the Senate will understand that its conferees are tied hand and foot and must go to conference to meet conferees on the part of the House who are not instructed. Some Members of the Senate seem to believe that the House conferees are instructed. The RECORD shows that they are not; that the usual motion to disagree to the Senate amendment and ask for a conference was made. Therefore, I submit that the wise and sane thing to do is to send the matter to conference. Should the conferees report back to the Senate a provision which does not receive the approval of the majority of the Senate, this body can reject the conference report. However, in advance of the consideration by the conferees to instruct the conferees to adhere to a certain proposal will not hasten the consideration of the independent offices appropriation bill and may make it impossible for us to have any bill.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I understand the Senator from South Carolina to take the position, then, that if the matter goes to conference the conferees will have before them the Senate amendment which we have adopted, and also the House amendment, and it can work out something in between?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Texas is exactly right. If the pending motion should be defeated the Connally amendment and the House amendment then would be in conference for the conferees to consider and reach an agreement upon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, just a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield in order that I may ask the Senator from South Carolina a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. There may be some here—I am sure there are—who are not in favor of the House proposal. I am sure that many of them, just as I, would not want to vote against the Steiwer proposal with the idea that a vote against that proposal would be accepted as a vote in favor of the House proposal. Let me ask the Senator to state what will be his attitude as a conferee on that subject?

Mr. BYRNES. I will say this: The motion that has been adopted is a motion made by me to have the Senate insist upon the Senate amendment which is the Connally amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have no thought of delaying a vote on this motion. Let me state, however, that the adoption of the amendment will tend to produce a deadlock between the two Houses. Senators had unlimited opportunity to offer amendments when the independent offices appropriation bill was before this body. The subject matter of this amendment was debated at great length; a conclusion was reached by the Senate and incorporated in what has become known as "the Connally amendment." The House adopted what is in the nature of a substitute for the Connally amendment. Now it is proposed that we accept what is in fact a substitute for the House amendment. If this process shall go on, there will be no end to the controversy. I ask, therefore, that Senators give grave consideration to bringing about a condition under which the conferees of the two Houses may work out their differences.

Always in measures that are seriously contested there is a necessity for freedom of conference between the two bodies if conclusions are to be reached. The adoption of this proposal will make it necessary for the conferees to stand upon this amendment; they cannot in honor recede from it, if the vote be in the affirmative, without bringing the matter back to the Senate and thrashing over the whole subject again.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senate conferees, therefore, would not be able to negotiate with the conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senate conferees would have no power. The situation would be substantially the same as if the Senate adopted an amendment and then said to the House, "Unless you take our view of this subject, the legislation shall fail."

Mr. President, those who are interested in securing the enactment of legislation on this subject, ought to take these thoughts into consideration.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is the Senator's view that the best way to handle this is to vote down the Steiwer amendment and let the Senate amendment and the House amendment go to conference?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. We cannot pass the legislation unless the Senate approves the conference report. For that reason I suggest, as has been stated by the Senator from Texas, that the most effective way to reach a conclusion is to let the matter go to conference.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I yield.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Much that the Senator has said is true, but the House has already considered the Connally amendment and by its own action and in an open expression of its view the House itself voted to settle the question of the Connally amendment. Therefore would not the House conferees have their hands absolutely tied, too, as between the Connally amendment and the amendment which the House itself has already placed in the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, no, Mr. President. I will reply to the Senator from Florida by saying emphatically no. If the request of the House for a conference be granted by the Senate, as has been done under the motion of the Senator from South Carolina, there will be a free conference within the limits of the bill which has been passed by the two bodies.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood the Senator from Arkansas to say that under the pending motion of the Senator from Oregon the Senate conferees would be bound hand and foot to the amendment offered by the Senators from Oregon and New Mexico and would not be able to compromise.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Yes; they could not honorably compromise at all. They could not negotiate. All they could do would be to pass the Steiwer amendment into the hands of the House conferees and say, "Unless you agree to that nothing can be done." That is the moral effect of it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I want to say that the logic by which that conclusion is arrived at in regard to the Senate conferees applies with equal force to the House conferees if we do not adopt this amendment.

Mr. STEIWER obtained the floor.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The effect of the amendment of the House has been to agree to the Senate amendment with an amendment. They have not instructed their conferees and have not tied their hands. It is just as if the House proposal had been in the original bill and the bill had gone to conference with that language and with the Senate amendment known as the Connally amendment. They have not in any way limited their conferees. Their conferees and ours can negotiate a settlement within the realm of the difference between the Connally amendment and the amendment agreed to by the House.

Mr. STEIWER. Before I come to that, let me discuss the matter which I had in mind when I rose.

In the first place I point out that those who are now objecting to an agreement to the Cutting-Steiwer amendment are the same who objected to the Trammell amendment providing a 15-percent limitation. They are the same Senators who made eloquent appeals for the Connally amendment. Now, when we seek to present to this body a statement which results in greater economy than the Connally proposal they find fault with it.

There is, of course, considerable weight to any argument made against the instructing of conferees. I realize full well the force of the thoughts expressed by the Senator from Arkansas. But here is our situation: We found to our great consternation that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs was making cuts in veterans' compensation that shocked the conscience and the sensibilities of Members of Congress. After full consideration of that matter we concluded something ought to be done.

Exactly one half of the Members of this body were in favor of putting a limitation of 15 percent upon any cut which might be made in compensation for the veterans. The other half took the view that a 25-percent cut might well be directed, but that no cut beyond that should be allowed. Thereupon, without any dissent, we agreed to the Connally amendment and it was written into the independent offices appropriation bill.

After that it developed that in spite of certain assurances made here upon the floor by Senators acting in utter good faith that the proposal probably would be satisfactory to the President of the United States, in spite of the fact that many Senators voted for the Connally amendment merely because they feared that the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL] would bring a veto in spite of all the assurance, it commenced to develop that in reality there was objection from the Veterans' Administration and there was objection from the Bureau of the Budget. Certain influences were being brought to bear upon the President of the United States, and pretty soon it became known to the press and through stories that circulated about the Capitol that the White House itself had objection to the Connally amendment. We know these things to be true. We know that the action taken in the House was the result of White House influence. I make no criticism of that. I concede the right of the President to do the things which he has done in respect of this matter, and I make no censure of anyone.

But I bear in mind, and submit that every Senator should bear in mind, that throughout this discussion and in connection with all these negotiations word has been coming over and over again that if we do not accede to the views of the White House the President will veto the bill and go to the country. That is the prospect—that the President will carry his appeal to the country; that by radio or by other means he is going to make an appeal to the American people in the name of economy and in support of these cuts being made by the Veterans' Administration.

Do Senators know what is going to happen then? The President will hold up the Connally amendment to ridicule. He is going to say the amendment prevents cuts in fraud cases, as indeed it does. He is going to say the Connally amendment prevents cuts in misconduct cases and that men can contract venereal diseases and claim pension under an act of Congress. He is going to say that the Connally amendment prohibits changes where there has been improvement or change in disability in individual cases. He is going to say it prevents cutting down 50 percent the compensation of those veterans outside of the United States. He will say it prevents making any cut with respect to pensions paid to veterans who have no dependents and are being hospitalized at the expense of the Government of the United States. He is going to say the postarmistice enlistment cases are protected by action of the Senate and the Congress. He is going to say that the thing presented to him is an intolerable thing and that he is obliged to correct it in the interest of the American taxpayer by the exercise of his power of veto.

I want to get away from that situation, and in utter good faith and with full respect for everyone, joining with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING], I am offering a proposal which obviates all of these criticisms. It still provides for the 25-percent limitation of cuts as carried in the Connally amendment, but it provides also the exceptions, and by those exceptions enables the Congress to agree to a rational and fair proposition by which the Government can still protect itself, but the Veterans' Administration cannot carry those cuts below 75 percent of the amounts being paid upon March 20, 1933.

The question now is whether the Senate is going to permit the issue to be made between the Connally amendment and the House substitute. Are our conferees going to stand for a rational and proper proposition, or are they going to stand at all?

I am impressed with the fact that if there are no instructions the conferees may come back to us finally with the statement that the House conferees will not agree to the Connally amendment, and we will be in the position of either having to stand for the Connally amendment or else making an abject surrender. The House amendment not only does not provide for the presumptive cases, but it does not give protection to the cases directly connected. It does not give protection to the men whose bodies are full of shell and shrapnel.

The question is, are we going to surrender and betray these men who were called into the service by the Government of the United States, called by the draft, and conscripted by force of law. Are we going to betray them now and turn them back to the Budget balancers to be operated on and permit them to live in misery the rest of their days? I should rather meet all the difficulties implied in the remarks made by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] in full realization that instructing conferees does, in fact, work some handicap in the performance of their duties and send this issue back to conference with proper instructions so that the House of Representatives and the whole country may know what the attitude of the Senate is upon this important subject.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. What is the difference in the estimated expense upon the Federal Treasury between the Connally amendment and the amendment proposed by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. STEIWER. That is a most difficult question. I would answer it if I could. There is a difference of many millions of dollars. I cannot know how much. I had one of my clerks take up the matter with the Veterans' Administration. We discussed it with the chief solicitor and others. We attempted on our own behalf to make certain estimates. The result depends on the action of the reviewing boards. It depends on the extent to which the board offers protection to the presumptively connected cases.

Mr. WALSH. I assume the Senator's amendment has more elasticity than the Connally amendment and certainly eliminates many cases which everybody agrees should be eliminated.

Mr. STEIWER. I think it would eliminate every one of them if the boards do their duty. I can say to the Senator from Massachusetts that every case of fraud, of unmistakable error, of misconduct, of post-armistice enlistment, and all that kind of cases would be eliminated from the rolls.

Mr. WALSH. And the fact that the Connally amendment includes such cases is to the disadvantage of the Connally amendment?

Mr. STEIWER. Greatly so, of course.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. The Connally amendment, according to the Veterans' Administration, would cost $170,000,000 additional. Because of that fact $170,000,000 was added to the bill. The best estimate the Veterans' Administration can make of the amendment now offered by the Senator from Oregon is $135,000,000 or $140,000,000, due to inability to make a very accurate estimate. Would not the Senator agree that going to conference with the Connally amendment and the House amendment——

Mr. STEIWER. We would come out with nothing.

Mr. BYRNES. There is not a single thing to which the Senator has referred that could not be agreed to in conference.

Mr. STEIWER. I believe that statement is true.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEIWER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Some question has been made about the amount of saving. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] said the amendment which was agreed to by the Senate, if adopted, would add $170,000,000. What he should have said was that if we go back to the beginning with all these cases as they originally were, there might be that difference; but the President has several times revised these matters since that time, and there would not be that much additional.

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator is right, since the last revision.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am glad to have the Senator's correction.

Mr. BYRNES. The statement I made was based upon information received when the bill was under consideration before.

Mr. CONNALLY. There has been a great amount of misinformation scattered over the country about how the Senate amendment would add to the expenditures of the Government. These statements are predicated on the theory that all these boys were cut off, or cut down to $20, and so forth. That never has taken place at all; but in the meantime several revisions have been made, so that the amendment of the Senate would not add that much.

If Senators want economy only, and if this matter is going to be settled purely on the question of dollars and cents, cut off all these veterans; leave none of them on the roll; and if that were done we would save a great deal more money than we are going to save in this way.

I hold in my hand a statement from the Veterans' Bureau, which I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The statement is as follows:

JUNE 12, 1933.

Hon. TOM CONNALLY,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR CONNALLY: In accordance with your request there is transmitted herewith a statement of the effects of amendment to Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, introduced by you and adopted by the United States Senate.

This statement reveals (1) the estimated total expenditures for veterans' relief for the fiscal year 1934 under laws in effect prior to March 20, 1933; (2) the estimated appropriation for the fiscal year 1934, including your amendment and those amendments introduced by Hon. HUGO L. BLACK and Hon. WILLIAM H. DIETERICH and approved by the United States Senate; (3) estimated savings if the amendments under (2) are adopted; and (4) estimated savings if your amendment alone is adopted, and excluding the amount added by the House of Representatives for regional offices.

Very truly yours,

J. O'C. ROBERTS, Solicitor.

Estimates concerning the effects of the amendment to Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, introduced by Senator Connally and adopted by the United States Senate

1. Total appropriation required for fiscal year 1934 under laws in effect prior to Mar. 20, 1933	$966,838,634
2. Total appropriation required for fiscal year 1934 under Connally amendment (include $9,000,000 for Black and Dieterich amendment and $8,000,000 added by House for regional offices)	677,513,634
3. Savings if above amendments are adopted	289,325,000
4. Savings if Connally amendment alone is adopted and excluding the amount added by the House for regional offices	306,325,000

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Just a moment, then I will yield.

This statement says that the appropriation which would have been required for this year if there had been no Economy Act would have been $966,838,634. Under my amendment, if it were put into operation, there would be a saving of the amount of $306,325,000. Therefore, under the amendment adopted by the Senate there would be an annual saving of $306,000,000 under what we would have had to spend but for the Economy Act.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Oregon has the floor. I have not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oregon has the floor.

Mr. STEIWER. I will yield the floor; but before doing so I want to make an observation:

The statement made by the Senator from Texas is borne out by the information which has been furnished to me. We may also conclude that if the Connally amendment would still permit a saving of $306,000,000, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico and myself would save a substantial additional amount which has not been exactly determined but which would probably bring the saving up to the neighborhood of $350,000,000.

There is significance in that statement, because when the economy bill was before the Senate the saving that its proponents were striving for, the saving they said they wanted to make in order to balance the Budget, was $383,000,000. So the Senate can agree to the amendment offered here by the Senator from New Mexico and me and the result will be within some $30,000,000 of the goal which the administration started out to attain in the first place.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to say just one or two words before we vote. I do not want my vote against instructing the conferees to be misunderstood.

I voted for the Trammell amendment. After it was defeated, I voted for the Connally amendment. I am interested in taking care of the soldiers. The motion to instruct the conferees proposes not an increase, but a decrease.

It is my judgment that the Senate has a better trading position on the Connally amendment than it has on the proposed instructions. If that were not the case, I should vote for the instructions. I want it distinctly understood, however, insofar as my own vote is concerned, that it is not to be construed as a vote in favor of the House proposal. If that is brought back to the Senate by the conferees, I shall vote against the conference report. I believe that viewpoint is representative of the ideas of a great many Senators on this proposal.

While agreeing entirely with the objective of the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from New Mexico and having originally intended, before carefully studying the proposal, to vote for their instructions, I have reached the conclusion that those who really want to bring about the best possible settlement in the interest of the veteran can better do so by leaving the Senate conferees free to act upon the basis of the Connally amendment.

I recognize fully the idea which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] has so ably expressed, in that he has removed some of the features of the Connally amendment which some Senators may consider objectionable.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator realize, though, that there is a feeling among some Senators that if we send the matter to conference without instructions the conferees may just agree to the House amendment and let the matter go?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. That is the only reason why I took the floor. I took the floor because of the fact that I wanted it distinctly understood that at least insofar as one vote in the Senate is concerned I do not expect or anticipate that the conferees will accept this vote, whatever it may be, as an expression on the part of the Senate that it will yield to the proposal of the House. In my judgment it is inadequate. In my judgment it is unjust. In my judgment the regulations upon which the Bureau has been operating are indefensible.

Frankly, I am of the opinion that if there had been some changes in the Veterans' Bureau prior to this time and men had been placed in charge who are in sympathy with the present administration the regulations might not have been so harsh. Whatever may be the cause, however, the fact remains that insofar as a great many of us are concerned who believe in adequate compensation to the disabled ex-service man the regulations that have heretofore been issued cannot be defended.

With that viewpoint, and agreeing thoroughly with the objective intended to be attained by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from New Mexico, and approving the very excellent fight they have made here in defense of the veteran, I am compelled, reluctantly as it may be, to take the position that from my viewpoint I can best serve the interests of those veterans who, in my judgment, have been cut in many instances far below that which justice and fairness would require by voting to let the conferees proceed on the Connally amendment.

I do that assuming as one of the facts the statement that the Connally amendment would provide for a larger expenditure than the amendment provided in this measure; and frankly, that does not disturb me as much as I am disturbed by unfair and unjust regulations which may have been imposed or may be imposed. So far as I am concerned, I shall vote against instructing the conferees; and I want it clearly put in the RECORD, so that my vote may not be misunderstood, that in doing so I believe I am voting in the interest of the veteran, and to the end that the best possible agreement may be reached which will tend to rectify the injustices which have heretofore been caused by the regulations.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. We are all anxious to adjourn. If the conferees take the Connally amendment, and have due regard to the specifications in the Steiwer-Cutting amendment, and come back with practically the House provision, the Senate still will have an opportunity to reject that.

The only reason why I shall vote to reject this motion is because I have enough faith in the Senate conferees to know that they now understand the general sentiment of this body. The overwhelming majority of the Senate believes that injustices have been done; and, if I properly understand the House amendment, it practically eliminates the Spanish-American War veterans.

I desire, here and now, to pay tribute to that element of our war veterans. They were 100 percent volunteers. They suffered as no other body of soldiers in America ever suffered by virtue of the incompetency of our War Department to meet the sanitary conditions that a body of men brought together in that way ought to have had. We all remember the "embalmed-beef" episode, and the terrible scourges of disease. Whether the disabilities of those soldiers were service connected or not, they have a right to be recognized by our people.

Therefore, Mr. President, I join the Senator from Alabama in saying that if the conferees do not do justice to the men who have served our country in the final test of a man's loyalty to his Government, I, for one, shall resist any compromise that approximates what the House has sent here.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in reply to the first statement of the Senator with reference to the instructions that have been offered, I desire to state that the conferees have certainly heard that amendment discussed. They will have it with them in conference. I think a very excellent service has been performed by the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from New Mexico in the matter of the discussion of the House proposal and their own amendment. I am very hopeful that the conferences can take the proposed instructions suggested by the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Oregon and work out an agreement between the two Houses which will approximate justice, and which will be approved by the President, so that it may become a law, and the veterans may thereby benefit.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. CLARK. If I could agree with the premise of the Senator from Alabama as to the attitude of the conferees resulting from this debate, I should vote as he intends to vote. There has recently grown up in the Senate of the United States, however, as we all know, a custom on the part of conferees to disregard flagrantly the will of the Senate. That has extended to the point where, even after the Senate has expressed its will by record votes on important amendments, conferees in some instances have refused even to take the amendments into conference and have receded even before there has been a conference.

We all know that when this matter comes back from the conferees, if they agree upon a report, we shall have to vote the conference report up or vote it down. We shall have to take it as a whole. Therefore, in view of the practice on the part of conferees of this body of disregarding the expressed will of the body on important matters, whenever I have an opportunity to vote to instruct conferees I am going to do it as long as that practice persists in this body.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I desire to ask the Senator from Missouri whether he is referring to any action on my part.

Mr. CLARK. I am not, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Let me ask the Senator from South Carolina a question:

In the event the conferees should get into a deadlock over this matter, and the Senate conferees should feel that they could not do anything except agree to the House amendment, would not the Senator from South Carolina feel disposed, before making that sort of a final agreement, to come back to the Senate and give the Senate an opportunity to instruct the conferees?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, if that situation arose, I do not know of how much value instructions on the part of the Senate would be, if the House took the position that they were going to stand on their amendment without any change.

Mr. CONNALLY. There are two Houses, as the Senator knows.

Mr. BYRNES. I was about to say that, of course, the action of the two Houses would be required. I do not know what would happen if the House should take the position of refusing to modify in any way the amendment it has adopted.

Mr. CONNALLY. The reason why I ask the Senator the question is that there are many Senators here who are inclined to go along with the Senator from South Carolina and send the matter to conference, but they do not want to be tied and have the feeling that that is the last chance they are going to have to vote on the matter. They want a chance, if necessary, before the question is finally settled, to instruct their conferees or advise with their conferees about any compromise that may be reached.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, the Senate knows that the Senate conferees have not reached that position. They will have to come back with a report; and the Senate will have an opportunity to reject the report or to do with it what they please. So far as I am concerned, while I cannot speak for the conferees, I have no objection to saying that I know I certainly should want to consult with Members of the Senate if the situation described by the Senator from Texas should ever arise; certainly with those who have been most interested in this legislation and have expressed their views on the floor today.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I say just one word before we vote? We are not voting on the differences between the House and the Senate. The President of the United States and the House membership committee have been in conference. This bill originated in the House, came over to the Senate, and we amended it. Now, it has gone back to the House, and they have expressed themselves on our amendment, and have voted on it, I understand, as many as three times.

The President of the United States and the House, after considerable negotiations, have agreed on what they will do. This is more than just a matter between the House and the Senate. The President of the United States and the House membership have had considerable trouble in reaching an understanding. They have at last agreed and have submitted their agreement, and it has been published in the RECORD. Now, we have before us this situation: Whether or not we are going into conference on the final details worked out by the President and by the House, and not have our conferees instructed that we disapprove of it, and stand more or less by a more certain amendment in a different form.

We might as well understand now that we are going to have to say who is on the Lord's side. Those who are in favor of specific instructions will have to take a stand against what is in the recommendations of the President and of the House, and if our conferees come back with a report supporting the agreement reached, it is going to mean that the two Houses will again be at loggerheads. Congress is likely to be here a long time agreeing with the views expressed by the Senator from South Carolina and those expressed by the Senator from Alabama. Therefore, it seems to me that if we send these gentlemen into conference instructed, if they cannot reach an agreement, they then can come back to the Senate and ask for instructions. Time after time conferees are instructed, and when unable to reach an agreement, they come back to the Senate or to the House for their final instructions. If the conferees reach such an impasse that they cannot agree, it will take only a few moments for the Senator from South Carolina to come back and ask for instructions.

In view of the expressions of Senators this afternoon, I think, in order to save time, it will be better for us all to try to expedite the matter and give these instructions to the conferees.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have no desire to prolong the discussion, and shall not do so. I had concluded that I should vote for the Cutting-Steiwer amendment, but in the interest of a free conference, and believing that it is quite possible for the conferees, if they are left free, to reach a satisfactory agreement between the Senate amendment and the amendment made by the House, I shall vote against instructing the conferees. Inasmuch as I had concluded to vote for this amendment, however, I want to take the occasion to make a statement very much along the line of that of the Senator from Alabama.

I think there is nothing to be gained by a lack of candor. The Senate, in my judgment, will not accept the House amendment as the House has submitted it to the conference, and unless there is some effort to reach an agreement which will deal more liberally with the veterans, particularly the Spanish-American War veterans, who are left wholly to Executive order, when the conferees report here the report would be rejected, notwithstanding the fact that we are anxious to adjourn finally and go to our respective homes. I wished to make this statement before voting on the matter.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, this is a very unusual situation. For 4 hours this morning Senators have stood on this floor criticizing and picking holes in the amendment adopted by the House in the form of a substitute for the Connally amendment. It is amazing to me that no Senator has yet risen to defend one single word in that amendment. Not an argument has been presented to the Senate in favor of this proposition, which, as we understand it, was agreed to by a conference between Members of the House and the Executive.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to prolong the debate. I think, however, the time has come for some pretty plain speaking.

I am not interested in whether the vote in favor of the veterans is taken now or whether it is taken after the conferees come before us with their report, but it is perfectly obvious to me that we have more leisure and more chance to vote intelligently now than we shall ever have at any other time in this present session.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, the Senator realizes, of course, that if the conferees come back with a complete agreement, this proposed amendment will be in with a lot of other propositions, and it will be wholly impossible to obtain a separate vote on this particular matter, because we will have to vote the conference report up or down.

Mr. CUTTING. Exactly; and, furthermore, this matter may come before the Senate at 11:30 at night, when the Senate has already made up its mind to adjourn before midnight. It would be impossible, under those circumstances, to get any intelligent discussion of the issues involved.

The statement has been made that this amendment of the Senator from Oregon and myself has been placed before the Senate hastily, without any chance for Members to study it and find out what it contains. This is the only proposition which has been laid before the Senate which Senators have had a chance to study. We had it printed on Saturday night, and it has been on the desks of Senators all day today. The Connally amendment was never printed. The Connally amendment was suggested and drawn up hastily. It was adopted by the Senate within 2 hours after it had been originally proposed.

And what about this compromise amendment in the House? How long was it before the House? How much debate was there on it? Just a few pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD cover the entire extent of that debate. A few questions—very pertinent questions, I am bound to say—were asked, and the answers to those questions revealed unmistakably that the compromise entered into was meaningless and without value.

Now we are told that we can accomplish the same result by leaving this matter to the conferees, allowing them a free and untrammeled hand, and having them come back at some time in the future with something which, again, we will not have time to study and analyze, something which probably will not be printed. We will have every opportunity to make a mistake. Now we have something definite to act on, and it may well be that this is the last time in this session when we shall have an opportunity to vote intelligently on something concerning the veterans.

Senators heard what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] just said. We are getting tired of having conferees go from this body who are unsympathetic with the action of the body which they represent. I think I am violating no confidence in telling the Senate that I was informed on Saturday that the conference committee from the Senate was to consist of five members. By the rules of seniority, the five members of the conference committee would have included the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. Later in the day, after that fact had been ascertained, the decision was made to cut the conference committee down to three. That decision may not have been made in order to cut out the Senator from Oregon from the conference committee, but in view of the arguments which have been made on the floor of the Senate this afternoon, in view of the arguments which have been made to leave our conferees unhampered, I submit that it would have been of the utmost importance to have on the conference committee a man who had studied this law, who knew what he was talking about, who had proposed the most intelligent and most sensible and fairest compromise which had been offered by anyone, namely, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER].

If we are going to leave the whole question to the conferees—because that is what we will be doing if we vote down the pending motion—then let us be sure that our conferees are going to fight for the wishes of the Senate.

It is said that we would be tying their hands. That, to my mind, is utterly ridiculous. If the conferees are unable to come to an agreement, they can always come back to this body and to the body at the other end of the Capitol, and so report; and then both bodies can, if they desire, instruct their conferees in some other way.

Mr. President, I hope Senators will pause before they fall for any such argument as that. I hope that Senators will pause before, by their votes this afternoon, they cancel the votes which they cast last week.

Why should not the Senate instruct its conferees that this proposal is the minimum, that we will yield on the Connally amendment as it was written, but that we will not yield one inch beyond this? Then, if the conferees from the House refuse to agree to that arrangement, they can always go back to their body, and get a vote from their Membership.

I submit, Mr. President, in view of the parliamentary situation, that that is the only fair, the only just, the only honorable, and the only courageous course to pursue.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from New Mexico that, in view of the extraordinary parliamentary situation, and in view of what we know has gone on with respect to this matter, it would be, in my judgment, a perfectly fair request to make of the conferees that, before they agree to the House amendment, they report that fact to the Senate, so as to give the Senate an opportunity, if it desires to do so, to vote to instruct the conferees.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, it would be my view, in the light of the sentiments expressed by Senators this afternoon, that I would want to come back to the Senate and let the Senate vote before agreeing to the House proposal as written.

Mr. JOHNSON. And give to the Senate, before there is any agreement, an opportunity to determine what shall be done?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know that I would want to say that it should be before there is any agreement. My view would reflect what has just been stated by the Senator from Georgia, that before the Senate conferees would agree to the House amendment and submit a conference report we would come back and let the Senate vote directly on the adoption or rejection of that amendment of the House.

Mr. JOHNSON. The amendment of the House?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Upon any other amendment?

Mr. BYRNES. If the House had the good judgment to agree with the Senate conferees on our amendment——

Mr. JOHNSON. No; that is not what I mean. The conferees would come back here; would we then be permitted to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CUTTING]?

Mr. BYRNES. The Steiwer amendment, I will say to the Senator from California, according to the view I have of this matter, is included within the differences between the two Houses.

Mr. JOHNSON. The conferees on the part of the Senate will take it to conference?

Mr. BYRNES. We are going to take it to conference. At least toward some part of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Oregon I feel very friendly myself.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it is fair to say that I understand the Senator from South Carolina to mean that before the House amendment shall be agreed to, the conferees will return to the Senate, that is, as far as he is concerned, and give the Senate an opportunity to instruct the conferees as the Senate may see fit.

Mr. BYRNES. When we report to the Senate, the Senate can take such action as it sees fit to take—either adopt the amendment or instruct the conferees.

Mr. JOHNSON. Would the Senator have any objection to one of the authors of the amendment being upon the conference committee?

Mr. BYRNES. I am glad the Senator asked that question, and, in view of the statement just made, I think there can be no objection, so far as the other side of the Chamber is concerned, to the appointment of the Senator from Oregon on the conference committee; we would be delighted to have him; I certainly would be.

Mr. CUTTING. Would the Senator have any objection to increasing the conference committee from three to five, in order that the Senator from Oregon might serve as a Republican member without displacing the Senator from Maine?

Mr. BYRNES. I thought it was suggested that as to this amendment the Senator from Oregon should serve instead of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I would decline to be placed upon the committee in place of the senior Senator from Maine. I do not want to do that. If the Senator from South Carolina wants to offer to enlarge the committee, that would be satisfactory.

Mr. BYRNES. Then I move to increase the number of conferees on the part of the Senate to five.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in view of the agreement which seems to have been reached, it seems now that we ought not to vote on the Steiwer amendment at all. Inasmuch as the gentlemen have agreed to put the Senator from Oregon on the conference committee, and to come back here and report to us as to any agreement, it seems to me that we ought not now to have a vote on it, but that the amendment ought to be withdrawn at this time.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LONG. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTTING. The Senator's point of view, as I understand it, is that we should let this matter now go to conference?

Mr. LONG. I understood we had reached a pretty good agreement, that we were going to have the Senator from Oregon appointed on the conference committee, and the Senator from South Carolina says he is not going to consent to have this provision emasculated without coming back to the Senate for instructions. Having reached such an agreement on both sides, I do not think we ought to vote; we have compromised ourselves out of getting any votes now.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Do I understand before this matter shall have been disposed of finally, in case we are not able to agree to accept the conference report, that we will have an opportunity to vote on this question singly or shall we have to vote upon the entire conference report as a whole?

Mr. BYRNES. What I stated to the Senator from Georgia in response to his question, was that before the conferees on the part of the Senate would yield and agree to accept the House amendment they would come back and make that report to the Senate and let the Senate take such action as they saw fit, either agreeing to the House amendment or instructing the Senate conferees what position they should take on this one question.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator's intention really is to give us an opportunity to vote at some time on what is proposed now in case the conferees cannot agree?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from South Carolina to say that he would agree to enlarge the membership of the conference committee on the part of the Senate to five?

Mr. BYRNES. I made that motion.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am glad the Senator has done so.

Mr. BYRNES. I have already moved that that be done.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Because it had been my purpose, in case the motion was defeated, to move the appointment of an additional conferee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I should like to inquire of the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Oregon if they will withdraw their amendment so that we will not be in a confused situation, and take the Senator from South Carolina at his word in this matter? I think that would be much better.

Mr. CUTTING. I should want to be very clear in my own mind as to just what we were agreeing to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has upon his desk the names of the five ranking members of the committee who would be appointed conferees on the part of the Senate. He might name them, if that is the desire of the Senate. They are the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER]. They would be the conferees in case the motion of the Senator from South Carolina should be agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I have fully decided to vote for the amendment of the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Oregon, on the ground that it was better than the House proposal. We have already voted for the Connally amendment which is like the Cutting-Steiwer amendment, but, in view of the suggestion which has been made that we might get the Connally amendment and that the conferees on the part of the Senate will not yield until they come back here, I am inclined to join those who would favor withdrawing the pending amendment and let it go as it is.

Mr. LONG. That is what we ought to do.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I realize that most of the Senators are working to save time, but just as a prognosticator and forecaster, without knowing what I am forecasting, I forecast that this action is going to result to the detriment of the veterans of this country; and I would rather have had the motion with specific instructions adopted.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, we have agreed in such manner that we can hardly adopt it now. However, I do not want it to be thought that we are getting a black eye, because everybody has expressed himself that the veterans shall not be allowed to be betrayed, and with those assurances we cannot do better now, having agreed on all this, than to have the motion withdrawn at this time. I hope the Senator from New Mexico will take that course.

Mr. CUTTING. May I say to the Senator from Louisiana, without any intention of taking him from the floor, that I would want to be very clear in my mind as to just what the agreement is; and I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina a question. As I understand, the conferees are agreed that they will not accept the House amendment without previously reporting back to the Senate. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. That is exactly what I said. I can only speak for myself, but that is my position.

Mr. CUTTING. I am sure that what the Senator from South Carolina says will represent the majority opinion of the Senate conferees.

Mr. BYRNES. That is exactly what I said.

Mr. CUTTING. And now, Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina give us some assurance that the Senate will have some time to consider this proposition when it shall be presented?

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, yes, Mr. President; so far as I am concerned I would not want the Senate not to have adequate time to consider it.

Mr. CUTTING. I know the Senator is always conspicuously fair in his action on the floor.

Mr. BYRNES. I say, while I cannot control the time of the Senate, that so far as I am concerned I shall endeavor to see that that is done.

Mr. CUTTING. What I want is to make sure that at the last moment, under the threat of impending adjournment, we shall not be forced to vote on something which we have not got in black and white, and which many of us will be completely unable to understand.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no idea that such a situation could ever arise, and I certainly will do my best to avoid it ever arising.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, may I interpose a question?

Mr. CUTTING. Yes.

Mr. REED. The Senator from South Carolina agrees for himself that the Senate conferees will not accept the House compromise?

Mr. BYRNES. That is right.

Mr. REED. It would be a literal fulfillment of that promise if they accepted the House compromise with some very slight changes, but, of course, the Senator does not mean to make——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think——

Mr. REED. Will not the Senator let me finish? Of course the Senator does not mean to make such an evasive promise as that. I assume that he will not come to any agreement unless——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor. Does he yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. LONG. I yield first to the Senator from Pennsylvania, then to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BYRNES. I want to say to the Senator from Louisiana that if the Senator from Pennsylvania continues as he started out I hope the Senator from Louisiana will yield to me.

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania and then to the Senator from South Carolina and then to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. REED. I think I understand the Senator's thought.

Mr. BYRNES. I have the Senator's thought: That, after making the statement I have made the conferees could go back to conference and then seek to evade it by making some slight change, and then come back to the Senate and report it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it seems to me we understand the situation amply, and I hope the amendment will be withdrawn, although I will have to vote for it if it stays here, but, because of the assurance we have gotten, we ought not to force a vote. We are not going to vote now; we have gotten too much without that to try to win now; we cannot do it, and I am only holding the floor, hoping to save time and to get a better feeling, so as to get the Congress to adjourn. Mr. President, I inquire if the suggestion has been accepted or not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No one has made any request up to this time.

Mr. LONG. I will ask the Senator from New Mexico if the suggestion has been made, or not? Where do we stand?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Mexico does not control the situation. The Senator from Oregon offered a motion to instruct the conferees, and the Chair looks to the Senator from Oregon to control the situation so far as he desires to do so.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. STEIWER. May I, speaking for both the Senator from New Mexico and myself, state that I have just consulted with him, and we are agreed that the consideration which has been given this matter this afternoon has not changed our views with respect to the House amendment; indeed, as the debate has progressed, we feel that we are more than ever justified in insistence upon the proposal which we have submitted to the Senate. At the same time, we recognize the force of certain suggestions made here, and we are both pleased with the assurance given by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

We are disposed, therefore, to yield our point at this moment with the thought, however, that if a satisfactory agreement is not reached in conference, this or some like proposal will subsequently be offered in the Senate. We should like to have it understood, in withdrawing the motion made this morning for the substitution of the pending language for the House provision, that it is done without prejudice to the cause to which we attach so much importance; and it is done, not in a spirit of conceding the justice of the House proposal, but merely in the interest of an orderly procedure in the conduct of the business of the Senate. With that understanding we now ask unanimous consent to withdraw the motion, reserving our right to take further action at such time as the conferees may report the matter back to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion of the Senators from Oregon and New Mexico is withdrawn.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Pennsylvania, which I must admit I did not follow very closely, I do not want to have any misunderstanding. I have made the only statement to the Senate that I intend to make about the understanding. I have responded clearly to the Senator from New Mexico as to what I intended to do, so far as I am concerned. The Senate can either vote on it or not, as they see fit.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, in view of the multiplicity of requests for understandings and the probability that someone will feel hereafter that good faith has been violated, I feel that the best thing the Senate can do is to vote on the proposition of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon——

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor. The Senator from Louisiana has not the floor now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Louisiana if he wishes to interrupt me.

Mr. LONG. I thought the Senator had taken his seat. I beg pardon.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No. I feel from the statements that have been made, and particularly from the inquiry made by the Senator from Pennsylvania of the Senator from South Carolina, that now is the time to vote on this question, rather than to have it said some time later that the conferees have not kept faith with the "gentleman's agreement" that was made in the Senate.

If the matter were so simple that one could say just what has been agreed to here, I would not take that position, but I really do not know just what is expected of the conferees, except that the Senator from South Carolina has said that before the conferees will agree to the House amendment the Senate will be given an opportunity to register its opinion on the subject.

Mr. BORAH. That is the full agreement, and that is all that ought to be asked for.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I understand that; but the Senator from Pennsylvania has asked the Senator from South Carolina whether, if the Steiwer amendment is not adopted or if the House amendment is not agreed to, the conferees will evade their responsibility and agree to the House amendment with some slight amendments.

Mr. President, let us not get ourselves in this attitude; let us either vote on this amendment and deadlock this proposition, as I have already stated I think will be the result, or let us treat the agents of the Senate with respect and consideration. It would be regrettable, indeed, if the conferees should go out and in good faith reach an agreement with the House and upon coming back here have it said that in a conversation on the floor of the Senate some arrangement had been entered into which they had violated. I believe the best interests of the Senate can be conserved by taking a vote. I do not know what the result of the vote will be, but I really do not see that it is good policy——

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. Regardless of what the result might be of the vote on the Steiwer amendment, the fact remains, in my judgment, that the great majority of the Senate is opposed to the House amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the attitude of the Senate in disagreeing to the House amendment and in asking for a conference, as we have actually done on this particular amendment, is to array the Senate against the House provision. That is the attitude of the Senate, both legally and actually. The prospective chairman of the conferees has said that, insofar as he is concerned, before the Senate conferees agree to the House amendment the Senate will have an opportunity to vote upon it. That is a pledge, and one that I am sure will be redeemed. However, I do not think we should put the conferees under the suspicion that is implied in the effort to pledge them not to evade their responsibilities, as is done, I believe, by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. REED].

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. I believe it is the feeling of the Senate that the House amendment is entirely unsatisfactory. I have no doubt now, after what we have said, that if the Steiwer motion were to be put to the Senate we would vote it down. But that would not indicate the temper of the Senate. The Senate is in opposition to the position of the House. If the conferees come back with a proposal which is identical with or similar to the proposal of the House, it will be defeated in this body.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I would not assume the right to say how the Senate would vote on this or any other proposition upon which there has been no direct expression.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Has my colleague's motion to withdraw his instructions been granted by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator's colleague asked unanimous consent to withdraw his motion, and there was no objection. The Senate having already agreed to the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the only thing remaining is for the Chair to appoint conferees. If there is no objection——

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, in view of what the Senator from Arkansas suggested, I should like to get his idea with reference to a motion. If the Senator believes that the Senate should cast some kind of a vote on the question, we might at least express our attitude. Would he be in favor of a vote to instruct the conferees not to accept the House amendment?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I would not. I think we really have consumed about all the time we should on this matter.

Mr. BLACK. I am perfectly satisfied myself to go along as it is, but that is the only way I can see that we could get at the issue.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I think we have in a sense impliedly instructed our conferees by our disagreement to the House amendment and by asking for a conference on it. I think that is the parliamentary way in which to proceed. I believe we are wasting time.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator fully; but I merely suggested it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I think the Senate could and should rely upon the good faith of its conferees.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Chair about to appoint conferees?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is about to appoint the conferees.

Mr. BORAH. Then I have nothing further to say.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HALE, and Mr. STEIWER.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY BANKING ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1425) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933, which was, on page 3, to strike out lines 7 to 12, inclusive.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

LOANS TO CLOSED BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1648) to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to provide for loans to closed building and loan associations, which was, on page 2, line 15, after "same", to strike out all down to and including "purposes", in line 20.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am desirous of asking the Senator from Ohio a question. Is this the home loan bank bill?

Mr. BULKLEY. This is the bill to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act so as to permit loans to closed building and loan associations. The amendment of the House would have the effect of removing the specific limitations on loans that may be made to all closed institutions. I have before me the figures which seem to justify the amendment of the House. It is agreeable to the chairman of our committee. I did not think it necessary to take the time of the Senate to explain it further.

Mr. BORAH. I was at a loss to know what we were considering. I thought perhaps it was another measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had concurred in the concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 5) requesting the President to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 1580), the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, and authorizing its reenrollment with an amendment.

COMMUNICATION FROM SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have a matter that has been sent to me from the Secretary of Agriculture. There seems to be some misunderstanding with reference to a joint resolution which was passed and some criticism made of the Secretary of Agriculture. He has requested me to have placed in the RECORD the resolution (S.J.Res. 54) that was passed, and a letter from him explanatory of his position.

There being no objection, the joint resolution and the letter were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That nothing in sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code (U.S.C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203) or any other act of Congress forbidding any person in the employ of the United States from acting as attorney or agent for another before any department (other than the Department of Agriculture) or branch of the Government, or from receiving pay for so acting, shall be deemed to apply to any counsel or other officer of the Department of Agriculture if designated by the Secretary of Agriculture at the time of appointment as entitled to the benefits of this resolution: Provided, That not more than one such officer shall hold such exemptions at the same time.

THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, June 12, 1933.

Hon. ELLISON D. SMITH,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have recently read the statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 29, 1933, in connection with Senate Joint Resolution 54, purporting to state my intentions with regard thereto.

In order to avoid possible misunderstanding the following statement should also at once be placed in the RECORD. It is, of course, not my intention that Mr. Lee should deal with all the legal problems arising under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, which would be impossible, but that as special counsel he should, in such manner as I may designate, aid the necessary legal staff appointed by me for the administration of that act.

Sincerely,

H. A. WALLACE.

INVESTIGATION OF RECEIVERSHIP AND BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have in my hand Senate Resolution 78, which was favorably reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It provides for an investigation into receiverships in United States courts, and appropriates $10,000 for that purpose. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, does it apply to any particular district?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe it does. There is no limit in the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WALSH. Let it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S.Res. 78), as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate consisting of 5 Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, 3 from the majority political party and 2 from the minority political party, is authorized and directed to make an investigation of the administration of receivership and bankruptcy proceedings in the courts of the United States, with particular reference to the appointment of receivers and trustees in bankruptcy in such proceedings, and the fees received in the course of such administration, and generally of all matters concerning which information would be desirable in order to correct by legislation such abuses as may be found. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee or member thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress, and such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a day or two ago I investigated the legislative history of this resolution. I find that the resolution has never been referred to the committee having general jurisdiction of the subject matter. It has been referred merely to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. It never has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which would be necessary under the rule. Instead of that, it was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and comes here now in imperfect shape. Therefore, I object to its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the conference report on House bill 5755, the national industrial recovery bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5755) to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works.

(For the conference report see p. 5620, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. HARRISON obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. CLARK addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I think the Senator from Idaho was on his feet first.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I was simply going to ask if the Senator intends to make any explanation of the conference report, or whether he is simply going to call for a vote.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to ask me a question?

Mr. CLARK. No. I thought the Vice President started to put the question, and in that event I desired to be recognized in my own right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will see that Senators get recognition before the question is put on agreeing to the report.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I shall be very glad to try to answer any questions that may be propounded to me with reference to this report; but before doing so I should like to make one statement.

An amendment was adopted in the Committee on Finance with reference to giving the President power to declare an embargo against the importation of goods into this country where they were seriously affecting or injuring commodities produced in this country under the code agreement. We had prepared a substitute for that amendment, and it was offered on the floor by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH]. That substitute was prepared with a good deal of care, and by at least one expert representing the Tariff Commission.

There has been some confusion with reference to that amendment. As we all know, the Economic Conference is meeting today in London; and an impression went out—not only in this country but abroad—that the President did not have discretionary power with reference to the imposition of certain conditions and terms and fees when there were importations coming into this country.

I desire to say with reference to that amendment, Mr. President, that about all it does is this——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator give us the number and page of the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. It is amendment numbered 11, on page 6.

Mr. President, that amendment says:

On his own motion, or if any labor organization, or any trade or industrial organization, association, or group, which has complied with the provisions of this title, shall make complaint to the President that any article or articles are being imported into the United States in substantial quantities or increasing ratio to domestic production of any competitive article or articles and on such terms or under such conditions as to render ineffective or seriously to endanger the maintenance of any code or agreement under this title, the President may cause an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission—

When this complaint is made and presented to the President, we do not make it mandatory that he shall act, but he may act; and he may act by causing an immediate investigation to be made by the United States Tariff Commission—which shall give precedence to investigations under this subsection, and if, after such investigation and such public notice and hearing as he shall specify, the President shall find the existence of such facts, he may, in order to effectuate the policy of this title, direct that the article or articles concerned shall be permitted entry into the United States only upon such terms and conditions and subject to the payment of such fees and to such limitations in the total quantity which may be imported (in the course of any specified period or periods) as he shall find it necessary to prescribe in order that the entry thereof shall not render or tend to render ineffective any code or agreement made under this title—

And so forth.

In other words, when the complaint is made the President has the discretionary power of acting or of submitting the matter to the Tariff Commission, and, if he does so, they shall give it precedence, and so forth; and when the report of the Commission is made, if the President shall find these facts to exist—namely, that there are substantial quantities of importations coming in, or an increasing ratio, and that they are seriously affecting these codes—then he shall act, after he has found those facts.

The impression was received in England or somewhere that it was necessary for the President to act immediately and that discretionary power was not lodged in him; when, on the other hand, under this amendment the sole power is given to the President. He may act or he may not act.

Enough for that.

Mr. WALSH. There is no objection to that.

Mr. HARRISON. There cannot possibly be any objection to it, but there was some confusion and misrepresentation with reference to the matter.

Mr. WALSH. I think changing the word "and" to "or" was a decided improvement in the language of the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. That perhaps was an improvement, may I say; but in the committee, when we changed the first "shall" to "may" it was absolutely necessary, because if we had not changed it, and if it had not appeared as it does appear in the conference report, "may" instead of "shall", the President would not have had the discretionary power.

Mr. WALSH. I think it is a decided improvement.

Mr. HARRISON. Now I shall be very glad to answer any questions that I may be able to answer with reference to this report.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the Senator some questions.

Mr. HARRISON. We had a very difficult time in the committee. We went into conference early on Saturday, as soon as we could get the conferees together, and we had high expectations that if we got out of conference that afternoon, we might be able to present this matter to the Congress and gratify the wishes of all that we might adjourn Saturday night. So the conference committee worked all day in their shirt sleeves and finally brought out this conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to call attention to amendment numbered 50. That amendment originally read as follows:

Aircraft, aircraft equipment, and technical construction for the Army Air Corps and—

It was one of the amendments offered to the provision of the bill which permitted the President to prepare a comprehensive program of public works. Of course, in the case of all these large numbers of public works it is optional with the President as to whether or not any money shall be appropriated for that purpose; but the original language was as I have read it—

Including * * * aircraft, aircraft equipment, and technical construction for the Army Air Corps and—

The conferees have eliminated that language and inserted the following:

Heavier-than-air craft and technical construction for the Army Air Corps and—

The net result of that change is that no money can be spent and no plans made by the President to permit the building of lighter-than-air craft.

I do not care to discuss the pros and cons of lighter-than-air and heavier-than-air craft, but a committee of the Senate has been for weeks discussing that very question, and all members of the committee, with the exception of one—the distinguished and able Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]—have agreed that the time has not yet come for the abandonment of lighter-than-air craft as an instrument of defense in the Navy. The distinguished and able Senator from Utah entertains very strongly the opposite view.

I think the conferees ought to have kept the original language and leave the matter to the discretion of the President. Now, even if the Navy thinks it is important that we should have lighter-than-air craft, the President is debarred, as I am informed, from spending any money for that purpose.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption, this does not relate to Navy aircraft at all. I think it is generally agreed, both in the House and in the Senate, that the Army shall not engage in lighter-than-air craft building. This phrase relates only to Army building. We do not want to build any more blimps for the Army, but this amendment does not declare any policy with regard to Navy aircraft building.

Mr. WALSH. Does the Senator from Utah agree to that statement?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Then I withdraw what I have said. A Member of the House who was on the special committee called on the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] and myself and called our attention to this matter, and claimed that this language had that effect. So the elimination of the word "aircraft", and inserting the words "heavier-than-air craft", does not eliminate lighter-than-air craft for the Navy?

Mr. REED. It is a restriction only on the Army. It does restrict the Army from having them.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the Senator is right.

Mr. REED. I am sure I am right.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, in my opinion, the interpretation placed upon that section by the Senator from Pennsylvania is entirely warranted. While not pertinent to the discussion, I take the liberty of stating that if the bill had contained a provision authorizing the Government to expend large amounts for lighter-than-air craft, for dirigibles, I should have objected to the same.

Mr. WALSH. I know the Senator feels very strongly about that.

Mr. KING. The bill before us is not a military measure. It is a recovery measure. It is designed to furnish work for the unemployed and to contribute to the starting of industries. Recently Congress appropriated more than $600,000,000 for the Army and the Navy. This huge sum was to meet our military expenses for 1 year only. A part of this amount will be expended for naval craft and for the improvement of our Navy. Our Government has spent for military purposes more than any nation on earth during each and every year since the World War. An international conference is now in progress dealing with the question of disarmament. Our Government has taken a prominent part in this conference and is urging all nations to cooperate in reducing the military burdens of the world. Efforts are being made to limit the use of aircraft for military purposes. The bombing of cities and defenseless territory excited indignation during the World War, and nations are now endeavoring to reach an agreement concerning the uses to which aircraft, whether lighter or heavier than air, may be put.

I submit that it would be unwise for our Government to now appropriate large sums for aircraft or for naval craft. We should aid in every proper way to bring success to the conference referred to, as well as to the economic conference which so auspiciously began its labors but a few hours ago. If all efforts for world peace fail, if governments are to add to the military burden of the world, then we may be forced to join the melancholy and tragic procession that leads to sanguinary battlefields. It seems an ironic paradox that in a bill appropriating billions to feed the hungry and furnish employment to starving millions that we should make provisions for war and provide millions for military machines for use on land and sea.

May I add that when this bill was prepared, the committee referred to by the Senator had not completed its hearings. The committee had not discussed the questions involved or made any report. Only on Saturday last did the attorney for the committee submit what I understood was a tentative draft of what he prepared for the committee's consideration.

The able Senator from Massachusetts may have conferred with his colleague and studied the testimony, but in my opinion the voluminous record in the matter required considerable time to fully digest. I had no opportunity of hearing the attorney's report discussed as a member of the conference committee charged with the consideration of the measure before us. I was prevented from meeting with the committee, though its chairman. I understand the tentative suggestions or report of the attorney was accepted by the other members of the committee without change.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, I can assure the Senator from Utah that the Senator from Massachusetts was present and went over that report in detail before he assented to it.

Mr. WALSH. While I could not attend all the hearings, I made many suggestions and corrections to the report. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the committee did not accept the report finally. It was conditioned upon hearing the argument and views of the Senator from Utah at a later date. The committee was aware of the very strong views which the Senator entertained upon the subject, and we felt that he ought to have an opportunity to present them; but I will say that the committee was not in favor of the elimination from the Navy of lighter-than-air craft.

Mr. KING. Let me say to my friend from Massachusetts that the dirigible Akron has just been destroyed. All the other dirigibles except two that have been built since the war have been destroyed. The sister ship Macon is still an experiment; it is being tested prior to acceptance by the Government. Whether or not it will be successful no one knows. The Akron, which was claimed to have incorporated every device that skill and science could evolve to make it safe and of utility, encountered a storm and went down into the deep, carrying 74 of our brave men with it.

It should not be forgotten that no government on earth except the United States is now building dirigibles for military purposes. Great Britain, France, Italy, Japan all have abandoned them, but efforts are being made to compel our Government to expend millions for the construction of dirigibles. Let us wait and see the results of the Macon trials and also what other nations plan with respect to lighter-than-air craft. It is obvious if we enter upon the building of a fleet of dirigibles for war purposes there will be unfavorable reactions upon the part of this Government.

We will meet in January. If the Macon succeeds, and if the conference over in Europe which is to deal with naval aircraft, as well as with military material, and so on——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, it does not seem to me we should discuss this subject at this time, because there are other things that must be taken up. I have the utmost respect for the Senator's views, and I know how conscientiously and how long and faithfully he has studied this subject, and I respect him for his opinions; but it is a subject which is highly controversial, and one on which other Members of this body have decided thoughts.

May I ask why the word "aircraft" was taken out and the expression "heavier-than-air craft" was inserted? The Senator from Pennsylvania seems to know a great deal about this subject, having an interest from the Army standpoint. Will he explain why "aircraft" was taken out and "heavier-than-air craft" substituted? What was the object of that?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, there were two reasons. First, we have been fighting for years to get the Army out of the business of building dirigibles. It seemed wiser to limit that activity to the Navy, just from the standpoint of saving money. That was the first reason. This clause dealt only with Army aircraft. I think it was I who offered the amendment on the Senate floor to insert those words.

Next, as far as the Navy is concerned, it will have power, if the President so directs, under the language which the Senator will find on page 19, lines 2 to 6, to build lighter-than-air craft.

Mr. WALSH. The reason for removing the word "aircraft" and inserting "heavier-than-air craft" was to emphasize the fact that any aircraft to be built for the Army shall not be lighter-than-air craft?

Mr. REED. That is the first reason. If the Senator will let me give the second one for the RECORD, on page 19, beginning at line 2, the Senator will see that the President is empowered to establish a system which will include the construction of any publicly owned instrumentalities and facilities. Under that I think the President could direct the building of a dirigible. The expression "public instrumentalities and facilities" includes everything from a jew's-harp to a ferryboat, and it is all in the discretion of the President as to what he will direct to be built.

Mr. WALSH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. CLARK obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi whether or not it is not possible to work out some unanimous-consent agreement to fix a time at not later than which the Senate should no longer debate this conference report, with the understanding that we would not have a night session tonight?

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator appreciates the fact that the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is temporarily out of the Chamber. I have sent for him. I do not want to take any action until I have conferred with him. I think we can get some kind of an agreement along the line suggested.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield so that I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Bailey	Black	Brown
Ashurst	Bankhead	Bone	Bulkley
Austin	Barbour	Borah	Bulow
Bachman	Barkley	Bratton	Byrd
Byrnes	Glass	McCarran	Smith
Capper	Goldsborough	McGill	Steiwer
Caraway	Gore	McKellar	Stephens
Carey	Hale	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Clark	Harrison	Metcalf	Thomas, Utah
Connally	Hastings	Murphy	Thompson
Copeland	Hatfield	Neely	Townsend
Costigan	Hayden	Norris	Trammell
Cutting	Hebert	Nye	Tydings
Dale	Johnson	Overton	Vandenberg
Dickinson	Kean	Pope	Van Nuys
Dieterich	Kendrick	Reed	Wagner
Dill	King	Reynolds	Walcott
Duffy	La Follette	Robinson, Ark.	Walsh
Erickson	Lewis	Robinson, Ind.	Wheeler
Fess	Logan	Russell	White
Fletcher	Lonergan	Schall
Frazier	Long	Sheppard
George	McAdoo	Shipstead

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on the industrial recovery bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, that is being delayed, as I understand it, pending the consummation of a unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the pending question before the Senate, nevertheless.

Mr. LONG. I want to be heard on it, then. I want to speak a little while.

The proponents of certain amendments to the industrial recovery bill are undertaking to reach an agreement for unanimous consent as to just when we will vote on the report. The Senator from Mississippi has at this time retired in order to consult with the Senator from Arkansas as to whether or not we may reach a unanimous-consent agreement.

The chief bones of contention are the three points I mentioned here on last Saturday evening. The first point is the Borah amendment. The conferees have eliminated that part of the Borah amendment which would prevent price fixing.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not think that is quite accurate. We sought to prohibit price fixing when it would result in monopolies or monopolistic practices, which is the only kind of price fixing to which any objection has been raised on this floor. The words are very plain.

Mr. LONG. I shall be glad to have the Senator explain what that is.

Mr. WAGNER. The amendment is that no code shall permit monopoly or monopolistic practices, so that if price fixing results in a monopoly or monopolistic practice it is prohibited by the provisions of the measure.

Mr. LONG. I thank the Senator. Then, if the Senator from Idaho feels that his amendment is all right, I want to assure the Senator that I will feel that way.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I do not think the Senator from Idaho is satisfied with the conference report on that point, and I will say frankly that, speaking individually, I am not satisfied with it; but, as the Senator knows, we cannot always have our own way; we have to yield; and while I do not want to betray any of the secrets of the conference, at any rate, after a very prolonged discussion, in which arguments on both sides were presented, the amendment was agreed upon as suggested by the Senator from New York. It does not suit me, and I am sure that it does not suit the able Senator from Idaho, but it was the very best that could be obtained from the conferees.

Mr. LONG. I now yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not want to be yielded to now.

Mr. LONG. Very well. That, Mr. President, brings us down to the other two amendments, if I may refer to them for a moment. One is the amendment of the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. He is yet urging that amendment?

Mr. CLARK. It is my intention to do so as soon as I can get the floor.

Mr. LONG. I did not know. The Senator had voted against it once, but I assumed he had explained that, as I had undertaken to explain one of my votes.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator, in response to that suggestion, that I have never turned a flipflop at any time. I never voted against a bill and then changed and voted for it.

Mr. LONG. In this case I understood the Senator had voted for the bill and then to have voted against it.

Mr. CLARK. I will say, for the Senator's information, that I did not vote on both sides, but I did introduce some amendments that I thought improved the measure very much. I thought they were meritorious amendments, but they were not sufficient to make the bill palatable to me. I will say further—and I may as well say it—that my efforts were not very successful, because some of them were dropped out even before the bill was taken to conference.

Mr. LONG. I so understood. One of my friends this morning showed me the RECORD of the proceedings of the House, where they were debating as to why they did not leave the La Follette and Clark amendments in the bill—both Senate amendments—and the chief conferee of the majority was asked on the floor of the House why they had not done it, and he said, "We put up the best fight we could." Then he was asked if the Senate conferees would not stand for their own Senate amendments, or something like that, and the reply was, "Well, that is for the Senate to take up with them and not with us." I do not know any other implication that could have been given except that, as the Senator from Missouri said, the House conferees were explaining that they tried to get the Senate amendments in the bill, but the Senate conferees would not put them in the bill.

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes; I yield.

Mr. NYE. In connection with that debate in the House to which the Senator referred, I should like to call his attention to a little exchange between Mr. CONNERY and Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. CONNERY said:

> It has been brought to my attention that a liaison officer was provided by a Senate amendment, who was supposed to represent the Federal employees and act as a sort of advocate for employees who might be discharged without cause, or something of that sort. I understand that that was stricken out by the conferees. What was the purpose of that?
> Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the gentleman the purpose of striking it out. It was an amendment from which the Senate receded. The House conferees were not asked to adopt that Senate amendment.

Mr. LONG. That was rather kind of them, not to ask that it be adopted. According to another version, they told them not to adopt the Clark and the La Follette amendments. That being so, Mr. President, it appears to me that we have never had a conference on the measure. Until the Senate conferees have presented the matter to the House conferees, there has not been a conference. If the Senate conferees tell the House, "We do not want this amendment", or "We are not even asking for it", then we have not had any conference. We are entitled to a presentation of the amendments that go out of the Senate. That is the provision of the rules, as I read them.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say to the Senator from Missouri that I find myself in about the same position, because I offered an amendment, which was adopted, with reference to the Civil Service Commission after having been debated by the Senate. My information is that the House Members were in favor of it but that, as a matter of fact, the Senate conferees receded on that amendment which was adopted by the Senate.

Mr. LONG. The House wanted it, and the Senate conferees receded.

Mr. WHEELER. That is my information, but I may be wrong about that. It does seem to me, however, that when the Senate adopts an amendment it is the duty of the Senate conferees at least to go over there and make an honest effort to get that amendment in the bill, and not do what the RECORD of the House proceedings shows was done with reference to some of the Senate amendments in this case, as to which, as a matter of fact, the Senate receded before the House ever had a chance to adopt them.

Let me ask the Senator from Utah, who, I think, was a member of the conference committee, a question. I understand, for instance, from reading the RECORD—the portion which was read a moment ago of the House proceedings—that, as a matter of fact, the Senate conferees receded from some of these amendments before they were ever put up to the House conferees, and a vote was not sought on them.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with that.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator disagree with the statement made by the Representative on the floor of the House?

Mr. KING. If the Senator refers to the statement read by the Senator from North Dakota, I will say "yes."

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator from Montana that I intend to demonstrate, when I take the floor in my own right, that it was announced through the newspapers that the Senate conferees did not take into conference the amendment which had been voted on the night before by a record vote of the Senate.

Mr. LONG. It is plain there has not been a conference, then.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. KING. May I say to my able friend from Missouri that the amendment to which he refers, and which he argued with so much ability and fervor, was the subject of serious consideration by members of the conference committee.

Mr. LONG. I am glad to have that statement from the Senator. I had seen the statement to which the Senator from Missouri refers. I believe I read it in the New York Herald Tribune; and I ask the Senator from Missouri if I did not hand him a copy of that newspaper this morning with that statement in it?

Mr. CLARK. I will say that it was in the Washington Star on Saturday afternoon, and it has been in almost every newspaper in the United States since that time.

Mr. LONG. That being the case, perhaps the Senator from Utah had one idea and the Finance Committee had another. But, where does that leave the Clark amendment, which we adopted, to tax municipal securities that heretofore have been tax-exempt? The term "municipal" which I use is a rather broad term; it includes municipal, State, and Government bonds, according to my understanding, and I intend it in that sense.

The next amendment was the La Follette amendment, providing that income-tax returns should be public records. That amendment seems to have been disagreed to. I do not purport to say how, because I was not in the conference, and all I know is what I read in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as to statements made by various members of the conference commitee and what I read in the public press. My understanding is, however, that the Senate conferees were not very strong for it. I call attention, Mr. President, to this: Notwithstanding the fact that the Republican leader on this side of the Chamber, the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], and our Democratic leader, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Chairman of the Finance Committee, the two party organizations through their leaders, more or less, went on record against the publication of income-tax returns, but it was none the less adopted here in the Senate by a vote of 2 to 1. That having been done, the three points which I was hoping we might settle at an early hour, namely, the Borah amendment, the Clark amendment, and the La Follette amendment, remain unsettled. May I inquire, Mr. President, from the Senator from Mississippi, who has returned to the Chamber, were there some negotiations for unanimous consent as to a time when we would vote on the conference report?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I should like to submit a request for unanimous consent, if the Senator from Louisiana has concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at not later than 4 o'clock tomorrow the Senate take a vote on agreeing to the pending conference report and that after the vote on the conference report the Senate proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

If this request shall be agreed to, I shall then, at the convenience of Senators, move a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I inquire what is the status of the deficiency appropriation bill? It cannot be taken up except by unanimous consent, can it?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Oh, yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Not unless there be an adjournment.

Mr. LONG. That is what I understood.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. A technical question can be raised as to the right of the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill on this legislative day, if Senators wish to force it over.

Mr. LONG. I am not going to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, may we have the agreement read at the desk?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I will state it again, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas will repeat his request.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, a suggestion has been made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] for a slight modification of the request, and I will now state the request again, making the modification which he suggested, and, if there is no objection, I should like to have it agreed to:

I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed not later than 4 o'clock tomorrow, the calendar day of Tuesday, June 13, to vote on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to agree to the conference report on the so-called "national industrial recovery bill"; and that following the vote on that motion the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the deficiency appropriation; and that the Senate take a recess today until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

My first suggestion was until 10, but the request has since been made that I modify it, and I see no reason for declining to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder whether the Senator from Arkansas would not modify his request for unanimous consent by striking out the latter part of it? I have no objection whatever to setting a time to vote on the conference report on the industrial-recovery bill, but I think when that time comes there might be some objection to taking up immediately the deficiency appropriation bill. It occurs to me that perhaps we might by that time have some report from the conference committee on the independent offices appropriation bill.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Under the practice that prevails in the Senate, all bills are laid aside for the consideration of conference reports, and I should be glad to incorporate in the request an understanding to that effect: that after the hour of 4 o'clock tomorrow any motion or measure that may be under consideration may be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of conference reports. I think that meets the suggestion of the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. In that case, I have no objection to the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the agreement is entered into.

FARMERS' COOPERATIVE OIL POOLS

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, with reference to a conference report that was under consideration a few moments ago, I wish to state that one amendment went out in conference that I had submitted in the Committee on Finance. I regretted its departure from the bill. It related to farmers' cooperative oil pools, and provided that they might borrow money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for organization purposes upon giving adequate security. The authority was permissive and not mandatory. The amendment had the approval of the Department of Agriculture, and, as I am informed, of the Department of the Interior. It had particularly the approval of Dr. Tugwell. It had the approval of the farm organizations. Indeed, the Farmers' Union organized one of the farmers' pools. They have been organized in Texas, Kansas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico.

I have here a short statement with reference to the matter which I wish to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

In striking out section 303, title III, of the industrial recovery act, the conferees, for no apparent reason which I can discover, struck a hasty and unwarranted blow at a provision which had the united backing of the Interior Department, the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, the National Grange, the Farmers' Union, the American Farm Bureau Federation, and the Senate Finance Committee.

This amendment was inserted at the close of a 3-year study and investigation instigated by the Senate itself when it passed a resolution authorizing the Department of Agriculture to investigate and report on the extent and value of minerals as a farm asset and the best means whereby farmers, through cooperation, can preserve that asset as a backlog of agricultural security.

This investigation brought to light that farmers of the five Southwestern States have been doing for themselves in a limited way what the United States Government did for the Osage Indians in one of the most progressive pieces of legislation ever enacted. At the time of the Osage legislation this principle of cooperative pooling to give landowners greater collective bargaining power in disposing of their mineral rights was the cherished project of a leading Republican, Charles Curtis, who, prior to his retirement as Vice President, showed his interest in extending the privilege he had obtained for Indian wards of the Government to individual and independent farmers.

This amendment enlisted the interested support of Dr. Rex G. Tugwell, Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, who wrote a letter commending the pooling principle, which letter went to the Chairmen of the House and Senate Committees on Banking and Currency, then considering a bill to which the amendment here discussed was proposed as an amendment. Extended hearings were held in both committees, and Senator WAGNER stated that the amendment was acceptable to him as part of the public-works bill, which he originally sponsored, and which was later dropped in favor of the present Industrial Recovery Act. Hearings were then held on this amendment before the Senate Finance Committee and before the House Ways and Means Committee, after it had passed this bill (in connection with the oil amendments offered by Congressman MARLAND).

The loan here sought by these farm groups is purely permissive and truly self-liquidating. By comparison with anything else in the bill the total amount sought is extremely small and not one twentieth of the value of the security now yielding more than enough income to pay the interest requirements. The total amount sought will not at this time exceed a million dollars, all of which will go to the employment of farm organizers, and incidental small overhead.

The Interior Department is interested in the pooling principle because it makes a fair apportionment among thousands of farmers of minerals income, thus avoiding the incentive to waste and overproduction in the oil industry which is stimulated by every individual farmer seeking to get an oil well on his own farm regardless of market conditions. With this movement under way on the great scale contemplated by the farm organizations these cooperatives become the allies of orderly and progressive conservation and stabilization in the oil industry.

I plead with the Senate to refuse to concur in this conference report without inclusion of this amendment. In making available $3,300,000,000 surely it is not too much to include practically the only farm relief provision ever offered here which has had the united support of all the farm organizations, the support of the Federal agencies and the approval of all factions of the oil industry itself.

You are some day going to recognize this land-use policy. Some day the Government is going to recognize the farmer's subsurface minerals as a crop and apply to its orderly marketing the helpful guidance it has accorded through the Capper-Volstead Act to the orderly cooperative marketing of the farmer's cotton, wheat, livestock and other farm products.

I beg the Senate to instruct its conferees to persuade the House conferees to reconsider the action whereby they hastily and, I am sure unthoughtedly, struck down this important amendment approved unanimously by the Senate in its action on this bill.

PRINTING OF CONFERENCE REPORT ON BANK BILL

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, in behalf of the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], I ask unanimous consent to file at any time before midnight tonight the conference report on the Glass banking bill for printing in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert:

"That the short title of this act shall be the 'Banking Act of 1933.'

"SEC. 2. As used in this act and in any provision of law amended by this act—

"(a) The terms 'banks', 'national bank', 'national banking association', 'member bank', 'board', 'district', and 'reserve bank' shall have the meanings assigned to them in section 1 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

"(b) Except where otherwise specifically provided, the term 'affiliate' shall include any corporation, business trust, association, or other similar organization—

"(1) Of which a member bank, directly or indirectly, owns or controls either a majority of the voting shares or more than 50 percent of the number of shares voted for the election of its directors, trustees, or other persons exercising similar functions at the preceding election, or controls in any manner the election of a majority of its directors, trustees, or other persons exercising similar functions; or

"(2) Of which control is held, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or in any other manner, by the shareholders of a member bank who own or control either a majority of the shares of such bank or more than 50 percent of the number of shares voted for the election of directors of such bank at the preceding election, or by trustees for the benefit of the shareholders of any such bank; or

"(3) Of which a majority of its directors, trustees, or other persons exercising similar functions are directors of any one member bank.

"(c) The term 'holding company affiliate' shall include any corporation, business trust, association, or other similar organization—

"(1) Which owns or controls, directly or indirectly, either a majority of the shares of capital stock of a member bank or more than 50 percent of the number of shares voted for the election of directors of any one bank at the preceding election, or controls in any manner the election of a majority of the directors of any one bank; or

"(2) For the benefit of whose shareholders or members all or substantially all the capital stock of a member bank is held by trustees.

"SEC. 3. (a) The fourth paragraph after paragraph 'Eighth' of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 301), is amended to read as follows:

"'Said board of directors shall administer the affairs of said bank fairly and impartially and without discrimination in favor of or against any member bank or banks and may, subject to the provisions of law and the orders of the Federal Reserve Board, extend to each member bank such discounts, advancements, and accommodations as may be safely and reasonably made with due regard for the claims and demands of other member banks, the maintenance of sound credit conditions, and the accommodation of commerce, industry, and agriculture. The Federal Reserve Board may prescribe regulations further defining within the limitations of this act the conditions under which discounts, advancements, and the accommodations may be extended to member banks. Each Federal Reserve bank shall keep itself informed of the general character and amount of the loans and investments of its member banks with a view to ascertaining whether undue use is being made of bank credit for the speculative carrying of or trading in securities, real estate, or commodities, or for any other purpose inconsistent with the maintenance of sound credit conditions; and, in determining whether to grant or refuse advances, rediscounts, or other credit accommodations, the Federal Reserve bank shall give consideration to such information. The chairman of the Federal Reserve bank shall report to the Federal Reserve Board any such undue use of bank credit by any member bank, together with his recommendation. Whenever, in the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board, any member bank is making such undue use of bank credit, the Board may, in its discretion, after reasonable notice and an opportunity for a hearing, suspend such bank from the use of the credit facilities of the Federal Reserve System and may terminate such suspension or may renew it from time to time.'"

"(b) The paragraph of section 4 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 304), which commences with the words 'The Federal Reserve Board shall classify' is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That whenever any two or more member banks within the same Federal Reserve district are affiliated with the same holding company affiliate, participation by such member banks in any such nomination or election shall be confined to one of such banks, which may be designated for the purpose by such holding company affiliate.'

"SEC. 4. The first paragraph of section 7 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 289), is amended, effective July 1, 1932, to read as follows:

"'After all necessary expenses of a Federal Reserve bank shall have been paid or provided for the stockholders shall be entitled to receive an annual dividend of 6 percent on the paid-in capital stock, which dividend shall be cumulative. After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met the net earnings shall be paid into the surplus fund of the Federal Reserve bank.'

"SEC. 5. (a) The first paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 321; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 321), is amended by inserting immediately after the words 'United States', a comma and the following: 'including Morris Plan banks and other incorporated banking institutions engaged in similar business.'

"(b) The second paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: 'Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall prevent any State member bank from establishing and operating branches in the United States or any dependency or insular possession thereof or in any foreign country, on the same terms and conditions and subject to the same limitations and restrictions as are applicable to the establishment of branches by national banks.'

"(c) Section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 321–331; supp. VI, title 12, secs. 321–332), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'Any mutual savings bank having no capital stock (including any other banking institution the capital of which consists of weekly or other time deposits which are segregated from all other deposits and are regarded as capital stock for the purposes of taxation and the declaration of dividends), but having surplus and undivided profits not less than the amount of capital required for the organization of a national bank in the same place, may apply for and be admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System in the same manner and subject to the same provisions of law as State banks and trust companies, except that any such saving bank shall subscribe for capital stock of the Federal Reserve bank in an amount equal to six tenths of 1 percent of its total deposit liabilities as shown by the most recent report of examination of such savings bank preceding its admission to membership. Thereafter such subscription shall be adjusted semiannually on the same percentage basis in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board. If any such mutual savings bank applying for membership is not permitted by the laws under which it was organized to purchase stock in a Federal Reserve bank, it shall, upon admission to the system, deposit with the Federal Reserve bank an amount equal to the amount which it would have been required to pay in on account of a subscription to capital stock. Thereafter such deposit shall be adjusted semiannually in the same manner as subscriptions for stock. Such deposit shall be subject to the same conditions with respect to repayment as amounts paid upon subscriptions to capital stock by other member banks and the Federal Reserve bank shall pay interest thereon at the same rate as dividends are actually paid on outstanding shares of stock of such Federal Reserve bank. If the laws under which any such savings bank was organized be amended so as to authorize mutual savings banks to subscribe for Federal Reserve bank stock, such savings banks shall thereupon subscribe for the appropriate amount of stock in the Federal Reserve bank, and the deposit hereinbefore provided for in lieu of payment upon capital stock shall be applied upon such subscription. If the laws under which any such savings bank was organized be not amended at the next session of the legislature following the admission of such savings bank to membership so as to authorize mutual savings banks to purchase Federal Reserve bank stock, or if such laws be so amended and such bank fail within 6 months thereafter to purchase such stock, all of its rights and privileges as a member bank shall be forfeited and its membership in the Federal Reserve System shall be terminated in the manner prescribed elsewhere in this section with respect to State member banks and trust companies. Each such mutual savings bank shall comply with all the provisions of law applicable to State member banks and trust companies, with the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board and with the conditions of membership prescribed for such savings bank at the time of admission to membership, except as otherwise hereinbefore provided with respect to capital stock.

"'Each bank admitted to membership under this section shall obtain from each of its affiliates other than member banks and furnish to the Federal Reserve bank of its district and to the Federal Reserve Board not less than three reports during each year. Such reports shall be in such form as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, shall be verified by the oath or affirmation of the president or such other officer as may be designated by the board of directors of such affiliate to verify such reports, and shall disclose the information hereinafter provided for as of dates identical with those fixed by the Federal Reserve Board for reports of the condition of the affiliated member bank. Each such report of an affiliate shall be transmitted as herein provided at the same time as the corresponding report of the affiliated member bank, except that the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, extend such time for good cause shown. Each such report shall contain such information as in the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such affiliate and such bank and to enable the Board to inform itself as to the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such bank. The reports of such affiliates shall be published by the bank under the same conditions as govern its own condition reports.

"'Any such affiliated member bank may be required to obtain from any such affiliate such additional reports as in the opinion of its Federal Reserve bank or the Federal Reserve Board may be necessary in order to obtain a full and complete knowledge of the condition of the affiliated member bank. Such additional reports shall be transmitted to the Federal Reserve bank and the Federal Reserve Board and shall be in such form as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe.

"'Any such affiliated member bank which fails to obtain from any of its affiliates and furnish any report provided for by the two preceding paragraphs of this section shall be subject to a penalty of $100 for each day during which such failure continues, which, by direction of the Federal Reserve Board, may be collected, by suit or otherwise, by the Federal Reserve bank of the district in which such member bank is located. For the purposes of this paragraph and the two preceding paragraphs of this section, the term "affiliate" shall include holding company affiliates as well as other affiliates.

"'State member banks shall be subject to the same limitations and conditions with respect to the purchasing, selling, underwriting, and holding of investment securities and stock as are applicable in the case of national banks under paragraph "Seventh" of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended.

"'After 1 year from the date of the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, no certificate representing the stock of any State member bank shall represent the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank or a corporation existing on the date this paragraph takes effect engaged solely in holding the bank premises of such State member bank, nor shall the ownership, sale, or transfer of any certificate representing the stock of any such bank be conditioned in any manner whatsoever upon the ownership, sale, or transfer of a certificate representing the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank.

"'Each State member bank affiliated with a holding-company affiliate shall obtain from such holding-company affiliate, within such time as the Federal Reserve Board shall prescribe, an agreement that such holding-company affiliate shall be subject to the same conditions and limitations as are applicable under section 5144 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, in the case of holding-company affiliates of national banks. A copy of each such agreement shall be filed with the Federal Reserve Board. Upon the failure of a State member bank affiliated with a holding-company affiliate to obtain such an agreement within the time so prescribed, the Federal Reserve Board shall require such bank to surrender its stock in the Federal Reserve bank and to forfeit all rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System as provided in this section. Whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall have revoked the voting permit of any such holding-company affiliate, the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, require any or all State member banks affiliated with such holding-company affiliate to surrender their stock in the Federal Reserve bank and to forfeit all rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System as provided in this section.

"'In connection with examinations of State member banks, examiners selected or approved by the Federal Reserve Board shall make such examinations of the affairs of all affiliates of such banks as shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such banks and their affiliates and the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such banks. The expense of examination of affiliates of any State member bank may, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, be assessed against such bank and, when so assessed, shall be paid by such bank. In the event of the refusal to give any information requested in the course of the examination of any such affiliate, or in the event of the refusal to permit such examination, or in the event of the refusal to pay any expense so assessed, the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, require any or all State member banks affiliated with such affiliate to surrender their stock in the Federal Reserve bank and to forfeit all rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System, as provided in this section.'

"SEC. 6. (a) The second paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 242), is amended to read as follows:

"'The Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Currency shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for 2 years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank. The appointive members of the Federal Reserve Board shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for 2 years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any member bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to a member who has served the full term for which he was appointed. Upon the expiration of the term of any appointive member of the Federal Reserve Board in office when this paragraph as amended takes effect, the President shall fix the term of the successor to such member at not to exceed 12 years, as designated by the President at the time of nomination, but in such manner as to provide for the expiration of the term of not more than one appointive member in any 2-year period, and thereafter each appointive member shall hold office for a term of 12 years from the expiration of the term of his predecessor. Of the 6 persons thus appointed, 1 shall be designated by the President as governor and 1 as vice governor of the Federal Reserve Board. The governor of the Federal Reserve Board, subject to its supervision, shall be its active executive officer. Each member of the Federal Reserve Board shall within 15 days after notice of appointment make and subscribe to the oath of office.'

"(b) The fourth paragraph of section 10 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 244), is amended to read as follows:

"'The principal offices of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia. At meetings of the Board the Secretary of the Treasury shall preside as chairman, and, in his absence, the governor shall preside. In the absence of both the Secretary of the Treasury and the Governor the Vice Governor shall preside. In the absence of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Governor, and the Vice Governor, the Board shall elect a member to act as chairman pro tempore. The Board shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its disbursements and expenses allowed and paid, and may leave on deposit in the Federal Reserve banks the proceeds of assessments levied upon them to defray its estimated expenses and the salaries of its members and employees, whose employment, compensation, leave, and expenses shall be governed solely by the provisions of this act, specific amendments thereof, and rules and regulations of the Board not inconsistent therewith; and funds derived from such assessments shall not be construed to be Government funds or appropriated moneys. No member of the Federal Reserve Board shall be an officer or director of any bank, banking institution, trust company, or Federal Reserve bank or hold stock in any bank, banking institution, or trust company; and before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal Reserve Board he shall certify under oath that he has complied with this requirement, and such certification shall be filed with the secretary of the Board. Whenever a vacancy shall occur, other than by expiration of term, among the six members of the Federal Reserve Board appointed by the President as above provided, a successor shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to fill such vacancy, and when appointed he shall hold office for the unexpired term of his predecessor.'

"SEC. 7. Paragraph (m) of section 11 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 248), is amended to read as follows:

"'(m) Upon the affirmative vote of not less than six of its members the Federal Reserve Board shall have power to fix from time to time for each Federal Reserve district the percentage of individual bank capital and surplus which may be represented by loans secured by stock or bond collateral made by member banks within such district, but no such loan shall be made by any such bank to any person in an amount in excess of 10 percent of the unimpaired capital and surplus of such bank. Any percentage so fixed by the Federal Reserve Board shall be subject to change from time to time upon 10 days' notice, and it shall be the duty of the Board to establish such percentages with a view to preventing the undue use of bank loans for the speculative carrying of securities. The Federal Reserve Board shall have power to direct any member bank to refrain from further increase of its loans secured by stock or bond collateral for any period up to 1 year under penalty of suspension of all rediscount privileges at Federal Reserve banks.'

"SEC. 8. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting between sections 12 and 13 (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 261, 262, and 342) thereof the following new sections:

"'SEC. 12A. (a) There is hereby created a Federal Open Market Committee (hereinafter referred to as the "committee"), which shall consist of as many members as there are Federal Reserve districts. Each Federal Reserve bank, by its board of directors, shall annually select one member of said committee. The meetings of said committee shall be held at Washington, D.C., at least four times each year, upon the call of the Governor of the Federal Reserve Board or at the request of any three members of the committee, and, in the discretion of the Board, may be attended by the members of the Board.

"'(b) No Federal Reserve bank shall engage in open-market operations under section 14 of this act except in accordance with regulations adopted by the Federal Reserve Board. The Board shall consider, adopt, and transmit to the committee and to the several Reserve banks regulations relating to the open-market transactions of such banks and the relations of the Federal Reserve System with foreign central or other foreign banks.

"'(c) The time, character, and volume of all purchases and sales of paper described in section 14 of this act as eligible for open-market operations shall be governed with a view to accommodating commerce and business and with regard to their bearing upon the general credit situation of the country.

"'(d) If any Federal Reserve bank shall decide not to participate in open-market operations recommended and approved as provided in paragraph (b) hereof, it shall file with the chairman of the committee within 30 days a notice of its decision, and transmit a copy thereof to the Federal Reserve Board.

"'SEC. 12B. (a) There is hereby created a Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "Corporation"), whose duty it shall be to purchase, hold, and liquidate, as hereinafter provided, the assets of national banks which have been closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency, or by vote of their directors, and the assets of State member banks which have been closed by action of the appropriate State authorities, or by vote of their directors; and to insure, as hereinafter provided, the deposits of all banks which are entitled to the benefits of insurance under this section.

"'(b) The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a board of directors consisting of three members, one of whom shall be the Comptroller of the Currency, and two of whom shall be citizens of the United States to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of the appointive members shall be the chairman of the board of directors of the Corporation and not more than two of the members of such board of directors shall be members of the same political party. Each such appointive member shall hold office for a term of 6 years and shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum, payable monthly out of the funds of the Corporation, but the Comptroller of the Currency shall not receive additional compensation for his services as such member.

"'(c) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150,000,000, which shall be available for payment by the Secretary of the Treasury for capital stock of the Corporation in an equal amount, which shall be subscribed for by him on behalf of the United States. Payments upon such subscription shall be subject to call in whole or in part by the board of directors of the Corporation. Such stock shall be in addition to the amount of capital stock required to be subscribed for by Federal Reserve banks and member and nonmember banks as hereinafter provided, and the United States shall be entitled to the payment of dividends on such stock to the same extent as member and nonmember banks are entitled to such payment on the class A stock of the Corporation held by them. Receipts for payments by the United States for or on account of such stock shall be issued by the Corporation to the Secretary of the Treasury and shall be evidence of the stock ownership of the United States.

"'(d) The capital stock of the Corporation shall be divided into shares of $100 each. Certificates of stock of the Corporation shall be of two classes—class A and class B. Class A stock shall be held by member and nonmember banks as hereinafter provided and they shall be entitled to payment of dividends out of net earnings at the rate of 6 percent per annum on the capital stock paid in by them, which dividends shall be cumulative, or to the extent of 30 percent of such net earnings in any one year, whichever amount shall be the greater, but such stock shall have no vote at meetings of stockholders. Class B stock shall be held by Federal Reserve banks only and shall not be entitled to the payment of dividends. Every Federal Reserve bank shall subscribe to shares of class B stock in the Corporation to an amount equal to one half of the surplus of such bank on January 1, 1933, and its subscriptions shall be accompanied by a certified check payable to the Corporation in an amount equal to one half of such subscription. The remainder of such subscription shall be subject to call from time to time by the board of directors upon 90 days' notice.

"'(e) Every bank which is or which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System on or before July 1, 1934, shall take all steps necessary to enable it to become a class A stockholder of the Corporation on or before July 1, 1934; and thereafter no State bank or trust company or mutual savings bank shall be admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System until it becomes a class A stockholder of the Corporation, no national bank in the continental United States shall be granted a certificate by the Comptroller of the Currency authorizing it to commence the business of banking until it becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System and a class A stockholder of the Corporation, and no national bank in the continental United States for which a receiver or conservator has been appointed shall be permitted to resume the transaction of its banking business until it becomes a class A stockholder of the Corporation. Every member bank shall apply to the Corporation for class A stock of the Corporation in an amount equal to one half of 1 per centum of its total deposit liabilities as computed in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board; except that in the case of a member bank organized after the date this section takes effect, the amount of such class A stock applied for by such member bank during the first 12 months after its organization shall equal 5 per centum of its paid-up capital and surplus, and beginning after the expiration of such 12 months' period the amount of such class A stock of such member bank shall be adjusted annually in the same manner as in the case of other member banks. Upon receipt of such application the Corporation shall request the Federal Reserve Board, in the case of a State member bank, or the Comptroller of the Currency, in the case of a national bank, to certify upon the basis of a thorough examination of such bank whether or not the assets of the applying bank are adequate to enable it to meet all of its liabilities to depositors and other creditors as shown by the books of the bank; and the Federal Reserve Board or the Comptroller of the Currency shall make such certification as soon as practicable. If such certification be in the affirmative, the Corporation shall grant such application and the applying bank shall pay one half of its subscription in full and shall thereupon become a class A stockholder of the Corporation: Provided, That no member bank shall be required to make such payment or become a class A stockholder of the Corporation before July 1, 1934. The remainder of such subscription shall be subject to call from time to time by the board of directors of the Corporation. If such certification be in the negative, the Corporation shall deny such application. If any national bank shall not have become a class A stockholder of the Corporation on or before July 1, 1934, the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint a receiver or conservator therefor in accordance with the provisions of existing law. Except as provided in subsection (g) of this section, if any State member bank shall not have become a class A stockholder of the Corporation on or before July 1, 1934, the Federal Reserve Board shall terminate its membership in the Federal Reserve System in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of this act.

"'(f) Any State bank or trust company or mutual savings bank which applies for membership in the Federal Reserve System or for conversion into a national banking association on or after July 1, 1936, may, with the consent of the Corporation, obtain the benefits of this section, pending action on such application, by subscribing and paying for the same amount of stock of the Corporation as it would be required to subscribe and pay for upon becoming a member bank. Thereupon the provisions of this section applicable to member banks shall be applicable to such State bank or trust company or mutual savings bank to the same extent as if it were already a member bank: Provided, That if the application of such State bank or trust company or mutual savings bank for membership in the Federal Reserve System or for conversion into a national banking association be approved and it shall not complete its membership in the Federal Reserve System or its conversion into a national banking association within a reasonable time, or if such application shall be disapproved, then the amount paid by such State bank or trust company or mutual savings bank on account of its subscription to the capital stock of the Corporation shall be repaid to it and it shall no longer be subject to the provisions or entitled to the privileges of this section.

"'(g) If any State bank or trust company or mutual savings bank (referred to in this subsection as "State bank") which is or which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System is not permitted by the laws under which it was organized to purchase stock in the Corporation, it shall apply to the Corporation for admission to the benefits of this section and, if such application be granted after appropriate certification in accordance with this section, it shall deposit with the Corporation an amount equal to the amount which it would have been required to pay in on account of a subscription to capital stock of the Corporation. Thereafter such deposit shall be adjusted in the same manner as subscriptions for stock by class A stockholders. Such deposit shall be subject to the same conditions with respect to repayment as amounts paid on subscriptions to class A stock by other member banks and the Corporation shall pay interest thereon at the same rate as dividends are actually paid on outstanding shares of class A stock. As long as such deposit is maintained with the Corporation, such State bank shall, for the purposes of this section, be deemed to be a class A stockholder of the Corporation. If the laws under which such State bank was organized be amended so as to authorize State banks to subscribe for class A stock of the Corporation, such State bank shall within 6 months thereafter subscribe for an appropriate amount of such class A stock and the deposit hereinafter provided for in lieu of payment upon class A stock shall be applied upon such subscription. If the law under which such State bank was organized be not amended at the next session of the State legislature following the admission of such State bank to the benefits of this section so as to authorize State banks to purchase such class A stock, or, if the law be so amended and such State bank shall fail within 6 months thereafter to purchase such class A stock, the deposit previously made with the Corporation shall be returned to such State bank and it shall no longer be entitled to the benefits of this section, unless it shall have been closed in the meantime on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors.

"'(h) The amount of the outstanding class A stock of the Corporation held by member banks shall be annually adjusted as hereinafter provided as of the last preceding call date as member banks increase their time and demand deposits or as additional banks become members or subscribe to the stock of the Corporation, and such stock may be decreased in amount as member banks reduce their time and demand deposits or cease to be members. Shares of the capital stock of the Corporation owned by member banks shall not be transferred or hypothecated. When a member bank increases its time and demand deposits it shall, at the beginning of each calendar year, subscribe for an additional amount of capital stock of the Corporation equal to one half of 1 percent of such increase in deposits. One half of the amount of such additional stock shall be paid for at the time of the subscription therefor, and the balance shall be subject to call by the board of directors of the Corporation. A bank organized on or before the date this section takes effect and admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System at any time after the organization of the Corporation shall be required to subscribe for an amount of class A capital stock equal to one half of 1 percent of the time and demand deposits of the applicant bank as of the date of such admission, paying therefor its par value plus one half of 1 percent a month from the period of the last dividend on the class A stock of the Corporation. When a member bank reduces its time and demand deposits it shall surrender, not later than the 1st day of January thereafter, a proportionate amount of its holdings in the capital stock of the Corporation, and when a member bank voluntarily liquidates it shall surrender all its holdings of the capital stock of the Corporation and be released from its stock subscription not previously called. The shares so surrendered shall be canceled and the member bank shall receive in payment therefor, under regulations to be prescribed by the Corporation, a sum equal to its cash-paid subscriptions on the shares surrendered and its proportionate share of dividends not to exceed one half of 1 percent a month, from the period of the last dividend on such stock, less any liability of such member bank to the Corporation.

"'(i) If any member or nonmember bank shall be declared insolvent, or shall cease to be a member bank (or in the case of a nonmember bank, shall cease to be entitled to the benefits of insurance under this section), the stock held by it in the Corporation shall be canceled, without impairment of the liability of such bank, and all cash-paid subscriptions on such stock, with its proportionate share of dividends not to exceed one half of 1 percent per month from the period of last dividend on such stock shall be first applied to all debts of the insolvent bank or the receiver thereof to the Corporation, and the balance, if any, shall be paid to the receiver of the insolvent bank.

"'(j) Upon the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, the corporation shall become a body corporate and as such shall have power—

"'First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"'Second. To have succession until dissolved by an act of Congress.

"'Third. To make contracts.

"'Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, State or Federal.

"'Fifth. To appoint by its board of directors such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in this section, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers or employees. Nothing in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment and compensation as an officer or employee of the Corporation of any officer or employee of the United States in any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department thereof.

"'Sixth. To prescribe by its board of directors, bylaws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed.

"'Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this section and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted.

"'(k) The board of directors shall administer the affairs of the corporation fairly and impartially and without discrimination. The board of directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government. The Corporation with the consent of any Federal Reserve bank or of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, and facilities thereof in carrying out the provisions of this section.

"'(l) Effective on and after July 1, 1934 (thus affording ample time for examination and preparation), unless the President shall by proclamation fix an earlier date, the Corporation shall insure, as hereinafter provided, the deposits of all member banks, and on and after such date and until July 1, 1936, of all nonmember banks, which are class A stockholders of the Corporation. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever any national bank which is a class A stockholder of the Corporation shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the Comptroller of the Currency, as the case may be, or account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint the Corporation receiver for such bank. As soon as possible thereafter the Corporation shall organize a new national bank to assume the insured deposit liabilities of such closed bank, to receive new deposits and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions provided for it in this paragraph. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "insured deposit liability" shall mean with respect to the owner of any claim arising out of a deposit liability of such closed bank the following percentages of the net amount due to such owner by such closed bank on account of deposit liabilities: 100 percent of such net amount not exceeding $10,000; and 75 percent of the amount, if any, by which such net amount exceeds $10,000 but does not exceed $50,000; and 50 percent of the amount, if any, by which such net amount exceeds $50,000: Provided, That, in determining the amount due to such owner for the purpose of fixing such percentage, there shall be added together all net amounts due to such owner in the same capacity or the same right, on account of deposits, regardless of whether such deposits be maintained in his name or in the names of others for his benefit. For the purposes of this subsection, the term "insured deposit liabilities" shall mean the aggregate amount of all such insured deposit liabilities of such closed bank. The Corporation shall determine as expeditiously as possible the net amounts due to depositors of the closed bank and shall make available to the new bank an amount equal to the insured deposit liabilities of such closed bank, whereupon such new bank shall assume the insured deposit liability of such closed bank to each of its depositors, and the corporation shall be subrogated to all rights against the closed bank of the owners of such deposits and shall be entitled to receive the same dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such closed bank as would have been payable to each such depositor until such dividends shall equal the insured deposit liability to such depositor assumed by the new bank, whereupon all further dividends shall be payable to such depositor. Of the amount thus made available by the Corporation to the new bank, such portion shall be paid to it in cash as may be necessary to enable it to meet immediate cash demands and the remainder shall be credited to it on the books of the Corporation subject to withdrawal on demand and shall bear interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum until withdrawn. The new bank may, with the approval of the Corporation, accept new deposits, which, together with all amounts made available to the new bank by the Corporation, shall be kept on hand in cash, invested in direct obligations of the United States, or deposited with the Corporation or with a Federal Reserve bank. Such new bank shall maintain on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank of its district the reserves required by law of member banks but shall not be required to subscribe for stock of the Federal Reserve bank until its own capital stock has been subscribed and paid for in the manner hereinafter provided. The articles of association and organization certificate of such new bank may be executed by such representatives of the Corporation as it may designate; the new bank shall not be required to have any directors at the time of its organization, but shall be managed by an executive officer to be designated by the Corporation; and no capital stock need be paid in by the Corporation; but in other respects such bank shall be organized in accordance with the existing provisions of law relating to the organization of national banks; and, until the requisite amount of capital stock for such bank has been subscribed and paid for in the manner hereinafter provided, such bank shall transact no business except that authorized by this subsection and such business as may be incidental to its organization. When in the judgment of the Corporation it is desirable to do so, the Corporation shall offer capital stock of the new bank for sale on such terms and conditions as the Corporation shall deem advisable, in an amount sufficient in the opinion of the Corporation to make possible the conduct of the business of the new bank on a sound basis, but in no event less than that required by section 5138 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 51), for the organization of a national bank in the place where such new bank is located, giving the stockholders of the closed bank the first opportunity to purchase such stock. Upon proof that an adequate amount of capital stock of the new bank has been subscribed and paid for in cash by subscribers satisfactory to the Comptroller of the Currency, he shall issue to such bank a certificate of authority to commence business and thereafter it shall be managed by directors elected by its own shareholders and may exercise all of the powers granted by law to national banking associations. If an adequate amount of capital for such new bank is not subscribed and paid in, the Corporation may offer to transfer its business to any other banking institution in the same place which will take over its assets, assume its liabilities, and pay to the Corporation for such business such amount as the Corporation may deem adequate. Unless the capital stock of the new bank is sold or its assets acquired and its liabilities assumed by another banking institution, in the manner herein prescribed, within 2 years from the date of its organization, the Corporation shall place the new bank in voluntary liquidation and wind up its affairs. The Corporation shall open on its books a deposit insurance account, and as soon as possible after taking possession of any closed national bank, the Corporation shall make an estimate of the amount which will be available from all sources for application in satisfaction of the portion of the claims of depositors to which it has been subrogated and shall debit to such deposit insurance account the excess, if any, of the amount made available by the Corporation to the new bank for depositors over and above the amount of such estimate. It shall be the duty of the Corporation to realize upon the assets of such closed bank, having due regard to the condition of credit in the district in which such closed bank is located; to enforce the individual liability of the stockholders and directors thereof; and to wind up the affairs of such closed bank in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the liquidation of closed national banks, except as herein otherwise provided, retaining for its own account such portion of the amount realized from such liquidation as it shall be entitled to receive on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors and paying to depositors and other creditors the amount available for distribution to them, after deducting therefrom their share of the costs of the liquidation of the closed bank. If the total amount realized by the Corporation on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors be less than the amount of the estimate hereinabove provided for, the deposit insurance account shall be charged with the deficiency and, if the total amount so realized shall exceed the amount of such estimate, such account shall be credited with such excess. With respect to such closed national banks, the Corporation shall have all the rights, powers, and privileges now possessed by or hereafter given receivers of insolvent national banks and shall be subject to the obligations and penalties not inconsistent with the provisions of this paragraph to which such receivers are now or may hereafter become subject.

"'Whenever any State member bank which is a class A stockholder of the Corporation shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the appropriate State authority, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Corporation shall accept appointment as receiver thereof, if such appointment be tendered by the appropriate State authority and be authorized or permitted by State law. Thereupon the Corporation shall organize a new national bank, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, to assume the insured deposit liabilities of such closed State member bank, to receive new deposits and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions provided for in this subsection. Upon satisfactory recognition of the right of the Corporation to receive dividends on the same basis as in the case of a closed national bank under this subsection, such recognition being accorded by State law, by allowance of claims by the appropriate State authority, by assignment of claims by depositors, or by any other effective method, the Corporation shall make available to such new national bank, in the manner prescribed by this subsection, an amount equal to the insured deposit liabilities of such closed State member bank; and the Corporation and such new national bank shall perform all of the functions and duties and shall have all the rights and privileges with respect to such State member bank and the depositors thereof which are prescribed by this subsection with respect to closed national banks holding class A stock in the Corporation: Provided, That the rights of depositors and other creditors of such State member bank shall be determined in accordance with the applicable provisions of State law: And provided further, That, with respect to such State member bank, the Corporation shall possess the powers and privileges provided by State law with respect to a receiver of such State member bank, except insofar as the same are in conflict with the provisions of this subsection.

"'Whenever any State member bank which is a class A stockholder of the Corporation shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the appropriate State authority, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, and the applicable State law does not permit the appointment of the Corporation as receiver of such bank, the Corporation shall organize a new national bank, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, to assume the insured deposit liabilities of such closed State member bank, to receive new deposits, and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions provided for in this subsection. Upon satisfactory recognition of the right of the Corporation to receive dividends on the same basis as in the case of a closed national bank under this subsection, such recognition being accorded by State law, by allowance of claims by the appropriate State authority, by assignment of claims by depositors, or by any other effective method, the Corporation shall make available to such new bank, in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, the amount of insured deposit liabilities as to which such recognition has been accorded; and such new bank shall assume such insured deposit liabilities and shall in other respects comply with the provisions of this subsection respecting new banks organized to assume insured deposit liabilities of closed national banks. Insofar as possible in view of the applicable provisions of State law, the Corporation shall proceed with respect to the receiver of such closed bank and with respect to the new bank organized to assume its insured deposit liabilities in the manner prescribed by this subsection with respect to closed national banks and new banks organized to assume their insured deposit liabilities; except that the Corporation shall have none of the powers, duties, or responsibilities of a receiver with respect to the winding up of the affairs of such closed State member bank. The Corporation, in its discretion, however, may purchase and liquidate any or all of the assets of such bank.

"'Whenever the net debit balance of the deposit insurance account of the Corporation shall equal or exceed one fourth of 1 percent of the total deposit liabilities of all class A stockholders as of the date of the last preceding call report, the Corporation shall levy upon such stockholders an assessment equal to one fourth of 1 percent of their total deposit liabilities and shall credit the amount collected from such assessment to such deposit insurance account. No bank which is a holder of class A stock shall pay any dividends until all assessments levied upon it by the Corporation shall have been paid in full; and any director or officer of any such bank who participates in the declaration or payment of any such dividend may, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

"'The term "receiver" as used in this section shall mean a receiver, liquidating agent, or conservator of a national bank, and a receiver, liquidating agent, conservator, commission, person, or other agency charged by State law with the responsibility and the duty of winding up the affairs of an insolvent State member bank.

"'For the purposes of this section only, the term "national bank" shall include all national banking associations and all banks, banking associations, trust companies, savings banks, and other banking institutions located in the District of Columbia which are members of the Federal Reserve System; and the term "State member bank" shall include all State banks, banking associations, trust companies, savings banks, and other banking institutions organized under the laws of any State, which are members of the Federal Reserve System.

"'In any determination of the insured deposit liabilities of any closed bank or of the total deposit liabilities of any bank which is a holder of class A stock of the Corporation, for the purposes of this section, there shall be excluded the amounts of all deposits of such bank which are payable only at an office thereof located in a foreign country.

"'The Corporation may make such rules, regulations, and contracts as it may deem necessary in order to carry out the provisions of this section.

"'Money of the Corporation not otherwise employed shall be invested in securities of the Government of the United States, except that for temporary periods, in the discretion of the board of directors, funds of the Corporation may be deposited in any Federal Reserve bank or with the Treasurer of the United States. When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall be a depositary of public moneys, except receipts from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the said Secretary, and may also be employed as a financial agent of the Government. It shall perform all such reasonable duties as depositary of public moneys and financial agent of the Government as may be required of it.

"'(m) Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Corporation from making loans to national banks closed by action of the Comptroller of the Currency, or by vote of their directors, or to State member banks closed by action of the appropriate State authorities, or by vote of their directors, or from entering into negotiations to secure the reopening of such banks.

"'(n) Receivers or liquidators of member banks which are now or may hereafter become insolvent or suspended shall be entitled to offer the assets of such banks for sale to the Corporation or as security for loans from the Corporation, upon receiving permission from the appropriate State authority in accordance with express provisions of State law in the case of State member banks, or from the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of national banks. The proceeds of every such sale or loan shall be utilized for the same purposes and in the same manner as other funds realized from the liquidation of the assets of such banks. The Comptroller of the Currency may, in his discretion, pay dividends on proved claims at any time after the expiration of the period of advertisement made pursuant to section 5235 of the Revised States (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 193), and no liability shall attach to the Comptroller of the Currency or to the receiver of any national bank by reason of any such payment for failure to pay dividends to a claimant whose claim is not proved at the time of any such payment.

"'(o) The Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time in an amount aggregating not more than three times the amount of its capital, its notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations, to be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated in such obligations, and to bear such rate or rates of interest, and to mature at such time or times as may be determined by the Corporation: Provided, That the Corporation may sell on a discount basis short-term obligations payable at maturity without interest. The notes, debentures, bonds, and other such obligations of the Corporation may be secured by assets of the Corporation in such manner as shall be prescribed by its board of directors. Such obligations may be offered for sale at such price or prices as the Corporation may determine.

"'(p) All notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

"'(q) In order that the Corporation may be supplied with such forms of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations as it may need for issuance under this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prepare such forms as shall be suitable and approved by the Corporation, to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery, upon order of the Corporation. The engraved plates, dies, bed pieces, and other material executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Corporation shall reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations.

"'(r) The Corporation shall annually make a report of its operations to the Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of January in each year.

"'(s) Whoever, for the purpose of obtaining any loan from the Corporation, or any extension or renewal thereof, or the acceptance, release, or substitution of security therefor, or for the purpose of inducing the Corporation to purchase any assets, or for the purpose of influencing in any way the action of the Corporation under this section, makes any statement, knowing it to be false, or willfully overvalues any security, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 2 years, or both.

"'(t) Whoever (1) falsely makes, forges, or counterfeits any obligation or coupon, in imitation of or purporting to be an obligation or coupon issued by the Corporation, or (2) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, any false, forged, or counterfeited obligation or coupon purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be false, forged, or counterfeited, or (3) falsely alters any obligation or coupon issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, or (4) passes, utters, or publishes, or attempts to pass, utter, or publish, as true, any falsely altered or spurious obligation or coupon, issued or purporting to have been issued by the Corporation, knowing the same to be falsely altered or spurious, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"'(u) Whoever, being connected in any capacity with the Corporation, (1) embezzles, abstracts, purloins, or willfully misapplies any moneys, funds, securities, or other things of value, whether belonging to it or pledged, or otherwise intrusted to it, or (2) with intent to defraud the Corporation or any other body, politic or corporate, or any individual, or to deceive any officer, auditor, or examiner of the Corporation, makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of or to the Corporation, or without being duly authorized draws any order or issues, puts forth, or assigns any note, debenture, bond, or other such obligation, or draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000, or by imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both.

"'(v) No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall use the words "Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation", or a combination of any 3 of these 4 words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it shall do business. No individual, association, partnership, or corporation shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever that his or its deposit liabilities are insured or in anywise guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or by the Government of the United States, or by any instrumentality thereof; and no class A stockholder of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall advertise or otherwise represent falsely by any device whatsoever the extent to which or the manner in which its deposit liabilities are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Every individual, partnership, association, or corporation violating this subsection shall be punished by a fine of not exceeding $1,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding 1 year, or both.

"'(w) The provisions of sections 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, and 117 of the Criminal Code of the United States (U.S.C., title 18, ch. 5, secs. 202 to 207, inclusive), insofar as applicable, are extended to apply to contracts or agreements with the Corporation under this section, which for the purposes hereof shall be held to include loans, advances, extensions, and renewals thereof, and acceptances, releases, and substitutions of security therefor, purchases or sales of assets, and all contracts and agreements pertaining to the same.

"'(x) The Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department is authorized to detect, arrest, and deliver into the custody of the United States marshal having jurisdiction any person committing any of the offenses punishable under this section.

"'(y) The Corporation shall open on its books a Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund (hereinafter referred to as the "Fund"), which shall become operative on January 1, 1934, unless the President shall, by proclamation, fix an earlier date, and it shall be the duty of the Corporation to insure deposits as hereinafter provided until July 1, 1934.

"'Each member bank licensed before January 1, 1934, by the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to the authority vested in him by the Executive order of the President issued March 10, 1933, shall, on or before January 1, 1934, become a member of the fund; each member bank so licensed after such date, and each State bank, trust company or mutual savings bank (referred to in this subsection as "State bank") which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System on or after such date, shall, upon being so licensed or so admitted to membership, become a member of the fund; and any State bank which is not a member of the Federal Reserve System, with the approval of the State authority having supervision of such State bank and certification to the Corporation by such authority that such State's bank is in solvent condition, shall, after examination by, and with the approval of, the Corporation, be entitled to become a member of the fund and to the privileges of this subsection upon agreeing to comply with the requirements thereof, and upon paying to the Corporation an amount equal to the amount that would be required of it under this subsection if it were a member bank. The Corporation is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations for the further examination of such State bank and to fix the compensation of examiners employed to make examinations of State banks.

"'Each member of the fund shall file with the Corporation on or before the date of its admission a certified statement under oath showing, as of the 15th day of the month preceding the month in which it was so admitted, the number of its depositors and the total amount of its deposits which are eligible for insurance under this subsection, and shall pay to the Corporation an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of the total amount of the deposits so certified. One half of such payment shall be paid in full at the time of the admission of such member to the fund, and the remainder of such payment shall be subject to call from time to time by the board of directors of the corporation. Within a reasonable time fixed by the Corporation each such member shall file a similar statement showing, as of June 15, 1934, the number of its depositors and the total amount of its deposits which are eligible for such insurance and shall pay to the Corporation in the same manner an amount equal to one half of 1 percent of the increase, if any, in the total amount of such deposits since the date covered by the statement filed upon its admission to membership in the fund.

"'If at any time prior to July 1, 1934, the Corporation requires additional funds with which to meet its obligations under this subsection, each member of the fund shall be subject to one additional assessment only in an amount not exceeding the total amount theretofore paid to the corporation by such member.

"'If any member of the fund shall be closed on or before June 30, 1934, on account of inability to meet its deposit liabilities, the Corporation shall proceed in accordance with the provisions of subsection (l) of this section to pay the insured deposit liabilities of such member; except that the Corporation shall pay not more than $2,500 on account of the net approved claim of the owner of any deposit. The provisions of such subsection (l) relating to State member banks shall be extended for the purposes of this subsection to members of the fund which are not members of the Federal Reserve System; and the provisions of this subsection shall apply only to deposits of members of the fund which have been made available since March 10, 1933, for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business.

"'Before July 1, 1934, the Corporation shall make an estimate of the balance, if any, which will remain in the fund after providing for all liabilities of the fund, including expenses of operation thereof under this subsection and allowing for anticipated recoveries. The Corporation shall refund such estimated balance, on such basis as the Corporation shall find to be equitable, to the members of the fund other than those which have been closed prior to July 1, 1934.

"'Each State bank which is a member of the fund, in order to obtain the benefits of this section after July 1, 1934, shall, on or before such date, subscribe and pay for the same amount of class A stock of the Corporation as it would be required to subscribe and pay for upon becoming a member bank, or if such State bank is not permitted by the laws under which it was organized to purchase such stock, it shall deposit with the Corporation an amount equal to the amount it would have been required to pay in on account of a subscription to such stock; and thereafter such State bank shall be entitled to such bnefits until July 1, 1936.

"'It is not the purpose of this section to discriminate, in any manner, against State nonmember, and in favor of national or member banks; but the purpose is to provide all banks with the same opportunity to obtain and enjoy the benefits of this title. No bank shall be discriminated against because its capital stock is less than amount required for eligibility for admission into the Federal Reserve System.'

"SEC. 9. The eighth paragraph of section 13 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 347; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 347), is amended to read as follows:

"'Any Federal Reserve bank may make advances for periods not exceeding 15 days to its member banks on their promissory notes secured by the deposit or pledge of bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, or Treasury bills of the United States, or by the deposit or pledge of debentures or other such obligations of Federal intermediate credit banks which are eligible for purchase by Federal Reserve banks under section 13 (a) of this act; and any Federal Reserve bank may make advances for periods not exceeding 90 days to its member banks on their promissory notes secured by such notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or bankers' acceptances as are eligible for rediscount or for purchase by Federal Reserve banks under the provisions of this act. All such advances shall be made at rates to be established by such Federal Reserve banks, such rates to be subject to the review and determination of the Federal Reserve Board. If any member bank to which any such advance has been made shall, during the life or continuance of such advance, and despite an official warning of the Reserve bank of the district or of the Federal Reserve Board to the contrary, increase its outstanding loans secured by collateral in the form of stocks, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations, or loans made to members of any organized stock exchange, investment house, or dealer in securities, upon any obligation, note, or bill, secured or unsecured, for the purpose of purchasing and/or carrying stocks, bonds, or other investment securities (except obligations of the United States) such advance shall be deemed immediately due and payable, and such member bank shall be ineligible as a borrower at the Reserve bank of the district under the provisions of this paragraph for such period as the Federal Reserve Board shall determine: Provided, That no temporary carrying or clearance loans made solely for the purpose of facilitating the purchase or delivery of securities offered for public subscription shall be included in the loans referred to in this paragraph.'

"SEC. 10. Section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 353–358), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(g) The Federal Reserve Board shall exercise special supervision over all relationships and transactions of any kind entered into by any Federal Reserve bank with any foreign bank or banker, or with any group of foreign banks or bankers, and all such relationships and transactions shall be subject to such regulations, conditions, and limitations as the Board may prescribe. No officer or other representative of any Federal Reserve bank shall conduct negotiations of any kind with the officers or representatives of any foreign bank or banker without first obtaining the permission of the Federal Reserve Board. The Federal Reserve Board shall have the right, in its discretion, to be represented in any conference or negotiations by such representative or representatives as the Board may designate. A full report of all conferences or negotiations, and all understandings or agreements arrived at or transactions agreed upon, and all other material facts appertaining to such conferences or negotiations, shall be filed with the Federal Reserve Board in writing by a duly authorized officer of each Federal Reserve bank which shall have participated in such conferences or negotiations.'

"SEC. 11. (a) Section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 142, 374, 461–466, supp. VI, title 12, sec. 462a), is amended by inserting after the sixth paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"'No member bank shall act as the medium or agent of any nonbanking corporation, partnership, association, business trust, or individual in making loans on the security of stocks, bonds, and other investment securities to brokers or dealers in stocks, bonds, and other investment securities. Every violation of this provision by any member bank shall be punishable by a fine of not more than $100 per day during the continuance of such violation; and such fine may be collected, by suit or otherwise, by the Federal Reserve bank of the district in which such member bank is located.'

"(b) Such section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"'No member bank shall, directly or indirectly by any device whatsoever, pay any interest on any deposit which is payable on demand: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as prohibiting the payment of interest in accordance with the terms of any certificate of deposit or other contract heretofore entered into in good faith which is in force on the date of the enactment of this paragraph; but no such certificate of deposit or other contract shall be renewed or extended unless it shall be modified to conform to this paragraph, and every member bank shall take such action as may be necessary to conform to this paragraph as soon as possible consistently with its contractual obligations: Provided, however, That this paragraph shall not apply to any deposit of such bank which is payable only at an office thereof located in a foreign country, and shall not apply to any deposit made by a mutual savings bank, nor to any deposit of public funds made by or on behalf of any State, county, school district, or other subdivision or municipality, with respect to which payment of interest is required under State law.'

"'The Federal Reserve Board shall from time to time limit by regulation the rate of interest which may be paid by member banks on time deposits, and may prescribe different rates for such payment on time and savings deposits having different maturities or subject to different conditions respecting withdrawal or repayment or subject to different conditions by reason of different locations. No member bank shall pay any time deposit before its maturity, or waive any requirement of notice before payment of any savings deposit except as to all savings deposits having the same requirement.'

"(c) Section 8 of the act entitled 'An act to establish postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes' approved June 25, 1910, as amended (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 758), is amended by striking out the first sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'Any depositor may withdraw the whole or any part of the funds deposited to his or her credit with the accrued interest only on notice given 60 days in advance and under such regulations as the Postmaster General may prescribe; but withdrawal of any part of such funds may be made upon demand, but no interest shall be paid on any funds so withdrawn except interest accrued to the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1933: Provided, That Postal Savings depositories may deposit funds in member banks on time under regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster General.'

"(d) The second sentence of section 9 of the act entitled 'An act to establish Postal Savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes', approved June 25, 1910, as amended (U.S.C., title 39, sec. 759), is amended by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a colon and the following: 'Provided, That no such security shall be required in case of such part of the deposits as are insured under section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.'

"SEC. 12. Section 22 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 375, 376, 503, 593–595; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 593), is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'(g) No executive officer of any member bank shall borrow from or otherwise become indebted to any member bank of which he is an executive officer, and no member bank shall make any loan or extend credit in any other manner to any of its own executive officers: Provided, That loans heretofore made to any such officer may be renewed or extended not more than 2 years from the date this paragraph takes effect, if in accord with sound banking practice. If any executive officer of any member bank borrow from or if he be or become indebted to any bank other than a member bank of which he is an executive officer, he shall make a written report to the chairman of the board of directors of the member bank of which he is an executive officer, stating the date and amount of such loan or indebtedness, the security therefor, and the purpose for which the proceeds have been or are to be used. Any executive officer of any member bank violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be imprisoned not exceeding 1 year, or fined not more than $5,000, or both; and any member bank violating the provisions of this paragraph shall be fined not more than $10,000, and may be fined a further sum equal to the amount so loaned or credit so extended.'

"SEC. 13. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting between sections 23 and 24 thereof (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 64 and 371; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 371) the following new section:

"'SEC. 23A. No member bank shall (1) make any loan or any extension of credit to, or purchase securities under repurchase agreement from, any of its affiliates, or (2) invest any of its funds in the capital stock, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations of any such affiliate, or (3) accept the capital stock, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations of any such affiliate as collateral security for advances made to any person, partnership, association, or corporation, if, in the case of any such affiliate, the aggregate amount of such loans, extensions of credit, repurchase agreements, investments, and advances against such collateral security will exceed 10 percent of the capital stock and surplus of such member bank, or if, in the case of all such affiliates, the aggregate amount of such loans, extensions of credits, repurchase agreements, investments, and advances against such collateral security will exceed 20 percent of the capital stock and surplus of such member bank.

"'Within the foregoing limitations, each loan or extension of credit of any kind or character to an affiliate shall be secured by collateral in the form of stocks, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations having a market value at the time of making the loan or extension of credit of at least 20 percent more than the amount of the loan or extension of credit, or of at least 10 percent more than the amount of the loan or extension of credit if it is secured by obligations of any State, or of any political subdivision or agency thereof: Provided, That the provisions of this paragraph shall not apply to loans or extensions of credit secured by obligations of the United States Government, the Federal intermediate credit banks, the Federal land banks, the Federal home-loan banks, or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, or by such notes, drafts, bills of exchange, or bankers' acceptances as are eligible for rediscount or for purchase by Federal Reserve banks. A loan or extension of credit to a director officer, clerk, or other employee or any representative of any such affiliate shall be deemed a loan to the affiliate to the extent that the proceeds of such loan are used for the benefit of, or transferred to, the affiliate.

"'For the purposes of this section the term "affiliate" shall include holding company affiliates as well as other affiliates, and the provisions of this section shall not apply to any affiliate (1) engaged solely in holding the bank premises of the member bank with which it is affiliated, (2) engaged solely in conducting a safe-deposit business or the business of an agricultural credit corporation or livestock loan company, (3) in the capital stock of which a national banking association is authorized to invest pursuant to section 25 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, (4) organized under section 25 (a) of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, or (5) engaged solely in holding obligations of the United States Government, the Federal intermediate credit banks, the Federal land banks, the Federal Home Loan banks, or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation; but as to any such affiliate, member banks shall continue to be subject to other provisions of law applicable to loans by such banks and investments by such banks in stocks, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations.'

"SEC. 14. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is amended by inserting between section 24 and section 25 thereof (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 371 and 601–605; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 371) the following new section:

"'SEC. 24A. Hereafter no national bank, without the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, and no State member bank, without the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, shall (1) invest in bank premises, or in the stock, bonds, debentures, or other such obligations of any corporation holding the premises of such bank or (2) make loans to or upon the security of the stock of any such corporation, if the aggregate of all such investments and loans will exceed the amount of the capital stock of such bank.'

"SEC. 15. The Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is further amended by inserting after section 25 (a) thereof (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 611–631) the following new section:

"'SEC. 25. (b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity to which any corporation organized under the laws of the United States shall be a party, arising out of transactions involving international or foreign banking, or banking in a dependency or insular possession of the United States, or out of other international or foreign financial operations, either directly or through the agency, ownership, or control of branches or local institutions in dependencies or insular possessions of the United States or in foreign countries, shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States, and the district courts of the United States shall have original jurisdiction of all such suits; and any defendant in any such suit may, at any time before the trial thereof, remove such suits from a State court into the district court of the United States for the proper district by following the procedure for the removal of causes otherwise provided by law. Such removal shall not cause undue delay in the trial of such case and a case so removed shall have a place on the calendar of the United States court to which it is removed relative to that which it held on the State court from which it was removed.

"'Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity to which any Federal Reserve bank shall be a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States, and the district courts of the United States shall have original jurisdiction of all such suits; and any Federal Reserve bank which is a defendant in any such suit may, at any time before the trial thereof, remove such suit from a State court into the district court of the United States for the proper district by following the procedure for the removal of causes otherwise provided by law. No attachment or execution shall be issued against any Federal Reserve bank or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, or proceeding in any State, county, municipal, or United States court.'

"SEC. 16. Paragraph 'seventh' of section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 24; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 24), is amended to read as follows:

"'Seventh. To exercise by its board of directors or duly authorized officers or agents, subject to law, all such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry on the business of banking; by discounting and negotiating promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange, and other evidences of debt; by receiving deposits; by buying and selling exchange, coin, and bullion; by loaning money on personal security; and by obtaining, issuing, and circulating notes according to the provisions of this title. The business of dealing in investment securities by the association shall be limited to purchasing and selling such securities without recourse, solely upon the order, and for the account of, customers, and in no case for its own account, and the association shall not underwrite any issue of securities: Provided, That the association may purchase for its own account investment securities under such limitations and restrictions as the Comptroller of the Currency may by regulation prescribe, but in no event (1) shall the total amount of any issue of investment securities of any one obligor or maker purchased after this section as amended takes effect and held by the association for its own account exceed at any time 10 percent of the total amount of such issue outstanding, but this limitation shall not apply to any such issue the total amount of which does not exceed $100,000 and does not exceed 50 percent of the capital of the association, nor (2) shall the total amount of the investment securities of any one obligor or maker purchased after this section as amended takes effect and held by the association for its own account exceed at any time 15 percent of the amount of the capital stock of the association actually paid in and unimpaired and 25 percent of its unimpaired surplus fund. As used in this section the term "investment securities" shall mean marketable obligations evidencing indebtedness of any person, copartnership, association, or corporation in the form of bonds, notes, and/or debentures commonly known as investment securities under such further definition of the term "investment securities" as may by regulation be prescribed by the Comptroller of the Currency. Except as hereinafter provided or otherwise permitted by law, nothing herein contained shall authorize the purchase by the association of any shares of stock of any corporation. The limitations and restrictions herein contained as to dealing in, underwriting, and purchasing for its own account, investment securities shall not apply to obligations of the United States, or general obligations of any State or of any political subdivision thereof, or obligations issued under authority of the Federal Farm Loan Act, as amended, or issued by the Federal Home Loan Banks or the Home Owners' Loan Corporation: Provided, That in carrying on the business commonly known as the safe-deposit business the association shall not invest in the capital stock of a corporation organized under the law of any State to conduct a safe-deposit business in an amount in excess of 15 percent of the capital stock of the association actually paid in and unimpaired and 15 percent of its unimpaired surplus.'

"The restrictions of this section as to dealing in investment securities shall take effect 1 year after the date of the approval of this act.

"SEC. 17. (a) Section 5138 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 51; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 51), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5138. After this section as amended takes effect, no national banking association shall be organized with a less capital than $100,000, except that such associations with a capital of not less than $50,000 may be organized in any place the population of which does not exceed 6,000 inhabitants. No such association shall be organized in a city the population of which exceeds 50,000 persons with a capital of less than $200,000, except that in the outlying districts of such a city where the State laws permit the organization of State banks with a capital of $100,000 or less, national banking associations now organized or hereafter organized may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, have a capital of not less than $100,000.'

"(b) The tenth paragraph of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 329), is amended to read as follows:

"'No applying bank shall be admitted to membership in a Federal Reserve bank unless it possesses a paid-up unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a national banking association in the place where it is situated under the provisions of the National Bank Act, as amended: Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply to State banks and trust companies organized prior to the date this paragraph as amended takes effect and situated in a place the population of which does not exceed 3,000 inhabitants and having a capital of not less than $25,000, nor to any State bank or trust company which is so situated and which, while it is entitled to the benefits of insurance under section 12B of this act, increases its capital to not less than $25,000.'

"SEC. 18. Section 5139 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 52; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 52), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'After 1 year from the date of the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, no certificate representing the stock of any such association shall represent the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank or a corporation existing on the date this paragraph takes effect engaged solely in holding the bank premises of such association, nor shall the ownership, sale, or transfer of any certificate representing the stock of any such association be conditioned in any manner whatsoever upon the ownership, sale, or transfer of a certificate representing the stock of any other corporation, except a member bank.'

"SEC. 19. Section 5144 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 61), is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 5144. In all elections of directors, each shareholder shall have the right to vote the number of shares owned by him for as many persons as there are directors to be elected, or to cumulate such shares and give one candidate as many votes as the number of directors multiplied by the number of his shares shall equal, or to distribute them on the same principle among as many candidates as he shall think fit; and in deciding all other questions at meetings of shareholders, each shareholder shall be entitled to one vote on each share of stock held by him; except (1) that shares of its own stock held by a national bank as sole trustee shall not be voted, and shares of its own stock held by a national bank and one or more persons as trustees may be voted by such other person or persons, as trustees, in the same manner as if he or they were the sole trustee, and (2) shares controlled by any holding company affiliate of a national bank shall not be voted unless such holding company affiliate shall have first obtained a voting permit as hereinafter provided, which permit is in force at the time such shares are voted. Shareholders may vote by proxies duly authorized in writing; but no officer, clerk, teller, or bookkeeper of such bank shall act as proxy; and no shareholder whose liability is past due and unpaid shall be allowed to vote.

"'For the purposes of this section shares shall be deemed to be controlled by a holding company affiliate if they are owned or controlled directly or indirectly by such holding company affiliate, or held by any trustee for the benefit of the shareholders or members thereof.

"'Any such holding company affiliate may make application to the Federal Reserve Board for a voting permit entitling it to cast one vote at all elections of directors and in deciding all questions at meetings of shareholders of such bank on each share of stock controlled by it or authorizing the trustee or trustees holding the stock for its benefit or for the benefit of its shareholders so to vote the same. The Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, grant or withhold such permit as the public interest may require. In acting upon such application, the Board shall consider the financial condition of the applicant, the general character of its management, and the probable effect of the granting of such permit upon the affairs of such bank, but no such permit shall be granted except upon the following conditions:

"'(a) Every such holding company affiliate shall, in making the application for such permit, agree (1) to receive, on dates identical with those fixed for the examination of banks with which it is affiliated, examiners duly authorized to examine such banks, who shall make such examinations of such holding company affiliate as shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such banks and such holding company affiliate and the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such banks, such examinations to be at the expense of the holding company affiliate so examined; (2) that the reports of such examiners shall contain such information as shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such affiliate and such banks and the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such banks; (3) that such examiners may examine each bank owned or controlled by the holding company affiliate, both individually and in conjunction with other banks owned or controlled by such holding company affiliate; and (4) that publication of individual or consolidated statements of condition of such banks may be required;

"'(b) After 5 years after the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, every such holding company affiliate (1) shall possess, and shall continue to possess during the life of such permit, free and clear of any lien, pledge, or hypothecation of any nature, readily marketable assets other than bank stock in an amount not less than 12 percent of the aggregate par value of all bank stocks controlled by such holding-company affiliate, which amount shall be increased by not less than 2 percent per annum of such aggregate par value until such assets shall amount to 25 percent of the aggregate par value of such bank stocks; and (2) shall reinvest in readily marketable assets other than bank stock all net earnings over and above 6 percent per annum on the book value of its own shares outstanding until such assets shall amount to such 25 percent of the aggregate par value of all bank stocks controlled by it;

"'(c) Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this section, after 5 years after the enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, (1) any such holding-company affiliate the shareholders or members of which shall be individually and severally liable in proportion to the number of shares of such holding-company affiliate held by them, respectively, in addition to amounts invested therein, for all statutory liability imposed on such holding-company affiliate by reason of its control of shares of stock of banks, shall be required only to establish and maintain out of net earnings over and above 6 percent per annum on the book value of its own shares outstanding a reserve of readily marketable assets in an amount of not less than 12 percent of the aggregate par value of bank stocks controlled by it, and (2) the assets required by this section to be possessed by such holding-company affiliate may be used by it for replacement of capital in banks affiliated with it and for losses incurred in such banks, but any deficiency in such assets resulting from such use shall be made up within such period as the Federal Reserve Board may by regulation prescribe;

"'(d) Every officer, director, agent, and employee of every such holding company affiliate shall be subject to the same penalties for false entries in any book, report, or statement of such holding company affiliate as are applicable to officers, directors, agents, and employees of member banks under section 5209 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 592); and

"'(e) Every such holding company affiliate shall, in its application for such voting permit, (1) show that it does not own, control, or have any interest in, and is not participating in the management or direction of, any corporation, business trust, association, or other similar organization formed for the purpose of, or engaged principally in, the issue, flotation, underwriting, public sale, or distribution, at wholesale or retail or through syndicate participation, of stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, or other securities of any sort (hereinafter referred to as "securities company"); (2) agree that during the period that the permit remains in force it will not acquire any ownership, control, or interest in any such securities company or participate in the management or direction thereof; (3) agree that if, at the time of filing the application for such permit, it owns, controls, or has an interest in, or is participating in the management or direction of, any such securities company, it will, within 5 years after the filing of such application, divest itself of its ownership, control, and interest in such securities company and will cease participating in the management or direction thereof, and will not thereafter, during the period that the permit remains in force, acquire any further ownership, control, or interest in any such securities company or participate in the management or direction thereof; and (4) agree that thenceforth it will declare dividends only out of actual net earnings.

"'If at any time it shall appear to the Federal Reserve Board that any holding company affiliate has violated any of the provisions of the Banking Act of 1933 or of any agreement made pursuant to this section, the Federal Reserve Board may, in its discretion, revoke any such voting permit after giving 60 days' notice by registered mail of its intention to the holding company affiliate and affording it an opportunity to be heard. Whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall have revoked any such voting permit, no national bank whose stock is controlled by the holding company affiliate whose permit is so revoked shall receive deposits of public moneys of the United States, nor shall any such national bank pay any further dividend to such holding company affiliate upon any shares of such bank controlled by such holding company affiliate.

"'Whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall have revoked any voting permit as hereinbefore provided, the rights, privileges, and franchises of any or all national banks the stock of which is controlled by such holding company affiliate shall, in the discretion of the Federal Reserve Board, be subject to forfeiture in accordance with section 2 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.'

"SEC. 20. After 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act, no member bank shall be affiliated in any manner described in section 2 (b) hereof with any corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization engaged principally in the issue, flotation, underwriting, public sale, or distribution at wholesale or retail or through syndicate participation of stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, or other securities.

"For every violation of this section the member bank involved shall be subject to a penalty not exceeding $1,000 per day for each day during which such violation continues. Such penalty may be assessed by the Federal Reserve Board, in its discretion, and, when so assessed, may be collected by the Federal Reserve bank by suit or otherwise.

"If any such violation shall continue for 6 calendar months after the member bank shall have been warned by the Federal Reserve Board to discontinue the same, (a) in the case of a national bank, all the rights, privileges, and franchises granted to it under the National Bank Act may be forfeited in the manner prescribed in section 2 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 141, 222–225, 281–286, 502), or, (b) in the case of a State member bank, all of its rights and privileges of membership in the Federal Reserve System may be forfeited in the manner prescribed in section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 321–332).

"SEC. 21. (a) After the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act it shall be unlawful—

"(1) For any person, firm, corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization, engaged in the business of issuing, underwriting, selling, or distributing, at wholesale or retail, or through syndicate participation, stocks, bonds, debentures, notes, or other securities, to engage at the same time to any extent whatever in the business of receiving deposits subject to check or to repayment upon presentation of a passbook, certificate of deposit, or other evidence of debt, or upon request of the depositor; or

"(2) For any person, firm, corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization, other than a financial institution or private banker subject to examination and regulation under State or Federal law, to engage to any extent whatever in the business of receiving deposits subject to check or to repayment upon presentation of a passbook, certificate of deposit, or other evidence of debt, or upon request of the depositor, unless such person, firm, corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization shall submit to periodic examination by the Comptroller of the Currency or by the Federal Reserve bank of the district and shall make and publish periodic reports of its condition, exhibiting in detail its resources and liabilities, such examination and reports to be made and published at the same times and in the same manner and with like effect and penalties as are now provided by law in respect of national banking associations transacting business in the same locality.

"(b) Whoever shall willfully violate any of the provisions of this section shall upon conviction be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and any officer, director, employee, or agent of any person, firm, corporation, association, business trust, or other similar organization who knowingly participates in any such violation shall be punished by a like fine or imprisonment, or both.

"SEC. 22. The additional liability imposed upon shareholders in national banking associations by the provisions of section 5151 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and section 23 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 63 and 64), shall not apply with respect to shares in any such association issued after the date of enactment of this act.

"SEC. 23. Paragraph (c) of section 5155 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 36), is amended to read as follows:

"'(c) A national banking association may, with the approval of the Comptroller of the Currency, establish and operate new branches (1) within the limits of the city, town, or village in which said association is situated, if such establishment and operation are at the time expressly authorized to State banks by the law of the State in question; and (2) at any point within the State in which said association is situated, if such establishment and operation are at the time authorized to State banks by the statute law of the State in question by language specifically granting such authority affirmatively and not merely by implication or recognition, and subject to the restrictions as to location imposed by the law of the State on State banks. No such association shall establish a branch outside of the city, town, or village in which it is situated unless it has a paid-in and unimpaired capital stock of not less than $500,000: Provided, That in States with a population of less than 1,000,000, and which have no cities located therein with a population exceeding 100,000, the capital shall be not less than $250,000: Provided, That in States with a population of less than one half million, and which have no cities located therein with a population exceeding 50,000, the capital shall not be less than $100,000.'

"Paragraph (d) of section 5155 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 36), is amended to read as follows:

"'(d) The aggregate capital of every national banking association and its branches shall at no time be less than the aggregate minimum capital required by law for the establishment of an equal number of national banking associations situated in the various places where such association and its branches are situated.'

"SEC. 24. (a) Sections 1 and 3 of the act entitled 'An Act to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations', approved November 7, 1918, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 33, 34, and 34a), are amended by striking out the words 'county, city, town, or village' wherever they occur in each such section, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'State, county, city, town, or village.'

"(b) Section 3 of such act of November 7, 1918, as amended, is further amended by striking out the second sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'The capital stock of such consolidated association shall not be less than that required under existing law for the organization of a national banking association in the place in which such consolidated association is located. Upon such a consolidation, or upon a consolidation of two or more national banking associations under section 1 of this act, the corporate existence of each of the constituent banks and national banking associations participating in such consolidation shall be merged into and continued in the consolidated national banking association and the consolidated association shall be deemed to be the same corporation as each of the constituent institutions. All the rights, franchises, and interests of each of such constituent banks and national banking associations in and to every species of property, real, personal, and mixed, and choses in action thereto belonging, shall be deemed to be transferred to and vested in such consolidated national banking association without any deed or other transfer; and such consolidated national banking association, by virtue of such consolidation and without any order or other action on the part of any court or otherwise, shall hold and enjoy the same and all rights of property, franchises, and interests, including appointments, designations, and nominations and all other rights and interests as trustee, executor, administrator, registrar of stocks and bonds, guardian of estates, assignee, receiver, committee of estates of lunatics and in every other fiduciary capacity, in the same manner and to the same extent as such rights, franchises, and interests were held or enjoyed by any such constituent institution at the time of such consolidation: Provided, however, That where any such constituent institution at the time of such consolidation was acting under appointment of any court as trustee, executor, administrator, registrar of stocks and bonds, guardian of estates, assignee, receiver, committee of estates of lunatics, or in any other fiduciary capacity, the consolidated national banking association shall be subject to removal by a court of competent jurisdiction in the same manner and to the same extent as was such constituent corporation prior to the consolidation, and nothing herein contained shall be construed to impair in any manner the right of any court to remove such a consolidated national banking association and to appoint in lieu thereof a substitute trustee, executor, or other fiduciary, except that such right shall not be exercised in such a manner as to discriminate against national banking associations, nor shall any such consolidated association be removed solely because of the fact that it is a national banking association.'

"SEC. 25. The first two sentences of section 5197 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 85) are amended to read as follows:

"'Any association may take, receive, reserve, and charge on any loan or discount made, or upon any notes, bills of exchange, or other evidences of debt, interest at the rate allowed by the laws of the State, Territory, or District where the bank is located, or at a rate of 1 percent in excess of the discount rate on 90-day commercial paper in effect at the Federal Reserve bank in the Federal Reserve district where the bank is located, whichever may be the greater, and no more, except that where by the laws of any State a different rate is limited for banks organized under State laws, the rate so limited shall be allowed for associations organized or existing in any such State under this title. When no rate is fixed by the laws of the State, or Territory, or District, the bank may take, receive, reserve, or charge a rate not exceeding 7 percent, or 1 percent in excess of the discount rate on 90-day commercial paper in effect at the Federal Reserve bank in the Federal Reserve district where the bank is located, whichever may be the greater, and such interest may be taken in advance, reckoning the days for which the note, bill, or other evidence of debt has to run.'

"SEC. 26. (a) The second sentence of the first paragraph of section 5200 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 84; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 84), is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: 'and shall include in the case of obligations of a corporation all obligations of all subsidiaries thereof in which such corporation owns or controls a majority interest.'

"(b) The amendment made by this section shall not apply to such obligations of subsidiaries held by such association on the date this section takes effect.

"SEC. 27. Section 5211 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 161; supp. VI, title 12, sec. 161), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"'Each national banking association shall obtain from each of its affiliates other than member banks and furnish to the Comptroller of the Currency not less than three reports during each year, in such form as the Comptroller may prescribe, verified by the oath or affirmation of the president or such other officer as may be designated by the board of directors of such affiliate to verify such reports, disclosing the information hereinafter provided for as of dates identical with those for which the Comptroller shall during such year require the reports of the condition of the association. For the purpose of this section the term "affiliate" shall include holding company affiliates as well as other affiliates. Each such report of an affiliate shall be transmitted to the Comptroller at the same time as the corresponding report of the association, except that the Comptroller may, in his discretion, extend such time for good cause shown. Each such report shall contain such information as in the judgment of the Comptroller of the Currency shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such affiliate and such bank and to enable the Comptroller to inform himself as to the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such bank. The reports of such affiliates shall be published by the association under the same conditions as govern its own condition reports. The Comptroller shall also have power to call for additional reports with respect to any such affiliate whenever in his judgment the same are necessary in order to obtain a full and complete knowledge of the conditions of the association with which it is affiliated. Such additional reports shall be transmitted to the Comptroller of the Currency in such form as he may prescribe. Any such affiliated bank which fails to obtain and furnish any report required under this section shall be subject to a penalty of $100 for each day during which such failure continues.'

"SEC. 28. (a) The first paragraph of section 5240 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 481), is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a colon and the following proviso: 'Provided, That in making the examination of any national bank the examiners shall include such an examination of the affairs of all its affiliates other than member banks as shall be necessary to disclose fully the relations between such bank and such affiliates and the effect of such relations upon the affairs of such bank; and in the event of the refusal to give any information required in the course of the examination of any such affiliate, or in the event of the refusal to permit such examination, all the rights, privileges, and franchises of the bank shall be subject to forfeiture in accordance with section 2 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, secs. 141, 222–225, 281–286, and 502). The Comptroller of the Currency shall have power, and he is hereby authorized, to publish the report of his examination of any national banking association or affiliate which shall not within 120 days after notification of the recommendations or suggestions of the Comptroller, based on said examination, have complied with the same to his satisfaction. Ninety days' notice prior to such publicity shall be given to the bank or affiliate.'

"(b) Section 5240 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 481), is further amended by adding after the first paragraph thereof the following new paragraph:

"'The examiner making the examination of any affiliate of a national bank shall have power to make a thorough examination of all the affairs of the affiliate, and in doing so he shall have power to administer oaths and to examine any of the officers, directors, employees, and agents thereof under oath and to make a report of his findings to the Comptroller of the Currency. The expense of examinations of such affiliates may be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency upon the affiliates examined in proportion to assets or resources held by the affiliates upon the dates of examination of the various affiliates. If any such affiliate shall refuse to pay such expenses or shall fail to do so within 60 days after the date of such assessment, then such expenses may be assessed against the affiliated national bank and, when so assessed, shall be paid by such national bank: Provided, however, That, if the affiliation is with two or more national banks, such expenses may be assessed against, and collected from, any or all of such national banks in such proportions as the Comptroller of the Currency may prescribe. The examiners and assistant examiners making the examinations of national banking associations and affiliates thereof herein provided for and the chief examiners, reviewing examiners, and other persons whose services may be required in connection with such examinations or the reports thereof, shall be employed by the Comptroller of the Currency with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; the employment and compensation of examiners, chief examiners, reviewing examiners, assistant examiners, and of the other employees of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency whose compensation is paid from assessments on banks or affiliates thereof shall be without regard to the provisions of other laws applicable to officers or employees of the United States. The funds derived from such assessments may be deposited by the Comptroller of the Currency in accordance with the provisions of section 5234 of the Revised Statutes (U.S.C., title 12, sec. 192) and shall not be construed to be Government funds or appropriated moneys; and the Comptroller of the Currency is authorized and empowered to prescribe regulations governing the computation and assessment of the expenses of examinations herein provided for and the collection of such assessments from the banks and/or affiliates examined. If any affiliate of a national bank shall refuse to permit an examiner to make an examination of the affiliate or shall refuse to give any information required in the course of any such examination, the national bank with which it is affiliated shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100 for each day that any such refusal shall continue. Such penalty may be assessed by the Comptroller of the Currency and collected in the same manner as expenses of examination.'

"SEC. 29. In any case in which, in the opinion of the Comptroller of the Currency, it would be to the advantage of the depositors and unsecured creditors of any national banking association whose business has been closed, for such association to resume business upon the retention by the association, for a reasonable period to be prescribed by the Comptroller, of all or any part of its deposits, the Comptroller is authorized, in his discretion, to permit the association to resume business if depositors and unsecured creditors of the association representing at least 75 percent of its total deposit and unsecured credit liabilities consent in writing to such retention of deposits. Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect in any manner any powers of the Comptroller under the provisions of law in force on the date of enactment of this act with respect to the reorganization of national banking associations.

"SEC. 30. Whenever, in the opinion of the Comptroller of the Currency, any director or officer of a national bank, or of a bank or trust company doing business in the District of Columbia, or whenever, in the opinion of a Federal Reserve agent, any director or officer of a State member bank in his district shall have continued to violate any law relating to such bank or trust company or shall have continued unsafe or unsound practices in conducting the business of such bank or trust company, after having been warned by the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal Reserve agent, as the case may be, to discontinue such violations of law or such unsafe or unsound practices, the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal Reserve agent, as the case may be, may certify the facts to the Federal Reserve Board. In any such case the Federal Reserve Board may cause notice to be served upon such director or officer to appear before such Board to show cause why he should not be removed from office. A copy of such order shall be sent to each director of the bank affected, by registered mail. If after granting the accused director or officer a reasonable opportunity to be heard, the Federal Reserve Board finds that he has continued to violate any law relating to such bank or trust company or has continued unsafe or unsound practices in conducting the business of such bank or trust company after having been warned by the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal Reserve agent to discontinue such violation of law or such unsafe or unsound practices, the Federal Reserve Board, in its discretion, may order that such director or officer be removed from office. A copy of such order shall be served upon such director or officer. A copy of such order shall also be served upon the bank of which he is a director or officer, whereupon such director or officer shall cease to be a director or officer of such bank: Provided, That such order and the findings of fact upon which it is based shall not be made public or disclosed to anyone except the director or officer involved and the directors of the bank involved, otherwise than in connection with proceedings for a violation of this section. Any such director or officer removed from office as herein provided who thereafter participates in any manner in the management of such bank shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both, in the discretion of the court.

"SEC. 31. After 1 year from the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding any other provision of law, the board of directors, board of trustees, or other similar governing body of every national banking association and of every State bank or trust company which is a member of the Federal Reserve System shall consist of not less than 5 nor more than 25 members; and every director, trustee, or other member of such governing body shall be the bona fide owner in his own right of shares of stock of such banking association, State bank, or trust company having a par value in the aggregate of not less than $2,500, unless the capital of the bank shall not exceed $50,000, in which case he must own in his own right shares having a par value in the aggregate of not less than $1,500, or unless the capital of the bank shall not exceed $25,000, in which case he must own in his own right shares having a par value in the aggregate of not less than $1,000. If any national banking association violates the provisions of this section and continues such violation after 30 days' notice from the Comptroller of the Currency, the said Comptroller may appoint a receiver or conservator therefor, in accordance with the provisions of existing law. If any State bank or trust company which is a member of the Federal Reserve System violates the provisions of this section and continues such violation after 30 days' notice from the Federal Reserve Board, it shall be subject to the forfeiture of its membership in the Federal Reserve System in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended.

"SEC. 32. From and after January 1, 1934, no officer or director of any member bank shall be an officer, director, or manager of any corporation, partnership, or unincorporated association engaged primarily in the business of purchasing, selling, or negotiating securities, and no member bank shall perform the functions of a correspondent bank on behalf of any such individual, partnership, corporation, or unincorporated association and no such individual, partnership, corporation, or unincorporated association shall perform the functions of a correspondent for any member bank or hold on deposit any funds on behalf of any member bank, unless in any such case there is a permit therefor issued by the Federal Reserve Board; and the Board is authorized to issue such permit if in its judgment it is not incompatible with the public interest, and to revoke any such permit whenever it finds after reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard, that the public interest requires such revocation.

"SEC. 33. The act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes", approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U.S.C., title 15, sec. 19), is hereby amended by adding after section 8 thereof the following new section:

"'SEC. 8A. That from and after the 1st day of January 1934, no director, officer, or employee of any bank, banking association, or trust company, organized or operating under the laws of the United States shall be at the same time a director, officer, or employee of a corporation (other than a mutual-savings bank) or a member of a partnership organized for any purpose whatsoever which shall make loans secured by stock or bond collateral to any individual, association, partnership, or corporation other than its own subsidiaries.'

"SEC. 34. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

CAPPER FAIR TRADE BILL

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have introduced a bill (S. 1592) which will afford sufficient and even drastic means of curbing untrue, deceptive, or misleading advertising. Based on the Printers' Ink model statute, which is now law in 25 States, it affords the most workable and effective weapon for making advertising honest and clean, and at the same time imposes neither hardship nor injustice upon the honest advertiser.

An advertisement is either truthful or untruthful; there can be no middle ground.

If an advertiser tells lies in a printed presentation to his trade, he ought to be made to suffer for it. On the other hand, the advertiser who does tell the truth should not be hampered, badgered, or harassed by bureaus or any other force.

Under the terms of my bill any advertiser who makes any untrue, deceptive, or misleading claims about his goods is guilty of a misdemeanor and is liable to fine or imprisonment or both.

The procedure is so natural and obvious that one wonders why anybody should think the best interests of business could be advanced by administration of this vital force by any bureau of the Government, no matter how high-minded that bureau might be.

The procedure is almost painfully obvious: Fine the dishonest advertiser or lock him up. Permit the honest advertiser to proceed with sufficient freedom.

One very strong argument in behalf of my bill, too, is that it will be preventive in its workings, as well as punitive. Any advertiser who would mislead or deceive is going to proceed with great care when he knows that in the strong hand of the Federal Government there is a weapon such as this.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed, in this connection, an editorial from the Portland (Oreg.) Oregonian.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Oregonian, May 26, 1933]

THE FALSE ADVERTISING BILL

Senator CAPPER's bill on false advertising, now before the United States Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, should become law.

Briefly summarized, the bill provides that false advertising—whether in publications that use the mail, in direct-mail advertising, or in radio programs—shall be a Federal misdemeanor, punishable with a fine of not more than $1,000, or imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both fine and imprisonment. Prosecutions, of course, would be the duty of the Attorney General of the United States.

The Federal bill is founded on the famous Printers' Ink statute, formulated some years ago by the magazine Printers' Ink, and now operative in 24 States out of the 48. It is argued, with reason, that leaving the advertising problem to the States has caused considerable confusion and general failure. Correction of the situation by concentration in the hands of the Federal Government is especially opportune at this time because of the foolish and dangerous suggestions that have been made in Congress in favor of a Federal bureau, under the Federal Trade Commission, to pass upon an advertisement before it is published. Such a board of censorship would slow down advertising tremendously, make it unweildy and cumbersome, and would deaden the whole business processes of the country. A Federal bureau large enough to pass rapidly upon all the advertisements submitted would likewise be large enough to swallow up the city of Washington. It would be another huge financial burden on the troubled taxpayers.

The Printer's Ink bill, on the other hand, is fair enough to all, and reasonably simple of operation. It would end the present chaos between the States, and offer needed protection for the purchasers.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no messages from the President of the United States, reports of committees are in order.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported favorably the nomination of Fredric H.

Taber, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the unexpired portion of the term of 2 years from January 22, 1932.

Mr. TRAMMELL, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably certain nominations for promotions in the Marine Corps.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The nominations will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

HERBERT J. DRANE

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I move that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the nomination of Herbert J. Drane, of Florida, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission, and that the nomination be considered at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, is the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], Chairman of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, here?

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I am here. I have been polling the committee. I have only one more Senator's signature to obtain, but have not been able to find him. The Senator from Florida asked that I poll the committee, and I said that when I had a majority of the committee polled I would submit the report; if not, I would take up the matter with the Senator again. There is one Senator's signature that I have not yet obtained, because I have not been able to find him.

Mr. FLETCHER. Who is the Senator?

Mr. DILL. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

Mr. FLETCHER. I did not know that it was necessary to have the signature of every member of the committee. The Senator has the approval of 15 out of the 17 members, I take it. We do not need everybody's approval to report a nomination.

I desire to say that this nomination came to the Senate on the 19th of May, and there was difficulty about getting a meeting of the committee. The chairman of the committee told me, when I spoke to him about it, that he could not secure the presence of a quorum of his committee. After a while I told him to name a date, and asked the privilege of appearing before the committee in behalf of the nominee. The chairman did name a date, and I appeared before the committee. At that time there were 8 members present, 7 constituting a quorum, and 6 of them wanted to report the nomination.

Mr. DILL. Mr. President, I do not want to indulge in any argument, but the Senator from Florida is misrepresenting the situation—unintentionally, I am sure. Seven is not a quorum of the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. I was told so by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. DILL. Then the Senator must have misunderstood me. I said seven constitute a working quorum, but do not constitute a quorum to act.

Mr. FLETCHER. What is a working quorum but an acting quorum? I accept the chairman's statement about that, if there is a distinction; but I do not understand the reason for the distinction.

Mr. DILL. I am perfectly willing to ask unanimous consent of the Senate to submit a report on the nomination, but I have been keeping my word with the Senator from Florida in every respect. I have polled the committee as diligently as I could.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] has been here today, and was here Saturday evening.

Mr. DILL. That is true; but he has not signed either way on the nomination.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the Senator has more than 12 members of the committee. Let the Senator go ahead and make his report.

Mr. DILL. The report I have here now is 9 in favor and 7 against. That is the vote of the committee. I am willing to ask unanimous consent to submit the report and have it go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. Herbert J. Drane, of Florida, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the term expiring June 22, 1937, vice Marcel Garsaud.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to consider the nomination now. It comes within the rule which has heretofore been established.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. At this late hour, I must object.

Mr. LONG. May I prevail upon my friend from Wisconsin——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I do not know anything about this matter, but the statement that there are seven members of the committee opposed to the nomination would indicate there is some question about it. I do not think we ought to take it up at this late hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. The only objection is that the chairman of the committee does not like the nominee.

Mr. DILL. O Mr. Presiden, I object to that statement. I have no objection to the nominee. I think the Senator from Florida is hardly fair in that statement.

Mr. FLETCHER. Possibly the Senator has some other nominee whom he favors?

Mr. DILL. No, Mr. President; I have not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall have to insist on my objection. I think tomorrow morning we will be in a better temper to consider it.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I say to the Senator from Wisconsin that it has been unanimously agreed heretofore that nominations of this kind that were not on the calendar might be called up in this way?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I looked into that matter very carefully. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] the other day asked unanimous consent that reports which had been made might be considered. I have no disposition, I will say to the Senator, to delay the matter unduly; but when the chairman of the committee makes the statement that there is a very close vote in the committee and when the nomination is reported to the Senate here at 25 minutes after 6 o'clock in the evening I think we ought to have a little time to find out what it is that caused the division in the committee. I think that is not an unreasonable request.

I am not a member of the committee; but the fact that seven members of the committee voted against the nomination would seem to indicate that they must have some reason for it besides a mere capricious reason. I hope the Senator will give me the opportunity overnight to inquire into it and find out what is involved. I assure him I have no disposition to delay the matter.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I interrupt both Senators? I do not believe there is anything unreasonable in the suggestion that the nomination go over until tomorrow.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am willing to have that done. I simply do not want this session of the Senate to adjourn without action on this nomination.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I should like to say to the Senator from Wisconsin that I believe I am informed on the subject of this nominee. There is no objection whatever, so far as I am informed, to the character or general qualifications of the nominee. He is a man of the highest character, and a man of notable ability. He is advanced in years, and some Senators have felt that that circumstance might impair his activity as a member of the Commission; but I have some knowledge of him personally, and I believe that he is efficient, and would be diligent in the performance of his duties. However, it is not a matter consideration of which can be forced at this late hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. Only in accordance with the rule upon which we have heretofore agreed.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Under the circumstances, I do not think I can withdraw my request. I will state to the Senator from Florida that I am not informed about the matter; but when a number of members of the committee have registered their votes against the nominee, I feel that I am put on notice to make some inquiry myself. If the Senator will be willing to let the matter go over until tomorrow, I shall not interpose any dilatory tactics.

Mr. FLETCHER. Both Senators from Florida have urged the nomination. They have known this man thirty-odd years. Every member of the Florida delegation in the House urges the confirmation of the nomination. Mr. Drane was nominated by the President. The only objection to him is that he is too old. He is 69 years of age. The finest work done by one of the justices of the Supreme Court was done after he was 90 years of age. It does not make any difference that a man is 69 years of age so far as his efficiency is concerned.

However, if the Senator from Wisconsin insists, I am willing to forego invoking the rule that has been adopted by the Senate. The rule was adopted, and I appeal to the Senator from Arkansas if that is not true. The other day we considered a number of nominations which were taken up as soon as they came to the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I hope my friend from Wisconsin will listen to me a moment.

I encouraged the chairman of the committee to try to persuade the President to withdraw this nomination on the ground of age. I had helped prevent the confirmation of Mr. Garsaud, and Mr. Drane has been named to the same office; but the two Senators from Florida persuaded me that this is a very fine old gentleman, very active for his age, a splendid type of citizen. I went to the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. DILL], after I had probably been the aggressor in the matter, and begged him, on the representations and the convincing arguments of the two Senators from Florida, to allow me to change my vote, which I have been accused of doing before, from "nay" to "yea."

There is nothing against the nominee. I do not think anyone would urge anything against him. It is a question of whether or not we wanted a younger man. The Senator from Florida himself has shown such fine activity at his age, many times superior to that which I am able to show at my age, that I thought probably I was doing the wrong thing in encouraging the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Manly's name came in one day recently. It was reported out the same day and confirmed. I did not object to the confirmation of his nomination. We have younger men on the Board, for that matter. Mr. Manly was appointed just two or three days ago and confirmed the same day his nomination was reported, by a poll of the committee. However, if the Senator from Wisconsin insists on his objection, I shall let it go over until tomorrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Florida?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it is very difficult for me to object to anything the Senator from Florida asks me to do; but I should like at least an opportunity to confer with some of the members of the committee who voted against this nominee in order to find out their grounds for their action, and whether or not I think they are reasonable. I do not think my request is an unreasonable one. It certainly does not imply anything derogatory to the nominee, for I do not know him, and I had never heard his name until it was read just now by the clerk.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to make just a short statement?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. I had never met this man until he came into my office and went over the situation with me. I was utterly astonished when I heard his age. In the committee I did not hear any member make a single objection except as to his age. That was all I heard. There was no comment as to his character or his fitness for the position, except that he had not had as much experience as some others have had; but it was stated that he had been a Member of the House and was a thoroughly trustworthy man.

I think we can go further and do infinitely worse than to confirm this nomination.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, for the third time I feel constrained to object. I shall not interpose any objection to the consideration of this nomination tomorrow.

IMPORTATION OF CEMENT

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD an article by H. E. Miles, chairman of the Fair Tariff League, relative to importations of cement, as follows:

AN ILLUSTRATION OF THE FAILURE OF THE TARIFF COMMISSION

THE CEMENT CASE

In reading the following think equally of the Tariff Commission and of cement.

The law requires the Commission to find "the difference in costs of production, including transportation and delivery to the principal markets in the United States" of the foreign and domestic product. The Commission considered only 14 seaboard points, consuming only 12 percent of our total. Its conclusions are, therefore, false. Had it considered "the principal markets", which consume 88 percent, the picture would have been entirely different, and one or more commissioners would have joined Commissioner Page in his dissenting declaration for free cement.

The Commission knew that the primary or naked cost of a barrel of cement in the Lehigh Valley (Pennsylvania, New Jersey, and Maryland), whence comes 25 percent of the Nation's output, averages 53 cents to 55 cents per barrel. It is 50 cents in efficient plants. This 55-cent average primary cost is discoverable from the Commission's report, but not without the help of an expert, the combination of many figures, and the use of one (7 cents), referred to but not stated. Why all this concealment?

The following table is in the form universally used by producers and distributors to show costs, selling prices, and profits. There is nothing of the sort in any Commission reports known to me in 10 years and nothing that in the slightest discloses hundreds of dozens of like situations:

Cement, Lehigh Valley—Cost, selling price, and profits, 1929

(Per barrel)

Primary or naked cost at mills, average	$0.53 to $0.55
Final cost on cars at mills, average	1.12
Cost delivered in New York City (freight, 42 cents)	1.54
Selling price in New York City, in bulk, carloads	2.30
Net, deduct cash discount 10 cents, dealer's commission 10 cents, freight 42 cents	1.63

Net profit on the Commission's exaggerated cost ($1.12) per barrel, 62 cents, or 50 percent.

This is double the profits to department stores on small hand packages. Cement is a bulk commodity, limestone or slag mixed with clay, fused by coal and delivered in carloads. This in 1929, the year reported on by the Commission when cement was on the free list and unbefriended by a Tariff Commission.

Only two of the above figures, the second and third, are in the report, and those in a table of 140 items assembled for so different a purpose that the writer failed to notice them in the above relationship until after 3 months an expert pointed them out. No disclosures of prices, though the law commands it, and they were thrust upon the Commission's attention by various authorities.

It was in the face of the above facts and others likewise convincing that the Commission approved of a tariff of 23 cents per barrel and gave a "robber trust" the legal right to add, in its sole discretion, $45,000,000 to consumers' prices. This in order that a few imports to a few seaports might be shut out. The above figures held substantially from 1922 to 1931, when the report was issued, during all which time the price of cement in New York and Philadelphia ranged from $2.30 to $2.40—some increase from a naked cost of 55 cents in mills close to these centers.

When the report was written the trust was exporting to Montreal, Canada, at an average price of $1.50 and as low as $1.15, and selling to the South Carolina Highway Commission at 92 cents a barrel. All this when the price in New York City was $2.30 and about this to 85 percent of American users.

CEMENT PRODUCTION AND IMPORTS

Production in 1929 was 170,000,000 barrels, valued at $252,000,000. Exports at world prices were 886,000 barrels, with imports only a little more, 975,000 barrels. Imports were due to our excessively high trust prices, and at that imported cement could be used only at 14 seaports and within trucking distance thereof. It was too expensive to stand rail transportation for the slightest distance. The ports using it bought 25 barrels of domestic cement for each barrel imported. It was to better this condition that we were taxed, at the trust's discretion, $45,000,000.

Why didn't the Commission disclose under its "efficiency" mandate that the excessive costs in Washington and Oregon of $1.64 to $1.70 per barrel are because these mills are very small—only one small kiln each, and that their materials come from hundreds of miles distant? These and like disclosures would enable Congress and the President to judge what all America should be tariff-taxed to make these little plants profitable.

MANUFACTURER'S PROFITS

The profits of the manufacturers were known to the Commission. Why ignore it? An investment of $5,000 in the Lehigh Valley Cement Co. in 1899 had returned in 1930 in dividends and appreciation $646,404. In the Atlas Cement Co. 100 shares in 1899 had become, in 1929, 2,200 of a market value, plus dividends, $133,631. This under the free list.

Profits were so great that plants were overextended and new people entered the business. The Commission said that there was 34 percent of excess and useless capacity, but the Commission allowed 6 percent interest on the total investment, equaling 9 percent on the capacity used in the big year of 1929. Thus the public is to pay a profit on speculative extensions, proven worthless.

The Commission allowed 16.4 cents per barrel, or $28,000,000 for "imputed interest", while disclosing that Belgium, where interest was higher, would require an interest allowance of only $8,500,000. As Belgium produces from chalk she needs less machinery for mining the material, but who will believe that this difference in the raw material justifies an excess annual interest allowance to our producers of $19,500,000? Of this interest allowance $9,500,000 is for the unused and unnecessary excess capacity noted above.

The cost to the public of the $45,000,000 tariff dole will be, if used, $27,000,000 to $30,000,000 added to highway and public improvements. Of this farmers will pay $9,000,000, with another $7,000,000 in price increase for cement used on farms. The trust is marvelously rich. The 50,000,000 on our farms and in villages dependent on farms are virtually bankrupt.

The law requires that "other relevant factors" shall be disclosed. Recently the Federal Trade Commission reported that $42,000,000 was utterly lost in freight charges on "crosswise shipments" of cement; that is, prices were so high that shippers sold in distant places beyond their natural territory, with long-haul shipments from various factories crisscrossing one another the country over.

Chicago, for instance, says the Trade Commission, would have saved $800,000 in 1 year if competition had obtained, in which case only mills nearby would have secured her business. The Trade Commission says that there being "virtually a 100-percent uniformity" in prices, Chicago bought one third nearby and two thirds from a distance, with a loss of 22½ cents per barrel in freight charges. Prices were so high that producers gladly absorbed the loss. Here is one item, $42,000,000, of economic waste almost equaling the $45,000,000 of tariff benefits given the trust by the Tariff Commission.

We here see one faithless commission damned by the disclosures of another commission in the innocent and faithful discharge of its duties.

TRUST PRICES BREAK IN BAD TIMES

Trusts like cement, whose price agreements are based on mutual pledges only and contrary to law, break down in bad times when members cut prices to get more than their share of business. At the end of a depression consolidations are likely, as in steel in 1900, with firmer control of prices than ever. So with cement now. Heaven help us later, except as Senator NORRIS' resolution, accepted by the Senate, saves us, as is probable, through the disclosures of the Federal Trade Commission, and rids us of the effect of the Tariff Commission's tax levy.

As said the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, Mr. McCumber, in 1922, "We want foreign competition to prevent combinations." In this case, to check the Cement Trust whose prices are now utterly demoralized with much to make up for upon opportunity.

Cement is only an illustration. Honest investigations would present dozens of like situations, big and little.

THE COMMISSION'S ATTITUDE

To the writer and some especially informed legislators and experts it seems that the Commission's attitude in most of its findings may be summarized as follows:

"A quantity of cement equal to one half of 1 percent of the Nation's total consumption is being imported into a few seaboard cities for use there only and within trucking distances thereof.

"These imports tend to reduce prices in these districts to moderation and thus to free these districts from the burden of the arbitrary and excessive prices from which other sections of the country cannot escape.

"The principle of 'equality for all' requires that these seaboard areas shall suffer equally with the rest. They must make equal contributions to the profits of the Cement Trust.

"That this will further increase, in ordinary years, the amazing profits of the trust is beside the question.

"We decline to consider producers' prices (sec. 332) or the extent to which the $45,000,000 in the tariff will be added to prices. That is in the discretion of the trust.

"We decline to consider 'the effect of this tariff upon the country' (sec. 332–A) or to segregate 'efficiently and economically operated' plants (sec. 337–A).

"If the law's general instructions (sec. 332–A) and special requirements (337–a) indicative of the purpose of Congress, are to be applied to each section of like sort, they should be repeated in each section. The above requirements do not appear in section 336 to which we confine our attention.

"We decline to consider 'other relevant factors that constitute an advantage or disadvantage in competition', or the effect of the duty upon 'the principal markets of the United States', although these considerations are required in section 336 (1–A). These considerations involve excessive profits, trust methods, etc. To disclose these and like factors, as Vice Chairman Page does in his dissenting opinion, would require one or more of us to agree with him, and likely all of us to declare for free cement as he does.

"If intellectual honesty is desired, the law should so declare.

"Likewise as to 'the public interest.' It is not mentioned in the law. What is it, anyway?

"That the President cannot act intelligently on a report thus restricted in scope is irrelevant and immaterial. The law only requires him to say yes or no to our proposal or to say nothing.

"The Commission approves of the present tariff on cement of 23 cents per barrel."

IN WHOSE SERVICE IS THE TARIFF COMMISSION?—THE WOVEN-WIRE CASE

As cement and woven wire are almost the only important dutiable products passed upon by the Commission, let us briefly consider the woven-wire case. It carried 40 percent protection before 1930 and 45 percent since 1930 until the President accepted the Commission's recommendation of 50 percent on one type and 60 percent on the other.

The Commission's report gives no data except costs in American plants, with foreign costs only inferred from importers' invoices.

The manufacturers say that some domestic mills pay the Wire-rod Trust $42 per ton for their rods from which wire is drawn, against $26.50 foreign price of rods. As the Commission includes in costs the price of materials whether unreasonable or not, it probably used this $42 price for some mills, and a much less sum—likely $10 less—for mills that make their own rods. This without disclosing the fact and permitting the President to judge to what extent supposedly small plants, enslaved to a trust, should be made profitable by a tariff tax upon consumers.

Nor is there a word about selling prices or profits. One big producer, the Keystone, that makes its own rods, I understand, made $1,748,000 in 1928 and $1,596,000 in 1929. In 1927 it made $25.92 per share of stock. Then in 1928 it split each of 33,714 shares into 6 new shares, upon which 202,284 new shares it made the apparently small profit of $6.16 per share, equal however, to $37 on each share in 1927.

Has this any bearing on the Commission's increase in its protection from 40 percent when these profits were made to 50 percent now on one type of wire and 60 percent on the other? The farmers who use chicken wire with eggs at 6c to 8c per dozen, and the builders of small homes will think that it has. Why not let the President have the facts? The lower courts say this increase was unlawful.

The wire plants were overbuilt in war time. The Commission says they have twice the needed capacity, but the Commission allows them 6 percent on this double capacity for which there is no use. This equals some 12 percent per annum on the capacity used and a handsome profit on their mistake, if such it was, in building to double capacity.

Is it not apparent that the Commission has no sense of the public interest? If hand-picked, employed, and paid by the manufacturers, could their reports, as honest men, be more exclusively from the manufacturer's standpoint?

Is it not fortunate that substantially all of the Commission's reports have been mostly upon trifles? Upon tacks rather than the Steel Trust? Upon snake skins rather than the Aluminum Trust? Upon green peppers, cigarette mouth holders, cucumbers, and feldspar rather than the Chemical Trust?

The pineapple report is false (see pp. 7365–7366, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 4, 1932). Also it taxes consumers $1,500,000 for a possible total benefit of about $3,000 to only 11 Florida farmers and 86 acres. Better this, however, than the consideration of important products. This costs less to consumers.

THE COST OF A BAD TARIFF COMMISSION—INDUSTRY'S SUPREME COURT

The Commission should be the supreme court of industry, the authority and determiner of costs, prices, efficiency, prosperity. When our ablest men know that those in power, supported by the public, will require a Commission comparable to the United States Supreme Court, then such men will serve upon the Commission. Not so now.

There is abundant evidence that 80 percent of our manufacturers want this sort of a Commission. Another 10 or 15 percent prevents.

THE FLEXIBLE PROVISIONS

The flexible provisions as used are a joke and a trick.

First, in 1922, the tariff profiteers tried to kill the Commission by the Frelinghuysen bill (S. 3199). Failing in this, they sprung the flexible provisions upon unsuspecting people, in Congress and out, who were pleased to think that a tariff commission's judicial and fact-finding processes would correct foolish, exploiting, and dishonest rates.

Instead, we have seen, since 1922, little else than one President after another, from first to last, misled by inadequate data, sometimes acting upon dishonest presentation of alleged facts; a President confused and pigeonholing tainted reports, disclosed to the public only when Congress required their publication (cotton hosiery, logs of douglas fir, etc.); raising the rates on pressed glass a few years ago until, if one could steal it abroad, he could scarcely pay the duty and sell it in Detroit or Cleveland, the places of principal consumption; then Congress correcting these disreputable rates with uncomplimentary disclosures; then Presidents, turning from problems that rack the world, to reports on bob-white quail, cucumbers, mouth holders for cigarettes, and so forth; then raising the duty on window glass from the Commission's misleading information; then raising the duty on woven wire, above-considered, and so forth. In short, almost every finding made upon inadequate information, bothering each President and, too often, with evil consequences.

Above all, and as intended, this has defeated the only important purpose of the Commission, its devotion to the disclosure of facts essential to a right general revision.

It has left Congress to make bad tariffs, as always, to the advantage of tariff profiteers and the exceeding loss, and sometimes the shame, of the Nation as a whole.

This has killed the Commission in character, purpose, and effect—also as intended. There is a volume of supporting evidence.

It does not answer to say that other countries have flexible provisions. That they may need theirs and use them honestly and well is of no present concern to us with our knowledge of how we use ours.

Commissions would not dare send such reports to Congress where hundreds of able men would investigate them. If Congress gets the reports the country may soon get a right commission.

Give us at once honest and competent commissioners or none.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, took a recess until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 13, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 12, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend John Compton Ball, pastor of the Metropolitan Baptist Church, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth, who hast set Thy glory above the heavens.

We, Thy children, bow before Thee in recognition of Thy marvelous power and wisdom and in the joyful consciousness of Thy great love. We pray that in these closing days, and perhaps hours, of this remarkable session of Congress Thy divine blessing might rest on all the good that has been done. Bless every act that has been passed that means helpfulness to men and the uplift of the Nation. May every good bill receive not only the signature of our President but also Thy divine approval, and may the day dawn speedily when prosperity shall cover our land as the waters cover the sea. We pray Thy blessing on every Member of Congress who, in the fear of God, has tried to do what he believed to be his highest duty; and when the hour of adjournment comes and we scatter to the distant parts of the land we love, be Thou with us on the way. Guide and guard us on the journey and bring us all in safety to our loved ones and home. In Jesus' name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 10, 1933, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 1867. An act authorizing an appropriation to provide for the completion of the George Rogers Clark Memorial at Vincennes, Ind.

The mesage also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 5091) entitled "An act to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code", disagreed to by the House, agrees to the conference asked by the House, and appoints Mr. KING, Mr. STEPHENS, and Mr. BORAH conferees on the part of the Senate.

RESIGNATION FROM A COMMITTEE

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication, which was read:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 10, 1933.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
Speaker House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: I hereby resign my membership on the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. MARTIN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty Members present, a quorum.

INVESTIGATION OF APPOINTMENT OF RECEIVERS, ETC.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business is House Resolution 145, which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] called up Saturday evening. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 145

Resolved, That, when in its judgment such investigations are justified, the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives be, and it is hereby, authorized to inquire into and investigate the matter of appointments, conduct, proceedings, and acts of receivers, trustees, referees in bankruptcy, and receivers in equity causes for the conservation of assets within the jurisdiction of the United States district courts.

SEC. 2. The said committee, or subcommittees thereof, to be appointed by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, shall specifically inquire into and investigate the selection of receivers and trustees, and the selection and appointment of counsel and assistants to such receivers and trustees, referees, custodians, auctioneers, appraisers, accountants, and other aids to the court in the administration of bankruptcy estates and equity receiverships; and shall inquire into and investigate all other questions in relation thereto that would aid Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

SEC. 3. The said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, to be appointed by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, shall inquire into and investigate the action of any district judge or judges in the setting up and promulgating of any rule or rules of practice of the court appointing the same person or corporation as receiver in all cases or in any class of cases, and to inquire into and investigate the action of any district judge or judges in setting up and promulgating any rule or rules of practice of the court which in effect, directly or indirectly, interferes with or prevents the control of bankruptcy estates by creditors according to the spirit and letter of the bankruptcy statutes; and to inquire into and investigate all other questions in relation thereto that would aid the Congress in any necessary remedial legislation.

SEC. 4. The committee shall report to the House of Representatives not later than the 31st day of January 1934 the result of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems advisable.

SEC. 5. The said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee or of the chairman of any subcommittee and shall be served by any person designated by any of them. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY], but I do not yield for the purpose of offering any amendment to this resolution as reported by the Committee on Rules. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is House Resolution 145, which I am directed by the Committee on Rules to report. The resolution is offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER]. It has been considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, and it came from that committee to the Committee on Rules with a unanimous recommendation that it be adopted. It was then reported favorably to the House by the Committee on Rules.

The purpose of the resolution, briefly, is to authorize the Committee on the Judiciary of this House, when, if, and as it deems it appropriate and necessary, to investigate the method and the manner of the appointment of trustees in bankruptcy cases, and receivers in equity in the Federal courts. That sounds like a very innocent resolution, and I think it is a very innocent resolution, so far as it affects those who are innocent. I was somewhat surprised when I called this resolution up on Saturday night to be met with a point of no quorum, followed by a motion to adjourn. The only conclusion that I can draw from that, to be perfectly fair with everybody, is that there is some objection to the Committee on the Judiciary of this House making this investigation, because some gentlemen in this House fear that there is something that might be disclosed by such an investigation that some people may not want disclosed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am sorry, but I have only 5 minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But the gentleman made a statement, and I think he should like to have the real truth in respect to the matter.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If I have made an incorrect statement I shall be very glad to yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No one is afraid of what the Committee on the Judiciary will do, but this is not at all necessary.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I do not yield further. That is a matter of opinion. All gentlemen will remember that on Saturday night the moment this resolution was called up a point of no quorum was made, followed by a motion to adjourn and a roll call. Everyone can draw his own conclusions. I may be right, and the gentleman from Massachusetts may be right. I have a right to the expression of my own personal opinion that there is something in the resolution that somebody does not want investigated. I know very little about what is back of all this, but I do know that this House and the Senate has just been through an impeachment trial that took a great deal of time and a great deal of money, where one of the main questions involved was the charge that the judge was unfair in the appointment of receivers and that he was allowing to his personal friends large fees that were not justified by the service being rendered.

It seems to me that the Committee on the Judiciary of this House might well investigate such a charge. I only know there has been emblazoned across the front pages of a Chicago daily that a certain judge in Chicago had allowed to the firm with which his son was connected fees in bankruptcy cases in 1 year aggregating $200,000 and more. There might be nothing worthy of investigation in the charge, but to my mind, that subject might well be looked into by the Committee on the Judiciary of this House.

The Members of this House know that just a few days ago a resolution was passed by this House for the impeachment of a judge in Florida. I am informed that the basis of those charges was that that judge was abusing the power of the Federal court in appointing receivers, in appointing his friends as counsel for those receivers, and allowing them large and unconscionable fees. There may be nothing wrong about that, but, to my mind, in all fairness to everybody, it seems to me it might well be investigated by the Committee on the Judiciary of this House.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it not true there was brought to the attention of the Committee on Rules facts tending to show very shocking and scandalous abuse of these appointment privileges?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. There undoubtedly was.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman tell us where it was shown?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think I can say it was in California, and not confined to the judge whose impeachment trial was just completed. It was also complained of in Florida, and I might say complaint was also made from the State of Illinois and other States that I do not recall at this time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Does this committee intend to go to California to conduct an investigation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The committee will determine that. I do not yield further at this time.

I do not know personally about these things. I only know what has come to us, but I want to say that in the State of Virginia there are two Federal judges. They are both Republican Federal judges, but they are clean, honest men. They are as clean as a whistle. Neither of them have consulted me about this and I have not consulted them about it, but I venture to say that if it were stated to those judges that there were abuses carried on in the bankruptcy court, the first men to ask that the matter be investigated would be those Federal judges of Virginia. I believe that is true of a majority of the Federal judges of the United States, both Republicans and Democrats. Let us give a clean bill of health to those who are clean, and let us clean house with respect to those who are unclean. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, the principal and most obvious objection to this resolution is its utter uselessness. No good purpose can be served by the passage of this resolution. It will become a dead letter the moment it goes on the statute books. It provides that the Judiciary Committee may constitute itself into a roving band of investigators, roaming from one end of the country to the other, prying into the affairs and business of the courts of the United States; but you notice it does not provide for any funds. It provides no funds to pay traveling expenses or stenographers or clerks or experts or any of the other expenses which these roving commissions always incur. To my mind, it is exactly like giving your wife permission to go shopping without giving her any funds. The demand for funds is sure to be forthcoming very quickly.

The real inspiration for this resolution is the situation in the southern district of New York, where the Irving Trust Co. has been selected for receiverships for the last 4 or 5 years in all cases, large as well as small. The gentlemen from New York City know that. The inference is that there is something scandalous or wrong or wicked about that proposition, and a short explanation should be made.

About 4 years ago there was a series of rather scandalous receiverships in New York City. There were some defaulters, absconders, and a few suicides, a great deal of public attention was directed to the situation, and demand was made for reform. Judge Knox, who is senior judge of the southern district of New York, called all of the judges of that district into conference, eight in all, to determine upon some means of correcting a bad condition. They decided unanimously that the way to handle the situation was to ask some trust company to accept appointment as receiver in all cases, both large and small, so that they might find it profitable. The Irving Trust Co. was decided upon because it was a strong bank, a bank of excellent reputation, and conveniently located to the United States courts. The judges went to the trust company. The trust company did not seek the business. They consented to set up a department of bankruptcy, and Captain McCormack, who is now Commissioner of Immigration under the new administration, was put in charge of that section of the bank. He administered bankrupt estates in the name of the bank. He was the head of the bankruptcy department of the Irving Trust Co.

That plan was not designed by the judges of the southern district of New York to be a permanent solution but a temporary expedient in order to break up a bankruptcy ring which had developed in that city.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. Does the gentleman think it a good policy for a Federal judge to submit to a trust company or a bank, no matter what its reputation is, the proposition of handling all the bankruptcy cases and having that bank establish a department of bankruptcy within the bank, a monopoly in that district to handle bankruptcy matters?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. No; I do not. I am coming to that point if the gentleman will be patient.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That is a practice which was established in the open and is part of the rules of the district courts in the southern district of New York, is it not?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is allowed and sanctioned by the rules of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. LEHLBACH. They do not have to bring in any resolution to find that out.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is well known to the gentleman from New York who introduced this resolution. He is particularly familiar with the whole situation.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I will yield a little later.

The result of this practice has been to deprive many reputable lawyers of honest business. Naturally they are resentful. The lawyers of the country have been resentful for some time at the steady encroachment into their legitimate field of business by the trust companies.

As I say, the judges of the southern district did not intend this to be a permanent solution, but a temporary expedient to break up a situation which was particularly bad at that time.

This matter was brought to the attention of the Judiciary Committee. It was discussed there.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Are the companies now in that district who go into bankruptcy able to get a better and squarer deal than they did previously when bankruptcy cases were referred indiscriminately?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. There has been no scandal since the Irving Trust Co. has acted as receiver. But I want to come to the point; and this is something each Member should hear. When the McKeown bill which was passed by this House was considered by the Judiciary Committee the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] called this practice to the attention of the Judiciary Committee and offered an amendment to that bill.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 additional minutes to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRUAX). The gentleman is recognized for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That situation in New York City was carefully discussed in the committee. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] offered an amendment to the McKeown bill, which was accepted by the committee and has been passed by the House. Probably but few Members have read the McKeown bill through. I wish to read one section of it, as it is aimed directly at this New York City situation.

Section 3, page 29, reads as follows:

In the administration of the act of July 1, 1898, entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, approved July 1, 1898, as amended"— a district court, or any judge thereof, shall make, in its or his discretion, such an equitable distribution of appointments as receiver as will prevent any persons, firms, or corporations from having a monopoly of such appointments within such district.

Here is the point—

That is now in the bill that has already been passed by Congress. It is the remedy the gentleman from New York seeks here. He has it already.

Now, as far as information is concerned, nothing can be revealed that is not already well known. A few years ago the New York Bar Association made a very elaborate, extensive, and complete investigation into the administration of bankruptcy estates. Former Deputy Attorney General Donovan was employed by the Bar Association of New York City to conduct the investigation. A vast amount of data has been obtained and is available to anyone who wishes to see it. Not only that, but in 1930, upon the instructions of the President, the Department of Justice also conducted a very extensive investigation into the administration of bankruptcies, and the practice generally throughout the United States. If any of you are interested I refer you to Senate Document No. 65, Seventy-second Congress, where all these matters the gentleman complains of are set forth, where a remedy is proposed and where a draft of legislation is actually suggested.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. BYRNS. I wish the gentleman would tell the House why objection should be made to a committee of this House investigating to see whether or not Federal judges are complying with the law and making exceptions or giving preferences to individuals in their districts, or to banks, or other agences.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Perhaps the distinguished leader misunderstood me. What I just quoted is not yet the law. That is a provision of the McKeown bill which passed the House a few days ago.

Mr. BYRNS. What is the reason a committee of the House did not investigate this situation?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I say we have the remedy in the bill that passed the House and complete data is available from investigations recently concluded.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The resolution applies not only to bankruptcy cases, but to all equity causes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That is true.

Mr. GILCHRIST. So the provision in the McKeown bill would not cover all that is contemplated by this resolution. Am I right?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think the thing that is complained of is the appointment of a certain group of preferred individuals as receivers in equity and bankruptcy cases. I do not think there is any distinction to be made in that respect.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The resolution covers other things than receivers.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes, it does. The resolution covers receivers, trustees, auctioneers, and so forth.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What is the gentleman's idea as to what constitutes a monopoly under the Bankruptcy Act to which he refers? Suppose 99 cases are sent to the Irving Trust Co., and 1 case to somebody else; is that a monopoly?

Mr. CLARKE of New York. All bankruptcy cases are sent to the Irving Trust Co. in the southern district of New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. At the present time there is a monopoly. The remedy the gentleman from New York suggested and was adopted by the House is that there should be an equitable distribution of appointments as receivers so as not to favor any persons, firms, or corporations or permit them to get a monopoly on such appointments.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from New York 5 additional minutes.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Has the Irving Trust Co. this monopoly?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I believe it has up until the present moment.

Mr. KELLER. How long has it lasted? When did it start?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. The gentleman from New York is better informed than I am, but I think about 4 years.

Mr. KELLER. Does not the gentleman think that a set of judges who permitted such a condition to arise as to justify, in their own judgment, such a procedure, ought to be investigated thoroughly?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. We know all about it now. The Donovan committee made a very thorough investigation as well as the Solicitor General of the Department of Justice.

Mr. KELLER. Apparently the judges do not know all about it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. As I have said, it was a temporary expedient, and the matter was brought to a focus. The judges themselves took the initiative and now we have some legislation in a bill which has passed the House that was suggested by the gentleman from New York, the author of this resolution.

Mr. KELLER. How long is the thing to be temporary?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I expect the McKeown bill to be passed, which will put an end to it.

Mr. KELLER. But this has been going on 4 years.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I am afraid I have not made myself clear, but there are other points involved. First, all the knowledge we could obtain by any investigation is already available and at hand.

Mr. KELLER. But not officially before this body.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. It is in Senate Document No. 65, which was published in the Seventy-second Congress and is likewise in the report of the Donovan investigating committee of New York City.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Did the bar association want the change made at the time it was made? Did they not want the change made at the time these matters were placed with the Irving Trust Co.?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I think there was a great deal of public indignation about it at that time and a demand for reform.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. And at that time they wanted a change.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. There was a series of scandals, some arrests, a few suicides, and considerable public indignation.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. The information which the gentleman says would be revealed is information concerning the scandals before the Irving Trust Co. was appointed; but this resolution seeks to develop the scandals—and I will say to the gentleman there are such scandals—after the Irving Trust Co. was set up as a monopoly. We seek to inquire into the Irving Trust Co. and its monopolistic tendencies, and that is all there is to it. It is now buried so deep it will never be revealed unless there is such an investigation.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I may say to the gentleman from New York that the gentleman who has had charge of this work for the Irving Trust Co. is a distinguished Democrat. His high character has been recognized by this administration, and he is now the Commissioner of Immigration. So far as going around the country smelling for scandal is concerned, I do not believe in it. If there is anything definitely wrong anywhere, let someone come in here with an affidavit and let us have an investigation and clean up that particular state of affairs; but let us not go around the country snooping and sniping and sharpshooting at the United States judges.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman would not object to investigating a Democrat, would he?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Certainly, I would, unless there were definite information justifying it.

Mr. KELLER. The gentleman would?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Certainly.

Mr. KELLER. I would not.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Let me say to the gentleman that I am afraid I have not made myself clear. My position is that this is a perfectly useless piece of work. If we have any definite information that should warrant an investigation, let us make an investigation of that particular matter and not go all around the country casting discredit upon the judges of this country. At this time, that would certainly be highly undesirable. When the people of the country lose faith or confidence in the judiciary, it will be a sorry day for us. I am not in favor of throwing the proposed investigation wide open and creating a roaming, rambling, smelling committee without any good reason for it.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. CELLER. The gentleman knows this is not a fishing excursion or a rambling proposition, and an investigation can only ensue if the chairman of the Judiciary Committee so determines with the members of the Judiciary Committee, of which the gentleman and myself are members. I am sure we can trust the wise and sagacious chairman of our committee not to let the committee go around as a roaming, rambling committee.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. As I said at the outset of my remarks, I think this resolution will be a dead letter if passed, because the Judiciary Committee has neither the time nor the information to go around snooping into the affairs of honest judges.

Mr. FORD. If the judges are honest, what is the gentleman's objection to this resolution?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. I tried to sum up my answer to that question by saying that before you investigate a judge or any other person in high position or authority, you should have something to justify it, because when an investigation of the judges is ordered you immediately arouse suspicion and cast discredit upon them. In my opinion, in these days we should concentrate our efforts on restoring confidence in the Government and in the people who hold high positions of public trust. This resolution can have no effect except to arouse suspicion and cast reflection on the judges of this country, which is not warranted.

Occasionally there is a judge who is arbitrary, occasionally there is a judge who is incompetent, but it is mighty seldom a judge is found in any court of this country who is corrupt. When any man is investigated, public suspicion is aroused against him, and in my opinion this is wrong and should not be done.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure everyone will agree with the gentleman that the Judiciary Committee does not intend to go around the country investigating honest judges. The ones they want to investigate are those who are allowing these unconscionable fees to receivers.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. In those cases affidavits should be brought before the committee and definite investigations authorized. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, this resolution should not be confused or mixed up in the minds of my colleagues with the former Resolution 110, which likewise was introduced by our colleague Mr. CELLER, from New York. All the objectionable features that were in Resolution 110, to which on May 16, 1933, I objected, have been eliminated from this Resolution No. 145.

For instance, Resolution 110, to which the Speaker sustained my point of order and killed it, was introduced on April 18, 1933, went to the Rules Committee, and was reported by that committee favorably on May 3 of this year.

When it was called up in the House on May 16, 1933, I made a point of order against it, that the Rules Committee did not have authority to report a resolution of that character because of its charge on the Treasury, and the Speaker sustained my point of order.

Then the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] reintroduced the resolution leaving out the objectionable language and the committee favorably reported it.

Let me give you the language that was in Resolution No. 110 which was left out of this new resolution, no. 145.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I have not the time. The language to which I objected has been omitted.

Here is one paragraph that was in no. 110 which has been left out of this resolution, no. 145, to wit:

> To employ suitable counsel, assistants, and investigators in aid of its investigation, as well as such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants.

Note that there was no limit on the salary or the number of experts or attorneys. I said that under that clause there could be spent $250,000, and there could; if we were under the Republican regime, when they had the Walsh and the Graham investigation, they could have spent $500,000. But the Speaker sustained my point of order and thus killed Resolution No. 110, and this new Resolution No. 145 leaves that language out.

There is another clause that was in said Resolution No. 110 that has been left out of this no. 145 under which money could have been spent. This clause that is not in the new resolution is the following:

> To have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary; and all such expenses thereof shall be paid on vouchers ordered by said committee and approved by the chairman thereof.

The resolution that is before the House now, no. 145, is a proper resolution, properly framed, properly safeguarded, under which there will not be spent over $5,000, because I have the assurance of my good colleague from Texas, in whom we all have confidence, Mr. SUMNERS, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, who assures me that he is going to handle this investigation himself, and he does not believe there will be half of the $5,000 expended and guarantees that they will not expend over $5,000. When the gentleman from Texas assures me of that fact I know that he is going to keep his promise. I know that the Committee on Accounts, headed by my good friend, Mr. WARREN, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. COCHRAN, will never allow over $5,000 to be expended in this matter. Therefore I am for this resolution, no. 145. We ought to stop these big expenses for receivers, we ought to stop these monopolies, we ought to stop a district judge's giving $250,000 to one firm of lawyers in a short space of time.

It ought to be stopped, and I am glad to see my friend from Chicago [Mr. SABATH], our good friend who stands for proper law enforcement in this country, except as to liquor, standing for the cleaning-up of these Federal judges who allow improper fees.

Mr. MOREHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I yield to our good friend from Nebraska, one of the soundest and most valuable men in this House.

Mr. MOREHEAD. What is in my mind and what is perhaps in the gentleman's mind is this: Will this develop, as it usually does, into a junketing trip?

Mr. BLANTON. I think not. The Committee on the Judiciary, headed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], is going to be careful about expenses and has promised not to spend over $5,000, and it is going to put the fear of God into the hearts of a lot of these judges who allow big fees that are not earned; and I am afraid that a lot of them are going to be Republican judges, from the way Republicans are fighting this measure.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TRUAX). The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, when this resolution came before the Committee on Rules, there were only two people who appeared in support of it. One was the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], who advocated an investigation, and the other was a Representative from New York, who believed an investigation was not necessary, but who wanted legislation, which in the last analysis is necessary if we are to accomplish anything. I was interested in the attitude of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON]. I wonder when his conversion came about. I am wondering if that conversion came after the tilt of last Friday with some Republicans, because only last week he asked me if he could have time to oppose this legislation. When this resolution, reported here this afternoon, was before the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] came to me and asked me if I would vote against it.

Mr. BLANTON. That was on House Resolution 110, and before I knew these matters to which I referred were left out.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. No; it was not before they were left out. It was only 3 days ago, and this resolution has been pending in this House for a good many days. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] wonders why we did not permit this to be called up at 10:30 o'clock on Saturday. Think of it! We had been sitting for 13 long hours, and everybody but the leadership of the House knew it was impossible to get final adjournment on that night. Why should we take up something entirely new and highly controversial at that time? Everyone knows it was wisdom and proper conduct on the part of a legislative body to adjourn. Yet I admit it was a good time to have this resolution come up, because it would be much better to pass it at night than in the daytime. The legislation can do but one thing. It must be an instrument of intimidation, and nothing else. If there is anything wrong about the laws on the statute books concerning bankruptcy cases, the 25 able men who make up the Committee on the Judiciary of the House know it. They know the practices throughout the country, and they can bring in a bill and pass the legislation if reform is necessary. In all the hearings before the committee we have heard of some institution in New York which is getting all the cases. Nothing was said as to how the general public was going to be assisted in a change. The complaints came because some failed to win appointments. I know nothing about the New York situation, nor do I know intimately the general conditions of this country.

The judge under fire here is a Democratic judge, and I do know one of the great outstanding newspapers in New York has editorially stated conditions at the present time are infinitely better than they were before the rule complained of was put into effect. I cannot say as to this, but I do say it is not necessary to conduct an investigation which is going to cost time and money.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Was there any information brought to the Committee on Rules why this should be done at this time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. None at all, and I suspect it is here mainly because of the persistency of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Chicago; and I commend them for their persistency, because persistency is what brings about legislation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it not a fact that it was reported to us that the Committee on the Judiciary of the House by a very preponderant vote had recommended to the Rules Committee that this resolution be reported out?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is true.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that is true, does not that justify the Committee on Rules in granting the resolution?

Mr. O'CONNOR. And may I supplement what the gentleman says by the statement that the Rules Committee was twice told that the Committee on the Judiciary unanimously approved this resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If we were to have an investigation every time a committee of the House asked for it, we would be eternally investigating. The job of the Rules Committee is to separate what is entitled to investigation and what is not worth investigating. The gentleman knows it is very easy to get a resolution of investigation out of a committee when the Member who seeks it is a member of that particular committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I obtained unanimous consent to extend my remarks so that I could make my position plain as against the assertion of the gentleman from Massachusetts that "I asked him 3 days ago for time to speak against this resolution", and then he refused to yield to me to show that my opposition was to the Resolution No. 110 and was before we forced the objectionable features of the measure to be eliminated, and before we had an understanding about the maximum amount that could be spent. All of my opposition was against Resolution No. 110. We did force all the waste and extravagance out of that measure. We did have a distinct understanding that not more than $5,000 would be spent under this Resolution No. 145, and that no lawyers or experts would be employed, whereas lawyers without limitation and experts without limitation as to number could have been employed under Resolution No. 110, and they could have been paid any salary the committee desired to pay them, and there could have been spent $250,000 or even $500,000 under said Resolution No. 110, whereas under this amended new Resolution No. 145 we are given definite assurance by my colleague the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary [Mr. SUMNERS] that not more than $5,000 will be spent.

On May 16, 1933, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], by direction from the Committee on Rules, called up said Resolution No. 110, which had been favorably reported by the Committee on Rules. I quote from the RECORD the following to show that I immediately reserved a point of order:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order on the resolution before it is discussed.

And I reserved the point of order, notwithstanding that just prior thereto the following colloquy occurred between the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN], then Acting Chairman of the Committee on Accounts, and the Speaker, to wit:

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is this bill being considered under unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

And if you colleagues will look on pages 3497 and 3498 of the RECORD for May 16, 1933, you will see that it was my point of order, sustained by the Speaker, that killed said Resolution No. 110, and that it was after said Resolution No. 110 had been killed by my point of order that this amended new Resolution No. 145 was prepared and introduced, with all the waste, extravagance, and objectionable features of Resolution No. 110 stricken from it, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the discussion has gone along far enough now that I shall make the point of order. The Speaker may as well rule now as at any other time.

I call the Speaker's attention to section 5 of the resolution, page 3, reading as follows:

"The said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned"—

This shows they can sit any time and anywhere in the United States, from Alaska to the Gulf of Mexico. It is further provided that they may—

"Hold such hearings, employ suitable counsel, assistants, and investigators in aid of its investigation, as well as such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary; and all such expenses thereof shall be paid on vouchers ordered by said committee and approved by the chairman thereof."

Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Committee on Rules has no jurisdiction whatever to report to this House a resolution of this kind, because the resolution shows on its face that it is a charge on the Treasury.

Such a resolution as this could cost the Government $200,000, or even twice that sum. The 25 members of this Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, between now and the 1st of next January could sit in every big city in the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Their railroad fare, traveling expenses, hotel bills, would be paid by Congress. They could employ as many lawyers as they wished, and pay them any salaries they wished, wholly without limitation. They could employ high-priced experts, clerks, stenographers, wholly without limit. We know how much the Joe Walsh committee cost. We know how much the Graham, of Illinois, committee cost. We know that the coal-investigating committee cost, first, $400,000, and then another $400,000. We know that the initial cost of the Wickersham Committee was $500,000. I am going to try to stop all such resolutions that do not provide for a limitation of expenses. This resolution is clearly subject to a point of order, because the Committee on Rules does not have any authority or jurisdiction to report such a measure that carries such a charge on the Treasury.

While the Rules Committee would have the right to bring in a rule to make such a matter in order, it has no right, in the first instance, to favorably report such a resolution. I insist that my point of order is good and should be sustained.

And after my point of order had been debated pro and con, I closed the debate on it, and the point of order was sustained by the Speaker, and the resolution ruled out of order, as is shown by the following, which I quote from the RECORD, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. This resolution clearly is subject to a point of order. It authorizes this big committee to sit all over the United States, wherever and whenever it wants to sit, between now and next January 1. Who says that will not cost a lot of money? It authorizes this committee to employ high-priced lawyers and fix their salaries, wholly without limit. That could cost a large sum of money. It authorizes this committee to employ experts and clerks and stenographers and to have printing done, and the expenses are to be paid by vouchers approved by the chairman. Certainly that is a charge on the Treasury, and the Committee on Rules does not have authority to report such a measure.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair thinks that the provision incorporated in section 5 of the resolution authorizing the committee to employ suitable counsel, assistants, and investigators in the aid of its investigation, and also the provision authorizing all necessary expenses of the investigation to be paid on vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, is a matter properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on accounts. It has been held that where the Committee on Rules reports a resolution of this kind and there is incorporated therein matter which is within the jurisdiction of another committee the matter so included destroys the privilege of the resolution insofar as it prevents consideration at any time by the mere calling up of the report by the Committee on Rules. For this reason the Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

It is thus clearly shown from the RECORD of May 16, 1933, Mr. Speaker, that it was my point of order that killed said Resolution No. 110. It was after Resolution No. 110 had been thus killed that the present Resolution No. 145, now before the House, was introduced with the objectionable features left out. I did not know until a few days ago that they had been left out. I had told my colleagues, Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and Mr. CELLER, of New York, and Mr. SABATH, of Illinois, members of the committee, that if they would leave the objectionable features that permitted great waste and extravagance that were in Resolution No. 110, out of it, that I would support a proper measure authorizing such an investigation; and I had a distinct understanding with all of them that they would not spend more than $5,000 on the entire investigation. My colleague from Texas, Mr. SUMNERS, chairman of the committee, personally assured me that he would conduct the investigation, and that he would keep the expense within $5,000. Under such circumstances, I agreed to support a measure providing for a proper investigation.

The objectionable parts of Resolution No. 110, that permitted waste and extravagance, and under which anywhere from $200,000 to $500,000 could have been spent, and which they left out of the present amended measure reintroduced as Resolution No. 145 now before the House, are the following:

The said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to employ suitable counsel, assistants, and investigators, in aid of its investigation, as well as such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants—

to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary; and all such expenses shall be paid on vouchers ordered by said committee and approved by the chairman thereof.

The above wasteful and extravagant provisions that were in Resolution No. 110, killed by my point of order, are not in this new resolution, No. 145, that we now have before the House for consideration. So it is manifestly unfair for any Member to assert that I have changed my position. I killed Resolution No. 110, because under it there could have been anywhere from $200,000 to $500,000 possibly wasted. I am supporting the present new resolution, No. 145, because the provisions above mentioned were left out of it, and because I have been assured reliably and definitely that not more than $5,000 would be spent under it.

When, the other day, my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] asked me if I wanted time against the Celler resolution, I did not then know that this new resolution, No. 145, had been introduced with the objectionable matters left out, but assumed that Mr. CELLER was getting a proper rule from the Committee on Rules that would make in order his said Resolution No. 110, so that it could not be reached by a point of order, and that it was said Resolution No. 110 that would be brought up again, so naturally I told him that I wanted time against it. But I had in mind all the time said Resolution No. 110 which I had killed by a point of order. But when I learned from Mr. CELLER and from Mr. SABATH that they had introduced a new resolution, No. 145, and had left the objectionable features out, which features I insisted on being eliminated I had marked for them in a copy of the resolution, and when they and my colleague, Mr. SUMNERS, assured me that not over $5,000 would be spent, naturally I agreed to support No. 145, because such an investigation as it provides for is needed and will be more than well worth the possible $5,000 that may be expended under it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, I agree somewhat with my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] that it would have been better if we had legislation presented to the House to break this monopoly immediately, but on the theory that half a loaf is better than none at all I am in favor of this investigation to secure the facts in order to legislate, in order to break up this unnecessary monopoly. Why do all these Members of Congress who do not come from our judicial district in New York come before the House and tell us what we should do in the southern district of New York State?

The fact is these Federal judges are appointed by the President of the United States after investigation. I submit that those same Federal judges ought to be able to investigate the character and qualifications of the lawyers and business men who are appointed referees, and who handle the bankruptcy cases and act as receivers. We still have in New York a number of able, honest, and upright lawyers and honorable business men. The reason for this resolution is simply this, that a few years ago a Republican judge, I am sorry to say, went wrong. He failed in his sworn duty, and he was practically impeached in the Congress and had to resign. Just because he made some poor appointments, the remaining judges decided to create a monopoly and turn over all bankruptcy cases to the Irving Trust Co. I am not here to denounce the Irving Trust Co., but I am opposed to any monopoly of this kind. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCFADDEN].

Mr. MCFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I am not in favor of this investigation. I believe there is sufficient information available so that the Congress can correct by legislation the deplorable situation which exists.

I want to discuss for a few moments the situation as it exists in the city of New York in regard to bankruptcies, receiverships, and reorganizations. For some few years past the bankers in New York City have been engaged in the reorganization and sale of new securities of industry in the United States. It has been very profitable to them. Under the well-known plan of reorganization, issuance of preferred and common stocks, "A" and "B" stocks, they sold those securities to the country after they had taken out the cream, and the investors and the banks of the country have been holding the bag.

I have frequently paid my respects to the New York bankers, some of whom have been examined at the other end of the Capitol recently, and others which I hope are to be examined. They created hundreds of millions, yes, billions of dollars' worth of securities, and unloaded those worthless securities on the public.

Now the situation exists that many of those same corporations which issued the securities are in bankruptcy or in receivership, and this same crowd of financial interests that exploited the public is now engaged in the reorganization of those industries. They have taken them back as so much junk and will now let the public have them back at a new and higher price. To do this they have caused to be organized bondholders' committees, stockholders' committees, creditors' committees, and all sorts of committees which they always control in connection with the reorganization of those bankrupt concerns whose securities they had previously sold to the public. They are preparing now to reorganize and to resell to the public at an early date those same companies—with a gilded covering after deducting expenses and their share of the new securities. This is a complete monopoly. There is no question about that, but I am not laying it to the judges, nor am I laying it to the lawyers only, as they represent these financial interests who are doing this job of racketeering. These all-powerful bankers are the source that you must attend to if you intend to correct this evil. The power of these bankers is responsible for the injustice in this situation. It is a deplorable situation and should be stopped in some way. Congress has sufficient information before it to correct the situation.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MCFADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I only have a few minutes.

I would like to point out how this racket is being carried on when these receiverships come in. Under the present plan as it has been operating for the last year or two, a great many of them are turned over, under some law or some regulation in New York, to the Irving Trust Co. Practically all of these industries, railroads, and banks, and all kinds of businesses, which have failed, or which these bankers desire to reorganize are handled by this trust company. When they get into the Irving Trust Co., which is one of the inside institutions controlled by friendly banking interests, trust companies who listen to the wishes of their banking friends, these things are laid out on the table. These reorganization bankers have a look at the poor companies and decide who shall reorganize it; which one of the favored institutions shall have it and who the attorneys shall be. Then they employ these attorneys. There are 5 or 6 big law firms which are attorneys for most of these reorganizations. They, or members of their firms, sit in on the bondholders' committee, they sit in on the stockholders' committee, and when they get ready to fix their fees, of course the attorneys get together as they usually do in those matters and fix the fees, and the judge approves. Now, that is the procedure that is going on. The stockholders, scattered over all the country, have little if anything to say as regards their interests. The bankers and lawyers do as they wish. I want to say that that is a situation which should be corrected, because it is not a matter for New York City alone. It is a matter of the investors throughout the United States, and the investors with small holdings who are in the minority and cannot appear at those meetings have very little to say as to what shall be done with these concerns which are being reorganized. They are just out of luck. They get common stock in place of the bonds or preferred stock which they previously held.

Let me cite one of them. The National City Bank of New York, or should I say the National City Co., sold to the investors of the country over $75,000,000 worth of securities for the Dominican Sugar Co. In the early part of 1929 they sold a $20,000,000 bond issue to the public and the first coupons were not paid. The National City Bank recently started a reorganization of this company and very generously offered to subscribe to $6,000,000 worth of the new bonds which were to be issued at 80 cents on the dollar to supply working capital, when, as a matter of fact, the National City Co., or Bank, should have been made by the courts to put up this money and reorganize this company for the benefit of the exploited stockholders and bondholders who had been previously induced to buy these securities. Had the public known the truth about this Dominican Sugar Co. they never would have purchased any of these securities, nor should the National City Bank have been permitted to have sold these securities to the investing public. I mention this to show the type of securities which bankers of the type of the National City Bank sold to banks and innocent investors during and prior to 1929. An examination of the reorganization plan of this company is quite typical of those that I am referring to here, and it would be worth the time of the Judiciary Committee to look into this particular exploitation and reorganization.

The carrying on of these operations to which I am referring has assumed the proportions of a racket, and only those people who are on the preferred list get the receiverships, or the trusteeships, or the attorneyships. So far as the banking and legal end of these operations are concerned, the tie-in is complete. Attorneys in New York are well aware of the important part that the bar association plays in the assignment of these juicy jobs, and only those who are in good standing with the inside banking group are permitted to participate. Is it any wonder that the lawyers on the outside, who are of the greatest number, are asking for an investigation? I hope that the Judiciary Committee will bring in a bill at once for the purpose of protecting the innocent banks and stockholders throughout the country who are at the mercy of this organized racket composed of bankers—national and international—favored trust companies, and favored attorneys.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUFFIN].

Mr. RUFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not supporting this resolution because I have in mind any particular judge or any particular officer or any particular court that ought to be punished. I have no such in mind. As far as I am concerned, I have never been misused in the practice of law in Federal courts that I know of. I am supporting this resolution because I can conceive of no higher duty that Congress owes to the people of this country than to keep a proper watch over the judiciary of the United States. [Applause.] If they do not do it, the people have absolutely no guaranty of any protection. The people can watch us, and if we get too big for our positions they can catch us with that scythe that sweeps through the country every 2 years, whereas the judiciary are not subject to that sort of discipline.

I am supporting this resolution because of the rumors that have been floating over the country relative to alleged conditions which are supposed to be prevailing in the country. I do not know whether they exist or not. I do know that impeachment proceedings are very costly and generally, unless convictions are had, they serve no good purpose.

I think it is far better to investigate the judiciary before you start these proceedings, and then no injustice is done to anyone. I think, as does my good friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], that there is no occasion to waste a whole lot of money in one of these proceedings unless upon an investigation it should be determined that we ought to do considerably more than we are now convinced should be done. I think this resolution is timely and that it should be endorsed. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KRAMER].

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I happen to know something about the nature of the investigation this resolution proposes to undertake. Much of my career has been that of a practicing attorney in connection with receivership proceedings. Many years ago in Illinois, when I was practicing law in that State, receivership proceedings were there confined to some of the distinguished attorneys who were favorable to the judges and to the referees in bankruptcy.

Referees in bankruptcy, as I understand, may earn something like $65,000 or $75,000 a year. Just think of it! Here we are Members of Congress, at a salary of $8,000 a year, doing 10 times the work of these referees, yet by reason of the fees allowed attorneys and by reason of the fees fixed by statute the bankruptcy proceedings go on until the bankruptcy act is no longer a universal act of bankruptcy. Each one of the referees in the various districts are taking care of some particular lawyers and friends to the extent that it has become a racket.

In California, where I now live, one of the judges in San Francisco was sought to be impeached by the House and was tried by the Senate. That investigation grew out of bankruptcy proceedings, certain friends of that district judge having practically a monopoly on bankruptcy cases in his court. Impeachment proceedings are costly. I dare say this investigation should go on. Let us clean up this Bankruptcy Act once and for all. Let us put it on the basis where it belongs.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HEALEY].

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Speaker, in connection with this resolution I want to read a recent order of the Supreme Court as reported in a dispatch carried by the New York Times of May 15:

> No ancillary receiver shall be appointed in any district court of the United States in any bankruptcy proceedings pending in any other district of the United States except (1) upon the application of the primary receiver, or (2) upon the application of any party in interest with the consent of the primary receiver, or by leave of the court of original jurisdiction, or a judge thereof.
> No application for the appointment of an ancillary receiver shall be granted unless the petition contains a detailed statement of the facts showing the necessity for such appointments, which petition shall be verified by the party in interest or the primary receiver or by an agent of the party in interest or primary receiver specifically authorized in writing for that purpose and having knowledge of the facts.
> Such authorization shall be attached to the petition.

That order resulted from a petition filed by New York lawyers, and the petition, among other things, alleged the following as reported by this dispatch:

> By reason of the far-flung activities of these chains, a certain type of collection agencies and others purporting to act for creditors have found an opportunity to profit through the unnecessary appointment of ancillary receivers, and these practices have become prevalent throughout the United States, the lawyers said.
> As an example of the cases they had handled, where unnecessary ancillary receivers had been named, the lawyers cited the following with the number in each case:
> "Schulte United, Inc., 24; Miller's, Inc., 22; Retail Chemists Corporation, 5; Snyder's Hat Stores, Inc., 13; United Cigar Stores Co. of America, 8; McLellan Stores Co., 17; McCrory Stores Corporation, 6; Louis K. Liggett Co., 4."
> In each of these cases, it was said, the primary receiver was in position to control all the affairs of the bankrupt estate through the main office of the bankrupt, pending the election of a trustee.
> Under the head of waste, the petition said that in the case of Schulte United, Inc., ancillary receivers received $40,883 in fees, their attorneys $34,999, attorneys for petitioning creditors $1,125, and referees in districts other than that of primary jurisdiction $1,379.

I believe the investigation called for by this resolution will have a salutary effect in curing abuses practiced under the Bankruptcy Act.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WEIDEMAN].

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Mr. Speaker, it has been said we should not investigate these judges for the reason that it might embarrass them. It seems to me if it be a fact that such an investigation would embarrass them that is just another reason for the passage of this resolution. Any judge who is honest, who has been doing the things he ought to do, should welcome this investigation in order to clear his own skirts. The situation in the city of New York, San Francisco, Boston, and the city of Chicago has been mentioned. In my own State, in the city of Detroit, it is reported conditions are such that neither the press nor anyone else can inquire into the records of the court to see how much money has been paid to receivers, attorneys for receivers, and referees. These are public records, and should be open for inspection. I am very suspicious when the records of a court are closed.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Let me call attention to the fact that out in Minnesota for the past few years practically all the judges of that State have been sending receivership cases to the same gang of highbinders in the State of Minnesota. One crowd gets it all.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. That seems to be the general complaint. Whether a judge is Democratic or Republican, honesty should be a part of his character and he should be above political parties. Whether a judge be Republican or Democrat, if he needs investigation we should start now to investigate him.

They say it will disturb the people of the country. Why, the judges are under suspicion today in the manner of handling receiverships. We should allay the suspicion. The way to do is to have the thing settled by a thorough investigation so it may be known which judges should remain in office and which should be removed from office. We should undertake to clean up the judiciary if it needs cleaning.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEIDEMAN. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Is it not a fact also that but 4 or 5 of them have turned back to the Treasury any portion of their salaries? This in itself should be sufficient to warrant an investigation.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Yes. We have a judge in our State who is a bank director and who owns farms, yet he has not contributed a penny in refunds on his salary.

A Federal judge receives a salary of $10,000 per year and has a life job. Under the present laws the judges are not subject to the 15-percent cut which all other Federal employees are subject to, even down to the janitors, letter carriers, and clerks. The Government has received refunds from a very few judges, and I hope the honor roll is extended by the addition of the Michigan judges. If we must economize on the disabled soldier by cutting his allowance from $12 per month to $10, the judges should be able to get along on a little less than $10,000 per year.

To get back to the subject of receiverships, I believe that the records of the court should be thrown open to investigation, so the public can know whether or not companies that are thrown into receiverships are being milked by the receivers. Are certain firms of attorneys receiving all the assignments? Is a monopoly being fostered by giving all the receiverships to a certain trust company to the exclusion of all others? Are the moneys due to creditors and stockholders of companies being given in excessive amounts to a favored few law firms and trust companies? This matter should be investigated now for the protection of the public and for the protection of those judges who do not indulge in this practice. Let us clean up the receivership racket. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I believe it will be in the interest of the judiciary of this country to pass this resolution. Up to a few years ago every American looked with the greatest reverence upon, and had the utmost confidence in, the Federal courts. It is to be deeply regretted that in the last few years people have lost that confidence in those courts and have, in fact, severely criticized them, which criticisms, in many instances, have been justified.

Yet, notwithstanding the fact that our national bar association and bar associations in various States and cities have pointed out the abuses that have penetrated our Federal judiciary, large numbers of Federal judges have failed to take cognizance and aid in restoring the high standing of the Federal courts.

It is because of this apathy of many of the Federal judges to public and legal opinion and of the increasing abuses that the demand has arisen in recent years for the appointment of judges for restricted terms, rather than for life terms, and, in some instances, for the election of Federal judges, instead of appointment as now.

Ever since the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] introduced the resolution in regard to the Irving Trust Co.; ever since the report of the Chicago Bar Association to Judge Woodward was published; and ever since the impeachment proceedings against three other judges, the demand for an investigation of our judiciary has reached tremendous proportions.

During the last 30 days I have received many requests to file impeachment proceedings against Judge Woodward, as well as against other judges; but, realizing the task of preparing and presenting a case to the Senate and the tremendous cost of impeachment proceedings, and for the sake of economy, I felt that a resolution to investigate the many abuses or charges of abuse would save much time and money.

I know that the majority of our judges are men of honor and above reproach, but I am convinced, because of the large number of complaints I have received, and because of the many charges that have been filed, that there are Federal judges who have been extremely rash, to say the least, in exercising their judicial prerogatives.

I feel that the conditions which prevail in many districts warrant this investigation, and that not only should those who have been guilty of misconduct be removed, but that those who have performed their duties fearlessly and honestly should be placed in the proper light before the American public.

It has been charged that many of those who occupy prominent positions and who brought about, through rash and dishonest manipulations, the destruction and bankruptcy of corporations and firms whose affairs and management they were entrusted with, have been able to obtain the appointment of their friends as receivers and their legal advisers as attorneys for such receivers, in that way depriving the creditors and the investors of a voice in the administration of the properties.

Though I have been urgently requested to call your attention to some of the most glaring cases, I shall refrain from doing so, feeling that this committee, under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS], will give them due and proper publicity and will call the attention of the country to them.

Because I, as a member of the Rules Committee and the steering committee, have obtained approval and favorable action on this resolution, there are many who feel that the publicity given to the report of the Chicago Bar Association on Judge Woodward and to the first resolution, which demanded an investigation of the Irving Trust Co., called for the favorable report on this resolution, and that these were the only outstanding cases.

This, however, is not the case. Considerable evidence from many sections of the country was laid before the steering committee, as well as the Rules Committee, concerning not only the question of favoritism but of the misconduct of many of our judges.

I feel, therefore, that before legislation is contemplated or impeachment proceedings commenced, Congress is entitled to all information and as much evidence and as many facts as this important and serious condition warrants.

I wish to assure the House that there is nothing personal in this matter. The fact is that 3 years ago I requested the Attorney General to make an investigation along these lines, which investigation resulted in the amendment to the bankruptcy law. Because of a willful and deliberate filibuster by some of the gentlemen on the Republican side, whenever any effort is made to investigate the existing abuses or misconduct of any Government department we find the Republicans solidly allied against and protesting against any proposition to investigate.

I wish to call their attention to the fact that every investigation called for by this House or Senate has been justified—unlike the 32 investigations which they began in 1921 and 1922, after the war, and after they came into power. These investigations, conducted by the Republicans at a tremendous cost to the Government, disclosed the fact that matters under the Democratic administration had been conducted honestly, efficiently, and honorably.

The only two resolutions that I have advocated—the one to investigate stock-exchange manipulations, and the other to investigate the post-office property purchases and leases and the air mail contracts—have been of great benefit to the country, not only directly, but indirectly, and I am sure that this investigation, the cost of which, I am assured, will be held down to $5,000, will result in and inure to the everlasting benefit of our judiciary and our country, and, in fact, to a much greater degree than all investigations conducted by the Republican Party for political reasons at a cost of millions of dollars to the Nation.

The gentleman from New York stated a few minutes ago that conditions in New York were scandalous. But what is true in New York is likewise true in many other districts, and for this reason I hope that the honest Republicans who have the interest of the country at heart and who desire to reestablish confidence in our judiciary will join with us in passing this resolution.

It has been suggested that I insert some of the evidence that was produced at some of the proceedings of several bar associations, including that of the Chicago Bar Association, but I shall not encumber the record, feeling that the Judiciary Committee will bring to the attention of the country those reports and findings which, I am sure, will justify the House in granting that great committee this power of special investigation.

Before I conclude, I should like to say that I regret very much that the Chicago Bar Association has failed to comply with my request and furnish me with a copy of the hearings upon which it issued the report on April 24. I am satisfied, however, that this committee will not only obtain these hearings but also the evidence not embodied in the report of which they had knowledge, and which was called to their attention. This latter thing, to my mind, is of graver import than the case to which they restricted themselves.

I doubt very much that my efforts would have availed, were it not for the courageous position taken by the Chicago press. They are entitled to the sincere appreciation and thanks of those who have the sanctity of our judiciary at heart.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to incorporate therein some excerpts and put in the differences between this resolution and Resolution 110 that we formerly refused to pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I would like to clear up any misunderstanding that may be in the minds of the Members of the House with respect to the cost of this investigation.

It has been said that under House Resolution 110 this committee could have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars and that under this resolution the situation is entirely different. This is not true at all. Under the previous resolution, which was opposed by a point of order, not one penny could have been expended and the committee was not empowered to spend one penny unless appropriated by the Committee on Accounts, precisely as under the pending resolution. The resolution lost its privileged status because it carried legislation and not because it authorized the expenditure of money, and the point of order being raised, it was rereported by the Committee on Rules with the legislation eliminated. This legislation will come before the House today from the Committee on Accounts with the money necessary appropriated in that resolution from the Committee on Accounts.

So with respect to expenditures, there is no more difference between Resolution 110 and Resolution 145 than between tweedledee and tweedledum.

Now, with respect to the need or desirability of this legislation: In the first place, no resolution of this character should be passed unless there is a most clear and unquestioned need for it. The Committee on Rules has in its files hundreds of resolutions of investigations at every session of Congress, and every time one is reported and every time one is passed the pressure on behalf of all the remaining resolutions increases in almost geometric progression. The gentlemen on the Committee on Rules know this to be the fact.

Now, what is involved here? It is a question of policy, and simply a question of policy.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield for a question.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. This is a very serious arraignment of the bar and the lawyers of this country, because all these judges are lawyers, and I want to ask the gentleman if the President has recommended this legislation?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am not in the confidence of the President, but I have never heard that he has.

Under the old system of receiverships, when a concern was placed in bankruptcy, the trustee, or if it were insolvent, a receiver in equity, was appointed by the court largely upon the recommendation of the attorneys for the petitioners or by agreement among certain creditors or by reason of pressure brought by persons in whom the judge had confidence or whom he wished to favor. As a result, in various districts of the Federal courts grave scandals developed, and it was determined by the judges sitting in a majority of the districts throughout the country that the way to protect the estates of the bankrupt and the interests of the creditors was to pick out some experienced, reliable person or institution and turn over all receiverships to him. Whether this policy is better than the old policy is a question for the Judiciary Committee to determine, and they do not have to have an investigation by the committee to consider this question and legislate accordingly. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, the Government of the United States requires and demands the confidence of the people. This applies to all branches of the Government. Today, I am told, that the confidence of the people has been gained by the legislative branch, by the House and Senate, and certainly it has extended to the executive department, and today our people have the greatest confidence in our Executive, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

We want our people to have confidence in our courts. I can remember the time when an attorney went into court and wanted a $15,000 fee for a little work in a bankruptcy matter where the assets amounted to only $25,000 and no such fee was allowed, and my only argument was, "Your honor, I do not see how my adversary can look you straight in the eye and ask for that fee." I was told later that if I withdrew these remarks the fee would be paid, but they were not withdrawn.

We need this investigation not to punish anybody, but to have our people absolutely confident so far as the judicial department of our Government is concerned. We should know what exists in order that we can suggest changes in our judiciary or court practices to the Congress, if they are needed to furnish this confidence. Often the fault is with the system, rather than the man. In any case let us have this investigation and restore full confidence in our Government on the part of our people. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the honest and the efficient judges need have no fear about this investigation. The inefficient and the dishonest judges, and those who abuse their privileges, may have fear of this investigation. This investigation will not be confined to New York, as some of its opponents seem to imply. Complaints have been received from the following districts: From Memphis, Detroit, Chicago, and Los Angeles. We already have impeachment proceedings pending against two judges in the States of Massachusetts and Florida. Incidentally, this resolution will go a great ways toward relieving the House and the Senate of cumbersome impeachment proceedings and the terrific expense thereof. This resolution ought to clear the atmosphere. It will be a sort of disciplinary sword of Damocles hanging over the heads of the judges.

I have great respect for our judiciary. In no sense would I disparage it. There are some judges, however, whose knuckles need cracking, and I assure you, my friends, that after this resolution is passed we shall discipline them. The judges, for example, in the Southern District of New York, who persist in setting up the Irving Trust Co. as a monopoly, should be told in no uncertain language that they are in the wrong. Does it not seem strange that they stubbornly continue the practice of slavish surrender to the Irving Trust Co. despite the fact that the Judiciary Committees of the Senate and the House oppose this practice, and despite the fact that during the last session and the present session of Congress the House passed bankruptcy bills containing provisions which prohibited this practice? In the light of that direction from Congress these judges deserve condign punishment for their stubborn clinging to error.

This investigation will not be a random fishing excursion, as has been charged. We shall only investigate where there are authentic complaints. The Committee on the Judiciary, one of the great standing committees of the House, can be trusted to act carefully and judiciously. Its chairman is wise and efficient and just. He can be relied upon to do the fair thing.

It is charged that there is nothing to investigate; for example, in New York; that everything has already come to the surface and is known. That is not true. Much remains to be revealed. We wish to examine and pull into the sunlight the evils of the monopoly in New York, and then bury that evil so deeply that it will never again raise its head.

The Irving Trust Co. is receiver in, by this time, probably 6,000 cases of bankrupt estates. Such a monopoly is unheard of. It is receiver for the Insull units, including the National Public Service Corporation, the Seaboard Public Service Co., the Cuban Dominican Sugar Corporation, the Krueger & Toll Co., with match factories over all the world, the International Match Corporation, the Savoy-Plaza Hotel, the Hotel Pierre, and a score of other huge hotels in New York, the Garment Center Capital Building, and many other tall skyscrapers, the American Solvents and Chemical Corporation, Browning, King & Co., and the Eastern Palliament Corporation, formerly known as Wallack Brothers, the Chain Store Haberdashery and Cigar Companies, the Lenner Dress Shops, the Owl Drug Stores, the Whalen Drug Stores, the McCrory chain stores, and many other chain-store aggregations.

Let me show you how this monopoly affects the membership of this House. Under rule of the court, the Irving Trust Co., when appointed receiver in New York, becomes the ancillary receiver of the bankrupt estate wherever it may be located. If, therefore, the United Cigar Stores, for example, in bankruptcy, has one store in Memphis, Tenn., another store in Denver, Colo., and another in St. Louis, Mo., the Irving Trust Co. becomes ancillary receiver in Memphis, Denver, and St. Louis, as well as in New York. Thus the Irving Trust Co. does not confine its efforts to New York, but, like a giant octopus, it is reaching out in all directions. Self-respecting lawyers in your respective districts cannot act as ancillary receivers. They must bow down to this great monopoly and give way to it.

A receiver is always precluded from mingling his own funds with the funds he receives as receiver. That is not so with the Irving Trust Co. The judges grant the Trust Co. the right of mingling its own funds with the moneys that come to it as receiver. It puts up bonds of $13,000,000 as security. It puts this into a vault, over which its officers and the senior district judge in New York have joint control. This is an unheard-of procedure. And since the Irving Trust Co. is a New York City institution, in the event of a failure of solvency or liquidation, I am convinced that this $13,000,000 worth of bonds could not be deemed a preference to be set aside for the bankruptcy estates. New York State law, so far as I know it, recognizes no such preferences. This $13,000,000 worth of bonds belongs to the depositors first and then to the stockholders.

It is no answer to say that this institution is a sound one and that there is no danger of its going under. We said that of many institutions in 1929 and 1930; yet they went under. If anything happened to the Irving Trust Co., the bankrupt estates would be left without protection. The depositors and the stockholders could attack the setting aside of these bonds and demand that they first be paid, or at least that the bankrupt estates be classified as ordinary depositors and share equally with the depositors.

I have examined the statements of the Irving Trust Co., and I saw no indication therein that the $13,000,000 of bonds had been set aside for the alleged benefit of the bankrupt estates. I asked the superintendent of banks in the State of New York to take cognizance of this and demand that the statement should tell the whole truth.

I charge that the Irving Trust Co. has shown favoritism to certain bidders. It has shown favoritism in the selection of appraisers, custodians, actuaries, accountants, and counsel. Those who serve the bank directly or indirectly get these plums. The court exercises no control over these aides to the court. It has surrendered all authority to the Irving Trust Co. Large fees have been earned by the lawyers, but generally only those lawyers are appointed whose clients bring business to the bank. This is but natural. If you are a good depositor of the Irving Trust Co. and you have a lawyer whom you want to favor, go to the Irving Trust Co. and you jolly well can do a good turn for your lawyer friend. All this should be and must be investigated.

Several cases have manifested themselves where one bankrupt estate has a claim against another bankrupt estate, so that we have the anomolous situation of the Irving Trust Co. as receiver suing the Irving Trust Co. as receiver.

The New York State Bar Association, the Federal Bar Associations of New York, Connecticut, and New Jersey, the New York County Lawyers' Association, the Brooklyn Bar Association, and the Bar Associations of the counties of Richmond, Queens, Bronx, Nassua, and Westchester have condemned this practice. I should say that over 50,000 lawyers are represented in these important groups.

The resolution of the New York County Lawyers' Association and part of the preamble thereto, concerning the Irving Trust Co., are as follows:

Whereas a careful examination and analysis of the report filed by the Irving Trust Co., dated November 30, 1932, shows this bank to be of no practical advantage to creditors over the administration by the creditors themselves under the bankruptcy law and no improvement for the public interest; and

* * * * * * *

Whereas this association believes that a monopoly of any nature or character is wholly contrary to the best interests of this community and is abhorrent to the spirit of Anglo-Saxon institutions as well as intolerant to the genius and intent of the common law: Now be it

Resolved, That the New York County Lawyers' Association, in this special meeting assembled, disapproves the practice and rules adopted by the judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York under which the Irving Trust Co., a corporation, has been designated official receiver.

The resolution of the Brooklyn Bar Association is as follows:

Whereas such practice tends to transfer the opportunity and remuneration for such service to a financial institution not organized for the purpose of performing receivership duties, and lacking individual responsibility therefor, operating through innumerable employees who never come into contact with and whose identities are wholly unknown to the judge appointing the receiver, such clerks and employees owing primary responsibility and obligations to their employer, the financial institution, and not to the court or the receivership estate; and

Whereas such practice is prejudicial to the public interests and operates to the detriment of the receivership estate, and precludes the proper and flexible and discretionary exercise of the functions of the court, and is calculated substantially to defeat the purpose for which the power of appointment of receivers is entrusted to the courts, and to involve at times the exercise of functions by a corporation which are legal and professional in character, which members of the bar have performed for generations, and which they are specially educated and qualified to perform, thereby constituting an infraction of the spirit, if not the letter, of the statute forbidding the practice of the law by corporations; and

Whereas the New York State Bar Association at its annual meeting in 1931 deprecated the practice which we now deplore and deprecate and by resolution endeavored unsuccessfully to prevail upon the judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York to return to the practice of appointing individuals instead of a corporation to receiverships: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That this association deplores and disapproves of such practice and routine of appointing corporate receivers; and

Judge Martin T. Manton, of the Circuit Court of Appeals, has expressed himself as follows:

All integrity, honesty, and understanding have not left the bar just because of the so-called "bankruptcy scandal." Lawyers give to bankruptcy cases their individual, personal attention—their humane consideration. They are efficient and competent, and, I believe, can handle the exigencies of bankruptcy situations more satisfactorily than a banking corporation.

I say let the Irving Trust Co. stick to its own knitting. Let it do banking and let the lawyers handle receiverships.

There is another item that I want to bring up before I conclude. I desire to have investigated the allowances made to the Irving Trust Co. I am quite convinced that some of these allowances are illegal. For example, it has paid extra moneys for custodians. It has paid extra money as high as 10 percent of the sums collected. Ordinarily a receiver is given for his services a sum fixed by the court as just. He is never given extra allowances, such as compensation for expenditures in making collections. That is a part of his job. He is never given a special allowance for custodians.

Furthermore, the Irving Trust Co. in some cases does not appoint attorneys, and in such cases it therefore practices law. This is a violation of the New York State statute, since no corporation is permitted to practice law.

The Irving Trust Co. appoints one firm of accountants; namely, Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery. Thus, we have a monopoly setting up in turn another monopoly.

Now, let us consider the matter of referees. The expenses for referees are large, being in accordance with a provision of so-called "rule 21, Rules of the Court." These rules may be changed by the judges. Let me give you some of the fees earned by the referees in the city of New York in 1931 and 1932:

Name of referee	1931	1932
Coffin	$20,445.55	$50,482.05
Davis	20,694.08	24,399.22
Ehrhorn	16,674.58	20,908.76
Stephenson	17,819.43	33,047.62

Just think of it. Referees in the city of New York receiving as high as three to five times the salaries of the judges. The job of referee in New York is far better than the job of a Congressman. In addition to the above fees, the New York judges allow these same referees extra allowances when they serve as "special master" or "special commissioner." I charge that some of these special allowances are contrary to law, where there has been an adjudication. I desire that this be investigated.

The judges know all about this situation and have known it since December 13 last. They know about these high fees and have known of them since December 13 last. What action have these judges in New York taken to remedy this situation? They have done nothing. That should be examined.

Mr. STUDLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. STUDLEY. Is it not a fact that these fees are fixed by statute?

Mr. CELLER. No. These fees may be regulated by the judges. However they are regulated and fixed, these judges surely should have taken some steps to curtail such fees.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on adopting the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEHLBACH) there were 125 ayes and 29 noes.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to extend my remarks generally.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I want to call attention to the fact that of the 29 Members who voted against the resolution just passed only 2 were Democrats.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman has no right to make that remark.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the interruption of the gentleman from Texas appear in the RECORD?

Mr. BLANTON. I had a right to reserve an objection, and to make pertinent remarks under such reservation.

Mr. SNELL. I did not understand that the gentleman reserved any right.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserved the right to object, and it will appear in the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserved the right to object, and I had a right to do it. If I had not had the right to call attention to the party complexion of the vote against the bill there might have been an objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas reserved the right to object, and that will appear in the RECORD. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey to extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, under the unanimous consent granted me to extend my remarks and incorporate excerpts, I desire to show that the provisions of Resolution No. 110 and Resolution No. 145, and the RECORD, support the contention made by me in this debate, and that same do not support the contention made by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH], when in his speech he asserted: "So with respect to expenditures there is no more difference between Resolution 110 and Resolution No. 145 than between tweedledee and tweedledum," and when he further asserted that "a charge on the Treasury" had nothing to do with the Speaker sustaining my point of order against said Resolution No. 110. In parallel columns I want you to compare the provisions of section 5 in this Resolution No. 145 now before the House, and you will see that with respect to expenditures under the two resolutions there is quite a difference. And it is much more than that "between tweedledee and tweedledum." Here is what the two provide:

Resolution 110	Resolution 145
SEC. 5. The said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to employ suitable counsel, assistants, and investigators in aid of its investigation, as well as such experts, and such clerical, sten-	SEC. 5. The said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to sit and act at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or other-ographic, and other assistants, to require the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, to take such testimony, to have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary; and all such expenses thereof shall be paid on vouchers ordered by said committee and approved by the chairman thereof. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee or of the chairman of any subcommittee and shall be served by any person designated by any of them. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.	wise, and to take such testimony as it deems necessary. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee or of the chairman of any subcommittee and shall be served by any person designated by any of them. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses. Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

You will see from the above that there is in Resolution No. 110 the following provision giving the committee authority to spend large sums that is not in Resolution No. 145, to wit:

To employ suitable counsel, assistants, and investigators in aid of its investigation, as well as such experts, and such clerical, stenographic, and other assistants.

Under Resolution No. 110, embracing the above provision, the Committee on the Judiciary could have been divided into 8 subcommittees of 3 members each, all sitting at the same time in 8 different big cities of the United States, and each one of the subcommittees could have employed just as many lawyers, just as many assistants, just as many investigators, just as many experts, just as many clerks, just as many stenographers, and just as many assistants as each subcommittee desired, and said eight subcommittees could have paid all of the above employees just as big salaries as they wished, wholly without any limitation whatsoever. This could have cost a tremendous sum. And passing said Resolution No. 110 would have given such subcommittees the legal authority to have employed all of said attorneys, assistants, investigators, experts, clerks, and stenographers as they wished, and to have made legal contracts with them agreeing to pay them just as big salaries as they wished, and the Congress would then have felt morally bound to have furnished the money.

And you will also note that said section 5 in said Resolution No. 110 contained the following additional authorization for spending money that is not contained in said Resolution No. 145, to wit:

To have such printing and binding done, and to make such expenditures as it deems necessary; and all such expenses thereof shall be paid on vouchers ordered by said committee and approved by the chairman thereof.

So it is clearly apparent that there could have been spent anywhere from $250,000 to $500,000 under said Resolution No. 110, for legal contracts could have been made with all of the employees, for the carrying out of which Congress would have felt morally bound, while under Resolution No. 145 the extravagant provisions I have quoted above that were in Resolution No. 110 have been left out of said Resolution No. 145, and we have been given the reliable assurance by our colleagues the chairman of the committee [Mr. SUMNERS] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] that not more than $5,000 will be spent under this Resolution No. 145, now before the House.

Now, as to the other assertion, that a charge on the Treasury had nothing to do with the point of order I made and which the Speaker sustained. Here is my point of order against Resolution No. 145, which the Speaker sustained on May 16, 1933, to wit:

Mr. BLANTON. * * * Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the Committee on Rules has no jurisdiction whatever to report to this House a resolution of this kind, because the resolution shows on its face that it is a charge on the Treasury.

Such a resolution as this could cost the Government $200,000, or even twice that sum. The 25 members of this Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, between now and the 1st of next January could sit in every big city in the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Their railroad fare, traveling expenses, hotel bills, would be paid by Congress. They could employ as many lawyers as they wished and pay them any salaries they wished, wholly without limitation. They could employ high-priced experts, clerks, stenographers, wholly without limit. We know how much the Joe Walsh committee cost. We know how much the Graham, of Illinois, committee cost. We know that the coal investigating committee cost, first, $400,000, and then another $400,000. We know that the initial cost of the Wickersham Committee was $500,000. I am going to try to stop all such resolutions that do not provide for a limitation of expenses. This resolution is clearly subject to a point of order, because the Committee on Rules does not have any authority or jurisdiction to report such a measure that carries such a charge on the Treasury.

While the Rules Committee would have the right to bring in a rule to make such a matter in order, it has no right, in the first instance, to favorably report such a resolution. I insist that my point of order is good and should be sustained.

And here is the Speaker's ruling sustaining my point of order, and which ruling killed said Resolution No. 145, to wit:

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair thinks that the provision incorporated in section 5 of the resolution authorizing the committee to employ suitable counsel, assistants, and investigators in the aid of its investigation, and also the provision authorizing all necessary expenses of the investigation to be paid on vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee, is a matter properly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Accounts. It has been held that where the Committee on Rules reports a resolution of this kind and there is incorporated therein matter which is within the jurisdiction of another committee the matter so included destroys the privilege of the resolution insofar as it prevents consideration at any time by the mere calling up of the report by the Committee on Rules. For this reason the Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken, and the Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to have any position I take here on this floor misrepresented in any particular, hence I have gone to this trouble in quoting the provisions of section 5 in each of these resolutions, to show the very decided difference in them, and in quoting the RECORD to show that the Speaker did sustain my point of order against Resolution No. 145, because it carried a charge on the Treasury.

THE AMERICAN FARMERS ARE ALREADY ENJOYING SUBSTANTIAL BENEFITS AS A RESULT OF THE VIGOROUS, FORWARD-LOOKING POLICIES INAUGURATED BY PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT FOR THE REHABILITATION OF AGRICULTURE

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, the American farmers are already enjoying substantial benefits as a result of the vigorous, forward-looking policies inaugurated by President Roosevelt for the rehabilitation of agriculture. His administration is only 3 months old, and yet within that short period he has secured the enactment and put into operation legislation that has already lifted the farmer out of the pit of disaster and started him on a forward march to prosperity. While all commodity prices have advanced, farm product prices are moving upward more rapidly than prices in general.

In the closing days of the Hoover administration hogs were selling at the farm in the Corn Belt for less than $3 per hundred. The average price of corn was 19 cents, wheat 32 cents, and butterfat 15 cents. On May 15 hogs were selling at approximately $4 at the farm, corn 39 cents, wheat 59 cents, and butterfat 20 cents. The advance in farm commodity prices in April was the greatest in any one month since April 1919. This rapid upward sweep of farm commodity prices very substantially increased the income of American farmers and points the way to much better prices in the near future. Indeed, approximately one and one half billion dollars have been added to the recent and ultimate probable income of American farmers.

The index number of all farm prices was 49 in February and 62 in May, a gain of 13 points. In grain the index number was 34 in February and 62 in May, an increase of 28 points. The index number of meat animals was 53 in February, 65 in May, a gain of 12 points. There was a gain of 5 points in chickens and eggs. These advances are putting cold cash into the pockets of farmers, who are already beginning to feel the upswing in agricultural conditions.

Now, while the cash prices for farm commodities have increased the farmer's supplies are costing him less. For instance, the index number of prices paid by farmers for their supplies in February was 104, which by May had fallen to 100. On the 1910–1914 basis the farmer's buying power was 47 in February and 62 in May, a gain of 15 points. All farm prices between February and May advanced 13 points, from 49 to 62, and wholesale prices in general increased from 87 to 93, a gain of over 6 points.

But let it be understood that the farmer is not yet out of the woods. We have not yet reached a complete solution of the farm problem. While the farmer is headed in the right direction, his progress toward prosperity and economic independence will be slow and tedious. The increase in the price of a few farm products will not restore prosperity to the agricultural classes nor enable them to recoup the tremendous losses they have sustained in the last 12 years. Indeed, the upward trend of farm commodity prices may be halted before the farmers have harvested this season's crops. The apparent advantage of higher prices may fade away in the face of relatively poor crops, reduced production, increased overhead expense, confiscatory freight rates, or an unlooked-for increase in the spread between the price at which the farmer sells his commodities and the price he pays for his supplies.

This temporary increase in the market price of farm products, if halted now, will not and cannot pull the American farmer out of the economic slough of despond. Unless the advance in the market price of farm commodities is general and continues, the march of the agricultural classes toward prosperity will be halted. While the remarkable advance in the last 3 months will temporarily reduce the severity of the agricultural distress, and in a measure mitigate the intensity of the farmer's burdens, still we have not removed many of the causes that brought about these acute, painful, and alarming agricultural conditions.

It is idle for spokesmen of the administration, politicians, periodicals, or the public press to assert that the agricultural crisis has passed, or that the agricultural industry has been stabilized, or that the farmers are on the border of the promised land. The disease that has so long and so completely devitalized agriculture is too deep-seated and malignant to be cured by a temporary, or even permanent advance in the price of a few farm commodities, especially in view of the fact that the farmer is even now still compelled to sell his commodities at prices far below the cost of production.

The benevolent laws already enacted by Congress on the initiative of President Roosevelt must be supplemented by others that will radically and permanently stabilize the market price of farm commodities on a much higher level than those that now prevail. To illustrate, on the basis of values from 1910 to 1914 the average farm price for February on hogs would have been $7.12; on lambs, $5.95; on cattle, $5.11. Averaging these prices and comparing them with the farm prices on meat animals in February 1933 we discover that the combined price on February 15 of these three commodities was only 53 percent, or approximately only one half of the average 1910–14 prices. And while there was an increase of 12 percent in the average farm price of meat animals from February to May, still at the present time they are selling at only 65 percent, or approximately two thirds of pre-war prices.

That is to say, the upward movement in farm commodity prices has just started, and if the American farmers are to be saved from a condition of peasantry and penury, prices must continue to advance until they at least reach a level double the present prices.

For 12 years an economic hurricane of unprecedented violence ravaged agriculture, and we are not quite sure that this storm has spent its fury or its force. Its unabated power would ruthlessly have taken toll of many more millions of farmers had not President Roosevelt come to their rescue. For 12 years the farmers of the Nation have been fighting a losing battle under exceedingly adverse conditions and in that tragic period the earnings and accumulations of a lifetime were dissipated. The enactment of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, the Agricultural Credits Act, the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act, the Industrial Recovery Act, and other benevolent legislation by the Roosevelt administration has already brought a substantial degree of relief to the American farmers and the wise and sympathetic administration of these wholesome laws will certainly and speedily restore the buying power of the American farmers, rehabilitate agriculture, and restore it to its proper position among the profitable occupations.

Agriculture is the oldest basic industry, the mother of all other vocations. When it should have been enjoying an equal degree of prosperity with other vocational groups, with other callings, it was thrown out of the temple of equal opportunity. Its pathetic condition did not awaken the interest, much less the sympathy of those who dwell in the magic zone of perpetual governmental favor. For 12 years the agrarian classes have been relegated to a state of economic servitude. Unless agriculture can be speedily placed on an economic equality with industry, it will soon cease to be a prime factor in the business life of the Nation and will become the bond servant or handmaiden of the other occupational groups whose welfare seemed to be the chief concern of the Republican Party.

The farmers of America constitute the most stable, dependable, and conservative element of our population. They have been the victims of grave economic injustice. They took their losses manfully. Though sorely stricken, hope urged them on and told them tomorrow would be better. They did not turn Bolshevik, but in the zero hour of economic disaster they exemplified the highest ideals and most exalted traditions of American citizenship. If the manufacturing, capitalistic, and commercial classes had suffered the social injustices and economic wrongs to which the farmers have been subjected, these groups would have filled the earth with their bolshevistic ravings and precipitated social unrest and industrial disorder.

The economic distress through which agriculture has been passing, and from which it has not yet emerged, is not primarily chargeable to the farmers themselves but is largely the result of legislative discrimination against them, and an abuse of power and privilege by those who arbitrarily and selfishly control the economic forces of the Nation.

Under the last three Republican administrations the American farmers were marching with steady step to a condition of peasantry. They were not able to sell their commodities at a price that would even return the cost of production, much less afford a profit. Under 12 years of Republican rule the purchasing power of the farmer's dollar was substantially impaired; in fact for several years the farmer has annually faced a deficit and been living off the earnings and accumulations of former years. The shrinkage in the agricultural wealth of the United States in the last 4 years has been so stupendous that it is difficult to comprehend how agriculture has been able to stand the economic strain to which it has been subjected.

Throughout my entire life I have championed the cause of the agricultural classes, whose interest the Republican Party has so unblushingly and arrogantly betrayed. Long before I entered the public life I cast my lot with the American farmers, who constitute the bone and sinew of our Nation and whose prosperity is absolutely necessary before any substantial and enduring prosperity can come to other vocational groups. What little money I made or could borrow I invested in farm lands, which I still own, though every acre I own is heavily mortgaged.

I am vitally interested in agriculture. I know its problems, and like many others I am bent double by its burdens. Having been born and reared on a farm, and realizing that the welfare of our Nation depends primarily on a prosperous rural population, it is but natural that I should champion the cause of the group from which I sprung.

The first speech I made in Congress related to the agricultural situation and embodied a vigorous protest against the injustice to which agriculture was being subjected. For 10 years in the Halls of Congress I have aggressively fought the battles of American agriculture, as the RECORD will conclusively demonstrate. While many other Members were just as loyal to agriculture and just as zealous, no Member has been more aggressive, loyal, or industrious in advocacy of the claims of the American farmers for a square deal. I have not been halting, wabbling, vacillating, hesitating, or passive in my advocacy of the cause of agriculture. On this and every other question I have always been positive in my convictions and frank in their expression.

Realizing that the granting of economic justice to the agricultural classes was not, and is not, a political question, I have stood shoulder to shoulder with Democratic and Republican Representatives from agricultural districts pleading the cause of the dirt farmers, and in the last 10 years the record will show that in every battle for farm relief I fought in the front ranks, and by voice and vote wholeheartedly cooperated with the representatives and leaders of the great farm organizations in their efforts to put over their legislative program.

And this I did without in any degree disregarding the interests and welfare of other vocational groups, none of which can hope to have any worth while, substantial, and enduring prosperity unless the agriculture of the Nation is placed on a prosperous basis and the buying power of the American farmers restored.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes in which to ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] a question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I want to know from the gentleman from New York whether I understood him correctly to say that he does not desire any money to carry on this investigation.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I explained to the gentleman from Missouri that I believe the bar associations would be very happy to furnish eminent counsel to take care of these investigations throughout the country. It may be that for purposes of accountancy $5,000 might be necessary. As far as I am personally concerned, I should be willing to do without the money entirely, but I believe in the interest of efficiency that $5,000 may be necessary for the purpose of hiring accountants to go over the records of these judges.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I should like to know why one day one statement is made to the Committee on Accounts and another day another statement is made contrary to the first statement.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] does not control the situation. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SUMNERS] will have control. We all have confidence in him.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. We have a Department of Justice to which we give hundreds of thousands of dollars with which to make investigations, and still you continue to authorize investigations to be made by the House instead of requiring the Department of Justice to investigate such matters as this. The judiciary, in a way, is subject to the Attorney General. Why not call on him to correct the abuses you complain of?

Mr. BLANTON. But the Department of Justice has not done it. Our Committee on the Judiciary ought to do it themselves, as all of its members are able lawyers.

Mr. GREEN. The Department will not investigate the judges. We tried it in the Florida case.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. I am as anxious as the author of the resolution to stop the abuses complained of, but I feel if the Attorney General would take the matter up he could cause a change in the present procedure. Then again, if you would present the matter to the conference of United States circuit judges, held in Washington annually, I am positive they would find a way to meet the situation complained of.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a record of the work, the mission, and the objective of the National Forest Reservation Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Mr. Speaker, 3 months ago the Speaker honored me by an appointment on the National Forest Reservation Commission. Since then I have noted with increasing appreciation the constructive part played by both Houses of the Congress, through certain of their Members, in the execution of a public program of far-reaching consequence and significance, a program which, by retrieving the errors of the past, will guarantee the security of the future.

Of the seven members of the Commission, two are from this House of Representatives and two from the Senate, with the Secretary of War, Secretary of the Interior, and Secretary of Agriculture. Throughout the 22 years of the Commission's existence, six Members of this body and eight Members of the Senate actively have participated in all of its functions and in the shaping of its policies and programs. It was as a member of this House that John W. Weeks sponsored the act of March 1, 1911, through which the Commission came into being and which because of such sponsorship is popularly known as the Weeks law, although it was not until he became Secretary of War that Mr. Weeks served as a member of the Commission. It was as a Member of this House that I enjoyed the opportunity to share with Senator MCNARY the sponsorship of the act of June 7, 1924, commonly referred to as the Clarke-McNary law, through which the initial purpose and scope of the Weeks law was broadened. The House, I am confident, will be interested in the objectives and attainments of the Commission.

The original objective of the Weeks law, and, therefore, of the Commission, was to safeguard the headwaters of navigable rivers. In the Western States this purpose was being accomplished by national forests created from the public domain; east of the Great Plains it was not then receiving attention. The Commission's first action, therefore, was to approve the establishment of nine areas in which that function was of major necessity and importance. The next year, 1912, it approved 4 more; in 1914 another; in 1918, 2 more; and in 1921 still another.

Within those 17 units the lands of greatest forest and watershed importance were acquired as rapidly as Congress made funds available. The value of the work gained increasing recognition and approval. Meanwhile the problem of forest devastation through destructive forms of timber cutting and unrestrained fires pressed for solution. The confinement of Federal action to the headwaters of navigable streams precluded constructive action in other important forest regions where the need was as great but where the element of protection to navigation was not sufficiently demonstrable. The feeling grew, both nationally and within the Congress, that the stimulation of timber production properly might be a major objective of the program of forest-land purchases by the Federal Government.

With this view the Congress agreed by enactment of the act of June 7, 1924. With that law as a mandate and an authority the National Forest Reservation Commission combined the objective of timber production with its previous objective of protection to navigable streams. In 1926 it approved the establishment of two additional purchase areas; in 1928, 6 more; in 1929, 8; in 1930, 4; in 1931, 2; and the last year 3 more.

As a result there are today 42 definitely established areas within which forest lands are being purchased by the Federal Government for national-forest purposes. They are situated in 20 of the Eastern States, to wit, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin. The fact that my own State is not included in this list in no way diminishes my appreciation of the fine system of national forests. New York, fortunately, finds it practicable to handle her forest-land problems without Federal aid but is glad to see that aid extended where it is necessary and is desired.

March 7 last marked the end of the twenty-second year of the Commission's activity. At that time the net acreage it had approved for purchase totaled 4,727,680 acres. The average price paid was $4.49 per acre. The total appropriations over the 22 years have aggregated a net of $25,035,860.76. The difference represents the cost of widely extended examinations, and of conducting the detailed requirements of the purchase work, including examinations, cruises, and appraisals of the offered lands, the surveys of those approved for purchase, the completion of the perfect titles required in Government practice, not only in relation to the areas finally acquired but also other extensive areas which for one reason or another could not be acquired.

The acquired lands are embraced within 31 of the purchase areas situated in 19 of the States. Within these same areas are 2,503,875 acres reserved from the public domain, transferred from other departments or acquired by exchanges. The Government's total holdings therefore aggregate 7,231,555 acres, or slightly less than one half of all the lands desirable of purchase within the 42 established units. Due to the Nation's financial situation a curtailment of appropriations for land purchase seemed necessary, and the acquisition of the remaining lands seemed remote.

The act of March 31, 1933, authorized the creation of a Civilian Conservation Corps. Naturally the larger portion of the corps was enrolled in the more heavily populated Eastern States, and the employment of the men in their own or adjacent States naturally was desirable. The national-forest units to which I have referred afforded immediate opportunity for effective employment of such men in ways that constructively would contribute to the future welfare of the Nation and would adequately realize the value of the labor. Work justifying the early establishment of a total of one hundred and seven 200-man camps was in sight.

It was, however, evident, that if the remaining lands within the units passed to Government ownership, if the problem of widely interspersed private holdings were eliminated, the services of the Civilian Conservation Corps could be more largely and more effectively utilized and the need for transporting a part of its membership to remote Western States could materially be reduced. In consideration of this situation, the President decided that part of the funds made available by the act of March 31, 1933, properly might be employed to consolidate the forest-land holdings of the Federal Government, and by Executive order of May 20 he allocated $20,000,000 of those funds for the purchase of additional lands within the 42 areas which the Commission previously had approved.

On June 9 the Commission considered and gave its approval to a new program of land purchases consisting of 342 cases totaling 443,909 acres, distributed among 28 of the approved units which are situated in 16 of the eastern States, ranging from Maine to Florida and as far west as Arkansas and Minnesota. The lands are to be purchased at an average price of $1.80 per acre, by far the lowest figure at which such lands have been obtainable since the purchase work began.

Federal purchase of these lands will greatly enlarge the field for the employment of the Civilian Conservation Corps in the Eastern States and will facilitate orderly programs of forest improvement. But it will do a great deal more than that. Before the Government will accept title to the lands all back taxes must be paid, and many counties will receive tax payments that otherwise might not be made. Capital frozen in temporarily nonproductive land will be released for use in local business and industry. Scores of owners of small tracts will obtain funds which, while separately of small amount, may be of infinite service in meeting pressing obligations. All things considered, the Congress may feel well satisfied with the workings of the Commission which it created 22 years ago and in which, through its designated members, it since has taken a major part.

Helpful todays mean more helpful tomorrows.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. After the gentleman finishes I shall ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object in order to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] what is to be the program for today?

Mr. BYRNS. We are waiting now upon the Senate with reference to the conference on the independent offices appropriation bill, and also with reference to the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. Would it not be better to stand in recess until we find out something about it?

Mr. BYRNS. Then there may be a report on the banking bill. [Applause.] I am not sufficiently advised as to that. Personally I hope so.

Mr. SNELL. I am not sufficiently advised, but I doubt that the gentleman is correct in expecting a report.

Mr. BYRNS. The wish may be the father to the thought.

Mr. SNELL. I think we ought to understand what is to be the program for today.

Mr. BYRNS. Of course, I have no objection to the House granting these requests for debate, but as soon as that is over it is my purpose to ask that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair; and, of course, the Chair will be guided when he calls the House back by the business that may be ready to come before it.

Mr. CONNERY. And I want to say in justice to the gentleman and in fairness to my leader that the reason I am asking for the 2 minutes is to say that I am going to make a point of order against the recess and demand the regular order, so that we can get up the 5-day week 6-hour day bill on a call of committees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas to address the House for 7 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes at the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make that request later.

THE JUDICIARY

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I believe I am in position with regard to the resolution just passed to speak in an unbiased and nonpartisan way. When we come to deal with the Federal judiciary we must not deal with it from a prejudiced or partisan standpoint. I recognize that we are all nervous and tired. This has been a very hard session, and it is pretty difficult for us to give that calm, deliberate consideration to any problem now which important problems require. It is probably true, whatever the cause, that the Federal judiciary today, in point of public confidence, holds the lowest position it has held since the organization of the Government. Some of that no doubt is due to unwarranted attacks, to unjust accusations. On that point Democrats and Republicans ought to be very careful.

A good many people feel that it is smart to say things derogatory to the American Congress. For instance, I have heard it come from sources that really believe in a Government by the people, who are interested in its strength, its stability, and its perpetuity. Some smart fellow writes something in the newspaper or somebody on the stage gets off some wisecrack about Congress, and people laugh. The people of America may well understand that more hurt to this country can be done in this way than all of the soap-box orators you can put on the streets can do. The average person does not distinguish between that intangible thing which we love with that holy love called patriotism, and the functioning machinery of government, or rather the official personnel who function that machinery. Destroy confidence in that personnel and confidence in the Government is destroyed.

But that does not mean that a blanket may be spread over the misdeeds of public officials. The sunlight of publicity, and vigorous, immediate, and adequate punishment must be the reward of those who betray public trust.

The American people have not been taking the responsibilities of being a self-governing people very seriously for a good many years, during this period when we have been on a grand jazz—jazz music, jazz statesmanship, jazz business, jazz citizenship.

We have to get down to business. We have to recognize that as a nation we have been acting very foolishly for the last 14 or 15 years, and have a lot of things to straighten out. We must not lose our heads and dash this way and that. We have a big job ahead of us, and one of the jobs we have ahead of us is to restore the Federal judiciary to public confidence. Do not make any mistake about that. You can hurt it in two ways. You can hurt the Federal judiciary by unwarranted charges against it; by unwarranted insinuations against it. You can hurt it most by keeping some crooked judges on the bench. You can hurt it more that way than any other way on earth.

I hold that when the reasonable and probable consequence of a judge's conduct is to destroy the confidence of a sensible people in his judicial integrity he commits the highest crime, perhaps, he can commit, and that judge must go, and like judges must go if we are to preserve confidence in the judiciary. [Applause.] A few crooked lawyers can cast discredit upon the whole bar. A few dishonest judges on the Federal bench can cast discredit upon the entire Federal judiciary.

In my judgment, taking it all in all, we have fine men on the Federal bench. Now, may I make this other observation? I have been studying this thing for a good while. A great many people believe that when you find an abuse in office you should take the power to abuse away from the office. I am talking of some pretty serious things now—serious things for us to consider. Popular governments have even been destroyed by the process of taking power from the officeholder as a method of correcting abuses, until finally a great crisis comes when there is need for strength in government, it is found that so much strength has been taken away, so much power from the holders of offices that there is not strength enough left to deal with the crisis, and the people turn in disgust from a weak government to a strong, autocratic government. We ought not to forget that in America. I am not speaking as a Democrat. These problems are so great that party considerations in their presence are contemptible. The thing to do when we find a man who is unworthy of his trust is to take the man from the office, and not take the power from the office. I mean within sensible limitations, of course. [Applause.]

We must make the Federal judiciary nonpartisan in this country. I am talking not to Democrats or Republicans now. I am talking to Members of the American Congress who love this Nation. We have to make the Federal judiciary nonpartisan. I speak of all administrations. I know in my own State, and it has been true of others where the party in national power be not representative politically of all the people of such States, that it has been impossible to put a man on the Federal bench unless he has on him the brand of a political boss. Now you stop and think of that for a half minute—making political merchandise of these judicial offices. I cannot speak of the standard of judicial decency that has been established by judgments in impeachment trials of this country, but I say that neither the Federal judiciary nor any other officials can maintain public confidence living upon the standards we have established for judicial propriety in this country. I make that statement with all respect and more in criticism of our methods and procedure than otherwise.

May I ask how much time I have left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will conclude in that time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. ZIONCHECK]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Before the gentleman resumes his remarks, will he yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], in discussing the effects of the resolution, said that certain associations of lawyers would be glad to furnish counsel to the committee. I know the gentleman from Texas will be glad of an opportunity to assure Congress that he does not propose to make his committee conducting this investigation a sounding board for a group of disgruntled lawyers.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will make this statement: The Committee on the Judiciary has a lot of responsibilities to discharge during this recess. As for myself, I have not asked this responsibility. I am tired as I can be. We are charged with the responsibility specific of investigating the conduct of two Federal judges during the vacation. There are many other things to be done before the next session. I do not like this character of responsibility. I mean I do not seek it. It means work, not a junket. I do not believe there is a judge in America whose skirts are clean, who need be apprehensive as to what may be done by the Committee on the Judiciary in connection with the exercise of the duties imposed upon us by this resolution. Wherever there is need for an investigation I would deem myself and the members of our committee unfit if any group or faction should be able to control. We will avoid being anybody's sounding board.

But I do not want to get off what I was talking about. I did not speak on the resolution adopted, nor did I vote on it. Insofar as I am concerned, I left the determination solely to the judgment of the House, and will act in obedience to its mandate.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Does the gentleman advocate the election of Federal judges on a nonpartisan basis; is that the gist of his argument?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Well, I have not "gisted" it that far. [Laughter.]

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Well, I suggest the gentleman "gist" it in that direction.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. If my friend will permit, I prefer to direct my own remarks. There are some things I have been thinking about a long time in connection with the present set-up, and particularly with regard to disciplinary powers and procedure. Ours is the most ridiculous procedure that any intelligent people could have. There are several very remarkable things about it. Sometime I may discuss them somewhat in detail. I have promised to finish in 10 minutes. We have a procedure in the year 1933 with regard to the removal of Federal judges that was developed some three or four hundred years ago in England when, following a judgment of conviction—and it was a real criminal trial—it was possible to hang the defendant, cut his head off, quarter him, confiscate his property, and do several other things to him. Outside of that I do not believe they could do anything to him. [Laughter.]

Ours is the same procedure, notwithstanding our Constitution provides there can be no punishment for crime, and limits the judgment to ouster from office. Now, just think of that.

This came about in a very interesting way. I know how it came about, but I never would have known it if I had not been on the Committee on the Judiciary, and had not from observation and experience gone through the whole procedure. When we got started in this country as an independent government, and after we had been running along for 13 or 14 years we had the necessity to impeach somebody. We never had impeached anybody in this country. They did not know how to go about it. They appointed a committee. They knew just as little about it as my friend KURTZ and myself with our first impeachment case. They got to looking around and found the English precedents. So they tried this first case by the English precedents. Then came the Chase case, I believe it was, and they followed our own precedent. Since then we have been tracking along like little pigs, because we have not thought these things through for ourselves. In the first case we had I said to my friends on the committee, "This is no criminal trial." I looked into the matter further. I have accepted place on the committee, studying the nature of the power being exercised, and am now submitting in brief certain suggestions for your consideration.

I believe we have tried our last impeachment by the ridiculous procedure which we have followed since we have had an independent Government. What I think the Senate will do will be to have testimony taken in the territory where the judge lives by a committee of the Senate that shall perform mixed functions of judges, and, in a sense, act as a master in chancery. I am not describing, but indicating. The trial in the Senate will be largely upon the record, with the privilege reserved to call any witness desired before the full Senate.

With regard to all officers other than judicial officers we have two methods of removal, one by impeachment and the other by the President. In my judgment, the last case of the impeachment trial before the Senate of any officer other than a judge has been had in this country. The President has the power to remove them now. What will happen will be that testimony will be taken by agencies of the House, the matter acted upon by the House, and if in favor of removal, the request of the House for removal, together with the record, laid before the President, or, as stated, by the House and Senate. Upon that evidence the President will be asked to exercise the power established in the Myers case and remove him. Something like that will be worked out, I believe.

I have another notion I am going to submit for your consideration and for the consideration of the lawyers of the country. I speak now without having made complete examination and consideration, but my inclination of judgment is that it is sound. You remember the language with regard to the appointment of judges. They are not appointed for life. They are appointed during good behavior. I am not sure about this now, but I am almost sure. Now, we have always regarded that as an appointment for life, subject only to the exercise of the impeachment power. I believe it is a condition that lies entirely outside of the impeachment power. I believe the phrase, "during good behavior", is a condition that runs with his tenure, and that it is within the power of the Congress to set up a tribunal and give it jurisdiction to try the issue of good behavior. I do not know whether it is practical or not. I have not got that far. I do not know whether it ought to be done or not, but personally I have no doubt, insofar as I have gone, that the Federal judge holds, by the right of his commission, not one day, not one split second, beyond the period of good behavior. It is a condition that runs with his term.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. McFARLANE. I should like to ask the gentleman a question in regard to the Federal judges. In our convention under which this system was created the vote was 5 to 4 after a long and serious debate. Would it not be advisable, and would it not bring about an enormous improvement to let the judges of the State courts elected by the people take care of our judiciary, appeal to be made directly to the supreme court of the State and the Supreme Court of the United States, respectively?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that I am not yet ready to go that far. But I say this much, and I say it to the Federal judiciary and to the friends of the Federal judiciary, that either they must be subject to some intelligent, proper, fair control of the people or they are going to be abolished. This notion that some people seem to have that a Federal judge cannot be removed from office unless it can be shown that he has served a couple of terms in the penitentiary, or ought to have done so, is placing the whole Federal judicial machinery in peril.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Carrying out the suggestion made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. McFARLANE], would it be possible for a State court to try a Federal question or a question arising between two States?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That is entirely too speculative for me to go into now. I am trying to confine my remarks to the points I started out to make.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when the Federal courts had jurisdiction over only a few matters that did not come close to the people—I do not want to reflect on Federal judges now—but you remember when the Federal court had jurisdiction over only big matters we had a certain class of lawyers as judges who were men of outstanding character. A Federal judgeship was just about the highest job that could be found, but in later years, regardless of how it came about, we have largely made the Federal courts police courts. This has had much to do with regard to the type—not the entire type—of judges.

I cannot choose just the word I wish to use, but I would say this much: If we could get rid of say about a dozen Federal judges in this country now, if the House would impeach and if the Senate would clean them out, the Federal judges, as a class, would stand high in this country and the people would have confidence in them. [Applause.]

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I yield.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Has the gentleman considered whether these abuses could be eliminated in some measure by appointing Federal judges, especially those of the inferior Federal courts, for a specific term of years, say, 6 years or 8 years?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. That would be impossible without a modification of the Constitution.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Would a modification of the Constitution be necessary so far as the inferior Federal judges are concerned?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; I believe so. At least that is my opinion.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I thought that would be true as to the Federal judges that were specifically created by the Constitution, but I doubt very much whether it would be true as to those Federal courts which the Congress has established.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The Committee on the Judiciary has examined the question several times and we have always come around to the conclusion that except for judges in the Territories, such as Alaska, where Congress governs under the general powers conferred by a provision of the Constitution with which the gentleman is familiar, it would require a modification of the Constitution to bring about what the gentleman suggests.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Does not the gentleman believe it would be a wise course to pursue?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to get away from what I am trying to indicate may be done under present constitutional powers and arrangement.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Just one further question: Does not the gentleman believe it might be wise for this Congress to submit to the States a constitutional amendment to bring about such a reform?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I should like not to get into that subject. I should like to deal with the subject about which I started out to talk.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes; but let me hold to my line of thought.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. I will bring it right to the theory of the gentleman's argument. Would it not have had a very salutary effect upon Federal judges in the United States had the Senate impeached Judge Louderback?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I believe I will never rid my mind of that opinion. [Applause.]

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. Does the gentleman believe it is right that a man should be appointed a Federal judge, whether of the district court or the Supreme Court or any other court, who is a large stockholder in some utility or other gigantic corporation?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think it would be just as well not to have judges embarrassed by such relationships.

Mr. DUNN. But is it not a fact that oftentimes the people do not get a square deal when a case is brought before such a judge?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to get into too many spraddling-outs of this matter, but I will say that, of course, the great safeguard is for the Senators to make the proper recommendation and the President to appoint the proper man in the first instance; but in the House we do not have to deal with that. We have to deal with them after we get them.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 2 more minutes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I do not want to transgress by taking the time of other gentlemen who want to speak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my colleague, who, I know, has studied the question closely, whether he has considered the advisability of Congress's preparing the machinery for the Federal judiciary itself to have a committee on discipline headed by the Attorney General of the United States as chairman?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I will say to my friend that I have that whole matter under examination now. I hope to be able to make a report of tentative conclusions at least. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Are the conditions in New York worse today than they were before the selection of the Irving Trust Co.?

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That is a very important question, because that is what this whole matter is about.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The gentlemen from New York, I imagine, could better answer that question. [Applause.]

THE LATE HONORABLE WILLIAM C. WRIGHT

Mr. OWEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with genuine sorrow and regret that I announce to the House the death of Hon. William C. Wright, who formerly represented the Fourth Congressional District of Georgia. His death occurred at his home at Newnan, Ga., yesterday afternoon. Mr. Wright was elected to the Sixty-fifth Congress to fill the unexpired term of the Honorable W. C. Adamson, in 1918. He served on the Military Affairs Committee for a number of years and was a very active and influential member of that committee. He served the last 6 years of his membership in this House on the Appropriations Committee and his work in this capacity is well known to every Member of the House.

A large majority of the present Membership knew him and loved him. He was an eminent lawyer, a faithful representative of the interests of his people, a fearless man, and a real patriot. He voluntarily retired from Congress last year, desiring to spend his remaining days in his home town in the pursuit of his loved profession of the law.

THE 5-DAY WEEK 6-HOUR DAY

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, as the House can see, I did not try to take any unfair advantage of my leader or the Speaker. I told them in the few remarks I made a moment ago just what I was after and just what I intended to do.

I understand the Rules Committee is going into session to bring in a rule to try to prevent me from getting before the House the 5-day week 6-hour day bill.

I am not going to object to anybody's talking after me and I will wait until the Rules Committee brings in its report and give them a fair break, because I think the House knows I try to be a fair fighter; but if the House is fair and wants to give the Committee on Labor a break, after the hours and days and weeks of work it has put in on the 5-day week 6-hour day bill, which is a better bill for labor and a better bill for capital than the national recovery bill, then I ask the House when this rule comes in to vote it down and give us a chance to get this measure up.

Incidentally, I will make a point of order that the rule must lay over until another day, or else receive a two-thirds vote in order to put it through.

I hope the House will back up the Committee on Labor and give us a chance to get a vote on this 5-day week 6-hour-day bill, which is the Senate bill 158, which passed the Senate and was amended by my committee and then unanimously reported favorably to the House. If you do not want to pass the bill, then defeat it. If you want to pass it, pass it; but, in fairness to labor at least, allow the bill to come up for a vote. [Applause.]

Mr. GOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. Then the gentleman thinks that if the House votes down the rule, or if the rule does not receive a two-thirds vote, he will have an opportunity to get up his bill for a vote in the House?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. And I take it a vote against the rule would really be a vote in favor of letting the gentleman's bill come up for consideration?

Mr. CONNERY. A vote against this rule will give us an opportunity to bring up the 5-day week 6-hour-day bill, which the American Federation of Labor and all labor and the manufacturers in the United States want. [Applause.]

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. Mr. Speaker, this morning I very carefully read the proposition brought to us Saturday night on the eve of adjournment in relation to the reorganization of the Government departments and providing for a procurement division in the Treasury Department for the purchase of all Government supplies. Not, perhaps, that what I may say will have any effect on the ultimate action of the House, but I want solemnly to warn you as one who has followed the President all through his program in this House, one who has had 40 years' experience in the Army, that I believe that if this proposition goes through it will wreck the national defense of this country. I issue this solemn warning as the result of years of experience in the Army, and I am going to give you some of the reasons why I think so.

The mission of the War Department is to insure the national defense. Its organization and operation must be alike in peace and war so that there will be no abrupt change in a crisis. It must be prepared upon the outbreak of war to expand tremendously in a minimum of time. No commercial organization has a problem comparable in any phase to this. There is no time to experiment and no place for divided responsibility. Any organization or plan by which an agency outside the War Department is given authority over a function necessary in the performance of its assigned mission can have no other effect than to hinder operations and jeopardize the successful outcome of a war and possibly the life of the Nation.

The Army must be prepared upon the outbreak of war to move its tactical organizations from their peace-time stations to destinations not now known. At the same time new and vast stores of military supplies must be procured, stored, and transported to the field of operations.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. For a brief question.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. How many purchasing officers do you have in the War Department?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. I am not going to be led astray by any little technicality which the gentleman brings up, but I will say that at the end of the World War we tried this new Douglas idea of having one purchasing department for the Army alone, and it broke down completely. I say that this will break down. The danger is that it will break down when the very life of the Nation is involved.

I will say that in the purchase of coal or the purchase of potatoes, the purchase of staple articles, this new-fangled Douglas operation might function, but when it comes to technical instruments, aircraft, munitions of war, other instruments of war, it will be a lamentable and an awful failure. The trouble is, it has been brought in by people who do not understand the matter.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is it not reasonable to assume that Army officers will be appointed to make the purchases for the War Department?

Mr. MARTIN of Oregon. No; I have no right to assume it. I want to say that if you carry this through you will get into more trouble than you got into in the veterans' proposition. [Laughter.]

The disbursing of funds must be closely allied with the purchasing function. Complete administrative and operative control over both the procurement of supplies and the prompt payment therefor is at all times a necessary and integral part of the successful conduct of a war. The payment of soldiers must be made where they are located, and especially in war it is important that such disbursing be in the hands of the military officials. In many cases the duty of disbursing is merely incidental and additional to the troop duties of the officers engaged therein. In any event the centralizing of disbursing functions would not change the requirement outlined above.

Also, the warehousing activities at Army posts are for the purpose of providing tactical organizations with limited supplies to meet immediate needs. These units must be prepared to take the field at a moment's notice, and much of these local supplies must accompany them. To meet this requirement a close contact between the troops of the post and the local supply agencies is necessary. As a result of these requirements, the personnel engaged in those activities is almost without exception military and would remain so under any other practicable organization, centralized or decentralized.

The larger warehousing installations are incident to the purchasing and manufacturing activities or they contain reserve supplies. All of these are used to furnish supplies to tactical units distributed over a considerable area.

Experience of all armies during many years, and particularly during the World War, demonstrated the absolute necessity of warehouses located at points of production and strategic localities. The existing War Department zone of the interior storage establishments were located for the foregoing reasons over a period beginning with the War of 1812 and continuing down to include the World War.

The compelling reason for the maintenance of a fiscal accounting and bookkeeping system other than that required in connection with disbursing and collecting within the various echelons of the War Department, as in any other organization, is to provide responsible officials with the means of efficiently administering their assigned functions. Without adequate fiscal information the Secretary of War would be unable to distribute intelligently and control the expenditure of War Department funds, the chief of the obligating branch could not properly suballot and control the obligation of funds apportioned to him, nor would the obligating agent in the field be in a position to prevent the overobligation of amounts made available for specific purposes. Such records are indispensable to efficient administration; and should a centralized accounting system be superimposed on the existing departmental accounting structure, it could relieve the latter of few of its present requirements, and would add appreciably to the overhead cost.

The organization of the Military Establishment must be based upon efficiency in war. This necessitates that control of all activities essential to its functioning remain with the Military Establishment.

Procurement of supplies must be treated as comprising purchase, storage, and distribution of such supplies. It is not sufficient to consider purchase price alone as representing total cost. The economies sought are represented in the ultimate cost over a period of years to the unit consuming the supplies. It is obvious that the supply system of all Government departments cannot be identical unless the organization, the functions, and the method of operation of these departments are completely parallel.

It is true that in nearly all cases large purchases result in lower unit purchase price; but if the saving in the unit purchase price is lost in storage or in distribution costs, then the apparent economy has disappeared.

It is self-evident that the further the consolidation of supply is carried, especially in passing from one department to another, the greater will be the time period in collecting requirements, effecting purchases, and making distribution. The increase in length of time must be overcome by increasing stocks in warehouses, and this stocking of Government warehouses costs money.

The function which each department has in the scheme of Government and the mission which it is called upon to perform from time to time must also be considered in adopting a procurement plan for its use. The War Department, for example, is perhaps unique in one respect in that it is from time to time unexpectedly called upon to expand its activities almost a hundredfold. That is, when war breaks out, the supplies purchased by the War Department in a given time increase to an abnormal degree beyond the purchases normally made in peace time. This condition, therefore, must be considered in establishing a procurement plan that involves the War Department. It cannot be doubted that under war conditions the War Department procurement plan must be entirely responsive to the Secretary of War. And the Secretary of War, as a result of the World War experiences, considers a decentralized procurement plan as essential to success.

In addition to the foregoing conditions the individuality of the purchasing activity of each department and establishment and its ready responsiveness to the needs of the respective departments and establishments must be retained. This responsiveness is essential to the efficient functioning of the Federal departments, and it cannot be maintained under any plan which takes the purchasing authority from the control of the head of a department or independent establishment. Procurement for any agency of the Government is an integral part of the prime and governmental function for which such agency was established.

Coordination of procurement by the Federal departments can best be obtained by an active interchange of information among the procurement agencies in Washington of the departments, and the use of interdepartmental contracts or the purchase from other departments' stocks whenever such actions are economical. An example of this is the current use by various departments of the Navy Department annual purchase contract for lubricating oils.

I have just received the following telegram in regard to section 2 of the order:

FREDERICKSBURG, VA., June 12, 1933.

Hon. CHARLES H. MARTIN,
House Office Building, Washington, D.C.:

Press carries information that section 2 of President's Executive order relating to reorganization of Government departments provides for transfer of military parks and national cemeteries from jurisdiction of War Department. This organization protests such transfer and is unalterably opposed thereto, due to fact that the Army certainly should be allowed to care for its own dead and the hallowed ground on which they died. Virginia is more interested than any other State, due to fact that by far the greater number of such parks and cemeteries are within its borders.

W. F. CARTER, Jr.,
Executive Secretary Chamber of Commerce.

But the crowning travesty is in section 16, where Congress is robbed of all authority in saying where the money it appropriates goes and the Director of the Budget runs the whole show. Why have a Congress at all?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes on the President's reorganization.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, Members of Congress may find some reasonable excuse for trying to ameliorate regulations that reduce soldiers' compensation, but I want to assert without fear of contradiction here on this floor that there is not a Member of Congress, either in the House or the Senate, who can find any excuse or who can hope to have the approval of the people of this country for voting against the President's plan of reorganization and abolishing of bureaus.

I want to say that the one thing for which the President is to be most commended, and for doing which he will have the approval of all citizens, is the reorganization plan he has just submitted to Congress for approval which abolishes many bureaus. He is the only one that could effect this consolidation. His is the only power in this Nation that could have brought about this proper retrenchment and prevention of duplication. Let me call attention to some bureaus he has abolished and to a few of his consolidations.

One of the first of the most useless, most inefficient, most extravagant, most undependable bureaus that he abolished was the so-called "Bureau of Efficiency." You older Members will probably remember that ever since 1927 I have been doing everything within my power to get this inefficient so-called "Bureau of Efficiency" abolished.

On December 7, 1927, in the Seventieth Congress, I introduced the bill, H.R. 6036, to abolish this Bureau of Efficiency, and it was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and I have made many speeches against this wasteful Bureau, and have shown many times that it was useless and was constantly inspiring and creating inefficiency, and that it never had stood for efficiency except for the first year or two after it was organized. I also showed many times that it was absolutely undependable and unreliable, and that its stand on numerous occasions was against the best interest of the Government.

It took only a very short time for the President to abolish it. It would have been impossible for Congress ever to have abolished it.

And it is almost impossible for Congress ever to effect any consolidation of bureaus, or ever to abolish any of them. This work can be done only by the President. And this is because the bureau personnel, just as soon as it is proposed to consolidate it, or to abolish it, will besiege Members of Congress and implore them, and waylay them, with every kind of appeal imaginable, and have propaganda letters and telegrams sent them from home, demanding that such proposed action be not taken. And then you will find Members taking the floor to fight consolidation and to fight abolition. And there are no consolidations and no abolishments effected.

The President has stepped on the toes of some Army personnel in his proposed reorganization. So, naturally, we find our major general colleague from Oregon, who fails so frequently to vote with us Democrats, taking the floor to fight against the President's plan, predicting that dire calamity will follow, unless we set the President's action aside.

Only the President of the United States can fairly have before him in such matters a perspective of the interests and welfare of the whole 120,000,000 people of the United States of America. Every Member here will have the interests of some constituents affected by abolishing bureaus and consolidations. Therefore Members of Congress cannot abolish bureaus, and they cannot consolidate bureaus. It takes the President to do it.

And I believe that before this year is over the President of the United States will consolidate the War Department and the Navy Department into one department of national defense, with a unified Air Corps, and such action will easily save at least $100,000,000 annually, and will give us far more efficiency both in our Army and Navy. Yet you will remember that it was our major general friend who was largely responsible for the defeat of this consolidation in the last Congress.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I have not the time. Now, let me call your attention to some of the consolidations made by the President. Here is one of them:

All functions of administration of public buildings, reservations, national parks, national monuments, and national cemeteries are consolidated in an Office of National Parks—

And so forth. Why not? That is to prevent a duplication of effort and money, and it is the President of the United States who is bringing order out of chaos and saving money unnecessarily being expended out of the people's taxes. Let me call your attention to another one of the consolidations made by the President:

The functions of the United States Shipping Board, including those over and in respect to the United States Shipping Board Merchant Fleet Corporation, are transferred to the Department of Commerce, and the United States Shipping Board is abolished.

Once when Congress adjourned I spent the entire summer of my vacation checking up the rents that the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation were paying for buildings in Washington and Philadelphia. Do you know how much these two bureaus were then paying out for rents? They were paying out $764,000 a year for rented buildings alone in Washington and Philadelphia. At the same time there was vacant space down here in the Army and Navy Building in Potomac Park sufficient to house both of them. I found there was more vacant space there in that building, by actual measurements, than was necessary to house the whole Shipping Board and Fleet Corporation. I brought those facts to the attention of Mr. Martin Madden, who was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations—and God bless him, he always tried to save money for the Government—and he caused that Shipping Board and Emergency Fleet Corporation to give up their rented buildings and move down there into the Army and Navy Building and they are there today, thereby saving this Government $764,000 a year in rentals alone on just two bureaus.

The President also abolishes the National Screw Thread Commission. I tried to keep them from ever appointing such a Commission. The gentleman from Connecticut, the former Republican leader, caused it to be created. It was foolish to begin with, and it has existed here for 12 years. Finally it took a Democratic President to abolish it. Let me call your attention to some others that President Franklin D. Roosevelt has consolidated. The Bureaus of Immigration and Naturalization of the Department of Labor are consolidated. Why should they not be? It prevents duplication of effort and saves money and expense to the people and taxpayers.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BLANTON was granted leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate some excerpts.)

PUBLIC, NO. 2—THE PRESIDENT'S PLAN OF REORGANIZATION AND ABOLISHING OF BUREAUS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, when President Roosevelt got Congress to pass his Public, No. 2, "To preserve the credit of the United States Government", neither the President nor the Members of Congress intended that any injustice should be done to any of our disabled veterans. He implored Congress to help him save the Government from impending inevitable bankruptcy, for otherwise he claimed it could not continue to hospitalize and succor veterans, their widows, orphans, and dependents.

As the House has granted me unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to incorporate some excerpts, I will avail myself of the privilege accorded me and complete my discussion of the President's economy program by quoting some pertinent excerpts from correspondence, which for want of time I was prevented from doing in my speech on the floor.

Under Republican rule for the past 12 years a Republican Congress has engaged in a wild saturnalia of money spending, with an orgy of waste and extravagance unequaled in all our history. During the past 4 years the Hoover administration spent $1,000,000,000 annually more than our total revenues, creating total deficits of $4,000,000,000. Naturally, in such an atmosphere, a friendly, sympathetic Congress voted unprecedented benefits and compensation to all veterans.

Respecting compensation to the veterans of different wars, the Administration called the attention of Congress to the following facts:

As to the Revolutionary War, which began April 19, 1775, no pensions were paid until the act of March 18, 1818, which provided payment from that date, "when in need of assistance from his country for support", to commissioned officers $20, and to all others $8 per month, though prior thereto land warrants had been issued, but that up to 1861 for service in the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the Indian wars prior to 1855, the value of the total lands granted was under $82,000,000, and the total pensions paid for all of said wars to this date aggregated less than $90,000,000.

The Administration reminded Congress that for veterans of the War of 1812 their first pension act was passed February 14, 1871, allowing $8 per month to veterans and their widows, which was increased as follows: $12 to widows in 1886, $20 to widows as old as 70 in 1916, $30 to widows in 1920, and $50 to widows in 1926, which was 111 years after the war had closed.

The Administration also advised Congress that for veterans of the Mexican War of 1846 their first pension act was passed on January 29, 1887, which granted $8 per month to all veterans either 62 years of age or who were disabled or dependent, and to unmarried widows, which, in 1893, was raised to $12 for those totally disabled, and in 1912 to $30, and in 1916 widows 70 got $20, and in 1920 widows got $30, and in 1926 widows got $50, which was 78 years after the war; and in 1920, 72 years after the war, Mexican veterans were paid $50 per month.

Congress was also reminded that in their first act of July 27, 1892, veterans of Indian wars were paid $8 per month, and in 1913 were raised to $20 per month, and in 1908, $12 was paid to their widows, who in 1927 were raised to $30, under which act veterans of Indian wars were paid $20 if 62, $30 if 68, $40 if 72, and $50 per month if 75 years of age.

Congress was informed that for veterans of the Civil War, which began March 4, 1861, their first pension act was passed June 27, 1890, over 24 years after the war closed, paid them from $6 to $12 per month from date of filing application, for disability "not result of his own vicious habits"; and on April 24, 1906, 40 years after the war closed, Congress provided that upon reaching 62 years, did not require specific disability; and on February 6, 1907, pension was increased to $15 per month if 70 years old, and $20 per month if 75 years old; and on May 11, 1912, pension was increased, where veteran had had 3 years' service, to $16 if 62, $19 if 66, $25 if 70, and $30 per month if 75 years of age; and another increase was granted in 1918; and in 1920 was increased to $50 per month, and where attendant was necessary veteran received $72 per month; and in 1926 the above were increased to $65 and $90, respectively; and in 1930, which was 64 years after the Civil War had closed, veterans received $75 per month, and $25 additional if they required an attendant, and not until 1890, 24 years after the Civil War had closed, were their widows and children granted anything, and then widows received $8 per month, with $2 per month additional for each child under 16 years old.

Congress was advised also that for veterans of the War with Spain, commonly called the Spanish-American War, from April 21, 1898, to April 11, 1899, their first pension law was passed June 5, 1920, which paid for "disability not due to vicious habits", or for age, $12 if 62, $18 if 68, $24 if 72, and $30 per month if 75 years of age; which on May 1, 1926, were increased to $20 if 62, $30 if 68, $40 if 72, and $50 per month if 75 years of age, and those requiring attendants receiving $72 per month; and which on June 2, 1930, were again increased to $30 if 62, $40 if 68, $50 if 72, $60 if 75 years of age, and to $72 per month if an attendant is required, where there was 3 months' service, and for disabilities, under the above ages, they were paid $20 for one tenth, $25 for one fourth, $35 for one half, $50 for three fourths, and $60 per month for total disability, and no pensions were granted to their widows and children until July 16, 1918, which was over 19 years after the war had closed, there being first allowed $12 to widows and $2 per month for each child, which on September 1, 1922, was increased to $20 to widows and $4 per month for each child, and was again increased on May 1, 1926, to $30 per month to widows and $6 to each child.

The Administration reminded Congress that with respect to all of our wars which preceded the recent World War Congress did not grant pensions until many years after the close of such wars, while during the last fiscal year alone the Government paid to World War veterans and their dependents the sum of $595,948,314.57, and from the close of the World War to April 30, 1933, Congress has caused to be paid to World War veterans and their dependents a total of $5,830,338,771.80. In South Carolina there are 1,480 colored veterans drawing disability compensation and 4,196 colored veterans drawing disability allowance. In Georgia there are 2,764 colored veterans drawing disability compensation and 5,871 colored veterans drawing disability allowance. In Alabama there are 2,111 colored veterans drawing disability compensation and 4,983 colored veterans drawing disability allowance. Administration doctors advise that many of their ills are imaginary, are not serious, and are not of proven service origin, yet many of such colored veterans refuse to work, and demand that the Government support them and their families. The above facts are cited to show that the Government is depending on American Legion posts to help it keep off the rolls the veterans who are not disabled and who are not entitled to pensions.

Congress has also been reminded by the Administration that no other government in the history of the world has ever done more for or given better treatment to service men than has the United States of America; that during the war the Government paid allowances of not exceeding $50 per month to the dependents of a veteran, which was added to the allotment he made them out of his own pay; that they were provided with war-risk insurance convertible since the war; that the Government paid them the small $60 bonus, promptly provided them with vocational rehabilitation, extending such training not only to the skilled trades but also to the professions, during which time the Government made allotments and allowances to his family; that under the act of March 4, 1923, veterans were granted the presumption of service-connection of tubercular and neuropsychiatric diseases shown to have developed to a degree of 10 percent within 3 years after separation from the service, and under the act of June 27, 1924, such presumption was extended to January 1, 1925; that burial expenses were paid up to $100; and that under the act of May 19, 1924, there was granted adjusted-service pay of $1 per day extra for home service and $1.25 per day for foreign service, for which, with earned interest to accrue to 1945, adjusted-service certificates were issued to veterans, and Congress has required one half of the face amount of these certificates to be loaned to veterans.

I am one of those in Congress, Mr. Speaker, who believes that this adjusted-service pay should have been paid to veterans in cash. In the last Congress the petition to require full payment was signed first by Mr. PATMAN, second by Mr. RANKIN, and third by myself, and we passed the bill in the House requiring cash payment, but it was killed in the Senate. In the next session I shall not leave a stone unturned in my efforts to help pass a law requiring immediate cash payment.

The Administration has reminded Congress of the fact that hospitalization with travel pay to and from their homes has been granted to all disabled veterans whose disabilities are not of service origin, but have been incurred since the close of the war; also that under the Emergency Officers' Retirement Act of May 24, 1928, which at first contemplated only about 900 officers, over 7,000 emergency officers have been retired on pay from $106.25 to $262 per month for life, as disabled, yet hundreds of them are at the same time drawing large salaries from the Government ranging as high as $10,000 per year, and hundreds of them are holding lucrative positions in cities and States, as mayors, judges, police chiefs, and heads of various departments, while others have lucrative private practices as physicians, lawyers, dentists, and engineers, and that the disabilities of over 4,000 of them are acknowledged to be merely presumptive, embracing such afflictions as "social inaptitude", and others as fully ridiculous and absurd. It was to correct the inequities, inequalities, and injustices of existing conditions, and to save the Government, as he said, from inevitable bankruptcy, that the President implored Congress to pass his "Public, No. 2", and which if not passed he claimed, the Government would not be financially able to help even the bedridden disabled.

It will be remembered that in my resolution, No. 355, which I introduced on April 6, 1932, I showed that Maj. William Wolff Smith, general counsel of the Veterans' Administration, did not enter the service until October 29, 1918, just 13 days before the armistice, that he held a swivel-chair job here in Washington during said 13 days, yet he had himself retired as a disabled emergency officer at $187.50 per month for life, and at the same time was receiving a salary of $9,000 per annum from the Government as General Counsel, and that he had held the position of General Counsel in the Veterans' Bureau since February 1, 1923, but I forced him to resign after trying him before the Committee on Military Affairs.

And in my said Resolution No. 355, which was carefully checked up and found correct by the Committee on Military Affairs, I showed that the Veterans' Administration had in its employ and on the pay rolls of the Government an army of doctors, lawyers, dentists, and other swivel-chair officers who hold fat positions at big salaries and who were also at the same time drawing additional retirement pay each month as disabled emergency officers, from which I quote the following:

Dr. Winthrop C. Adams, salary $7,500, retired pay $150 per month; Dr. Wilfred E. Chambers, salary $6,500, retired pay $206.25 per month; Dr. William C. And, Mr. Speaker, I showed in my said Resolution No. 355 that there were 25 other doctors, and numerous other employees of said Veterans' Bureau that were drawing good salaries from the Government, and were at the same time also drawing additional monthly retirement pay as disabled emergency officers ranging from $106.25 to $240.62 per month, one being a chaplain drawing retirement pay of $195 per month in addition to his regular salary; that among the employees in the State Department drawing double pay was Prentiss B. Gilbert, drawing a salary of $7,000 per year and additional retirement pay of $150 per month, and I named numerous employees in the various departments of Government who were drawing large monthly retirement pay as disabled emergency officers while at the same time receiving large salaries for work that was presumed to be full time. The President felt it to be his duty to review these cases and ascertain which were not service connected, and which were not meritorious, and he will review them after July 1.

The fortitude and patriotism exhibited by veterans everywhere in supporting the President in his reorganization program has simply been wonderful. Yet because I supported the President in this crisis more portentious than in time of war, one adjutant of one post has accused me of "a change of heart toward veterans" and threatened me with political defeat. On May 24, 1933, I wrote a letter to the adjutant of Vernon D. Hart Post, No. 100, at Stamford, Tex., in which I said:

I would appreciate it very much indeed if your post would carefully check up the cases of all veterans in your vicinity who are being dropped or reduced in compensation, and give me complete detailed facts on each case where you know injustice has been done, so that I may bring same to the personal attention of the Administration, Budget Director, and President.

I intend to use every means within my power to force a correction of these injustices. Our disabled American veterans must be treated justly.

We friends of veterans here have arranged for a Democratic caucus to be held here in the House Chamber tomorrow night. We hope to formulate and have adopted proper plans that will force the passage of an amendment of the Economy Act that will correct injustices.

To my great surprise I received the following reply:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
VERNON D. HART POST, No. 100,
Stamford, Tex., May 26, 1933.

HON. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: Your letter of May 24, addressed to adjutant Vernon D. Hart Post, No. 100, American Legion, Stamford, Tex., just reached me, and it is interesting to note your change of heart toward the veterans. This is to be appreciated by all men who are interested in veterans and their welfare; however, it strikes me that your letter is a little late for you to attack the President's policy, for even we birds at the forks of the creek have received the tip that the President now proposes to temper the wind so that it will not blow hard upon the shorn-lamb veterans. Your help comes a little bit late, Mr. BLANTON; but, of course, we appreciate it.

Mr. BLANTON, permit me to give you this tip. We veterans through our organizations propose to fight any man or devil who proposed an unjust act against the veterans. We do not care very much whether we are fighting a popular President or an unpopular one. we were born in a fight and haven't yet gotten over the tendency.

And by the way, Mr. BLANTON, through some of my friends I have made application to you for appointment as postmaster at Stamford. I have just recently been selected assistant district committeeman of the Seventeenth District of the American Legion. The new district committeeman lives outside the new Seventeenth District and if we follow the usual course I will qualify as Seventeenth District committeeman when the new organization becomes operative. I have always supported you in your former campaigns, but frankly my further support and influence will depend upon whether I get the place as postmaster of Stamford, Tex. That's putting it straight, but you are going to need the service man in the next election.

Sincerely yours,

M. B. HARRIS, Adjutant.

You will note that Adjutant Harris asserted that he had always supported me in my political campaigns, and that he would support me next year if I made him postmaster at Stamford. In other words he would forgive me for supporting President Roosevelt, provided I gave him the postmastership, but if I "didn't come across" he would use his influence as "district committeeman of my Seventeenth District" to defeat me in the next election. I feel sure that his post and the other American Legion posts in my district will not approve of his threat, because the constitution of the American Legion does not permit such political reprisals. I answered Adjutant Harris as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., May 31, 1933.

Mr. M. B. HARRIS,
Adjutant the American Legion, Stamford, Tex.

DEAR MR. HARRIS: I feel hurt that you would write me such a letter. I know that some veterans are grateful for the many years of hard work I have done for them. I note your statement:

"We veterans through our organizations propose to fight any man or devil who proposed an unjust act against the veterans. We do not care very much whether we are fighting a popular President or an unpopular one. * * * I will qualify as Seventeenth District committeeman. * * * I have always supported you in your former campaigns, but frankly my further support and influence will depend upon whether I get the place as postmaster of Stamford. That's putting it straight, but you are going to need the service man in the next election."

Until I received the above very unjust and threatening letter, I had felt very kindly toward your application. I have had a very high opinion of you, and did not think that you were capable of resorting to "hold-ups" in an attempt to take over a position. Postmasterships in my district are not for sale—either for money or votes. The position I hold is one of honor. I have not dishonored it. I will never dishonor it. I would rather give it up than to allow threats to influence me.

If I have had you sized up right during the years I have known you, I feel sure that when you have time to reflect I shall receive an apology from you. I have always thought you to be a real man. I still think that way, though I must admit that my faith has been sorely tested.

Your friend,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

On March 30, 1933, I received from Mr. Hubert L. Turner, of Roscoe, Tex., a letter enclosing a petition signed numerously by patrons of the Roscoe post office endorsing him for postmaster, in which letter he said:

I have the endorsement of our county chairman, Mr. W. H. Jobe, of Sweetwater, of our congressional committee, and Mr. Frank Scofield, our director of finance.

I have pledged 10 percent of my salary, if appointed, to our Democratic campaign. * * * Mr. BLANTON, I am going to do more than that; if I receive the appointment, I am going to give you as a gift $500. Five hundred dollars in return of your favor, to be used to help you in your next campaign. I am not trying to buy you off, as I know you to be a man that cannot be bought off; and I say any man that has stood as firm as you have against such strong opposition, as you have had to fight in this session of Congress, deserves help, credit, favor, and honor. * * *

With all good wishes, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HUBERT L. TURNER.

I immediately replied as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., April 10, 1933.

Mr. HUBERT L. TURNER,
Roscoe, Tex.

MY DEAR MR. TURNER: I have your letter stating that you are endorsed for the postmastership there by Mr. W. H. Jobe, Democratic county chairman, by the congressional committee, and by Mr. Frank Scofield, Democratic director of finance, and also enclosing a petition signed by 294 alleged patrons of the Roscoe post office.

Such endorsements would have warranted me in having you appointed, but on account of the letter you wrote you haven't a chance. You can't buy the office. In your letter you state:

"I have pledged 10 percent of my salary, if appointed, to our Democratic campaign, as I understand national headquarters are expecting each one appointed to pledge a percent. Mr. BLANTON, I am going to do more than that; if I receive the appointment, I am going to give you as a gift $500 in return of your favor, to be used to help you in your next campaign. I am not trying to buy you off, as I know you to be a man that cannot be bought off; and I say any man that has stood firm as you have against such strong opposition as you have had to fight in this session of Congress deserves help, credit, favor, and honor."

Your proposal is an insult to me and to the Democratic Party. It is simply an attempt to bribe. Anyone who would propose such a bribe is wholly unfit and disqualified to hold public office. The people want officials who won't offer bribes to others and who can't be bribed themselves. Though $25,000 was spent by various interests in my district against me last year, not a dollar was contributed to my campaign, and I still owe the bank a balance of $1,500 for money borrowed to enable me to make it; but I will pay it with honest money, not with bribes. I have helped to pass a law cutting my salary $1,500, cutting an additional 2 months' pay from my term, cutting my clerical allowance $750 (which I am bearing myself and supplying to them out of my own pay, as my clerks with dependents are not able to lose it), and cutting my mileage 25 percent, and cutting my office expenses 25 percent, and I have practically nothing left each month after my expenses are paid; but I am not for sale. I can't be bribed.

In my numerous speeches made in the national campaign last year I denounced the Republican practice of selling post offices. I pledged that it would be stopped. No person in my district will pay anything to anybody for any appointment.

I promptly showed your letter to President Roosevelt. It astounded him. He is the head of our Democratic organization. He will permit no contributions to be received in return for appointments. He will allow no offices to be bought.

Very truly yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

It would be just as reprehensible for me to sell the postmastership at Stamford to Adjutant M. B. Harris, district committeeman of the American Legion, for his influence and support as it would be to sell the postmastership at Roscoe to Mr. Hubert L. Turner for the $500 he wrote that he would pay me for it. If I have had "a change of heart", as charged by Adjutant Harris, and am not the kind of a Representative to give the legionnaires a fair, just deal, then Adjutant Harris is not giving them a fair deal to offer me his influence and support as the district committeeman in return for my giving him the postmastership.

I showed Adjutant Harris' letter to my colleague, Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Congressman from Massachusetts, who is the able and popular Chairman of the Committee on Labor, and who enlisted as a private and served 19 months in France, taking part in all major operations and engagements, and who, with RANKIN, PATMAN, BROWNING, and POU, led the forces here in protecting the interests of World War veterans, and with his usual kindly interest he wrote the following letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON LABOR,
Washington, D.C., May 31, 1933.

Hon. M. B. HARRIS,
Adjutant Vernon D. Hart Post No. 100,
The American Legion, Stamford, Tex.

DEAR "BUDDIE": Because I am a veteran of the World War, am a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, am Chaiman of the Committee on Labor, and am thoroughly familiar with all veterans' legislation here, your Congressman has just shown me your letter to him of May 28. You condemn him because he backed the President and voted for the economy bill, and I note your threat that you intend to fight him and the President, and unless BLANTON appoints you postmaster, you will use your influence as district committeeman of the American Legion to defeat him for re-election.

THOMAS L. BLANTON and I have served together here for years. He has always been a loyal, stanch friend of the veterans of all wars. When he voted for the President's economy bill, he was assured that the Bureau would do no injustice to any veteran. In the last Congress BLANTON was the third Member to sign the petition that forced the Patman bill to be passed in the House, to pay the bonus in cash to veterans.

At his own expense BLANTON spent months investigating Col. Charles R. Forbes, former Director of the Bureau, whom the Department of Justice afterwards indicted and sent to the penitentiary. At his own expense BLANTON investigated numerous hospitals in the United States, including old Hospital No. 25 at Houston, and on one day caused about 200 tubercular patients to be transferred to Prescott, Ariz., and Fort Bayard, N.Mex. At his own expense BLANTON made the Staples and McMorris investigations to insure justice to veterans. At his own expense BLANTON spent his entire vacation investigating Col. Frederick A. Fenning, and he personally conducted the trial of Fenning before the Judiciary Committee, and forced Fenning to resign and make retribution to several hundred shell-shocked veterans put in insane asylums and robbed by Fenning. At his own expense BLANTON spent several years investigating the inequities and injustices carried on in the Bureau by Maj. Wm. Wolff Smith, general counsel, and conducted the trial of Major Smith before the Committee on Military Affairs, forcing Smith to resign, and to return to the Government money he had unlawfully collected.

I mention the above to show that you are in error when you say that BLANTON "has had a change of heart." Thousands of veterans scattered in every part of the United States have appealed to BLANTON, and he has never yet turned one of them down. BLANTON is helping now a committee that is conferring with the President to remedy injustices, and he is a personal friend of mine, and of PATMAN, RANKIN, BROWNING, JEFFERS, Mrs. ROGERS, and others here who handle veterans' affairs.

Very sincerely yours,

WILLIAM P. CONNERY.

My good friend and colleague from Mississippi, Hon. JOHN E. RANKIN, is Chairman of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation, and is a veteran of the World War, and he rendered to the country services of great value in helping to force Col. Frederick A. Fenning to resign, and the following letter from him shows whether or not I am a friend of veterans:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
COMMITTEE ON WORLD WAR VETERANS' LEGISLATION,
Washington, D.C., June 2, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR TOM: With reference to the matter which we were discussing yesterday, relative to veterans' relief, I desire to call your attention to the fact that some amendments to the independent offices appropriation bill are being adopted by the Senate that will greatly aid the disabled veterans and their dependents.

Look for them in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the morning. I am calling your attention to this for fear that you might miss it. I know that you are very busy and, like most of us, don't have the time to read the RECORD as closely as you would like to.

I know this will be gratifying information to you, especially in view of the extreme disappointment you have expressed at the manner in which the so-called "economy bill" has been administered.

You have been one of the most diligent and consistent Members of the House in your labors for the benefits of the veterans and I can appreciate the keen disappointment you so often express at the merciless injustice now being done them by the Veterans' Administration in carrying out the provisions of the so-called "economy bill."

Look these amendments over when you get the RECORD in the morning and I will talk with you further about this matter when I see you in the House tomorrow.

Sincerely your friend,

(Signed) JOHN.

In our Democratic caucus a special select committee, composed of Mr. CROSSER, of Ohio; Mr. BROWNING, of Tennessee; Mr. PATMAN, of Texas, and Mr. POU, of North Carolina, was sent to the White House to confer with the President, and after a conference lasting several days they reached an agreement with the President, which resulted in the following new regulations being adopted, to wit:

The President is hereby authorized under the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, to establish such number of special boards (the majority of the members of which were not in the employ of the Veterans' Administration at the date of enactment of this act), as he may deem necessary to review all claims (where the veteran entered service prior to November 11, 1918, and whose disability is not the result of his own misconduct), in which presumptive service connection has heretofore been granted under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, wherein payments were being made on March 20, 1933, and which are held not service connected under the regulations issued pursuant to Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress. Members of such boards may be appointed without regard to the Civil Service laws and regulations, and their compensation fixed without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. Such special boards shall determine, on all available evidence, the question whether service connection shall be granted under the provisions of the regulations issued pursuant to Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress (notwithstanding the evidence may not clearly demonstrate the existence of the disease or any specific clinical findings within the terms of or period prescribed by regulation 1, part 1, subparagraph (c), or instruction no. 2, regulation no. 1, issued under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress), and shall in their decisions resolve all reasonable doubts in favor of the veteran, the burden of proof in such cases being on the Government.

Notwithstanding the provisions of section 17, title I, Public, No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, any claim for yearly renewable term insurance on which premiums were paid to the date of death of the insured and any claim for pension, compensation allowance, or emergency officers' retirement pay under the provisions of laws repealed by said section 17 wherein claim was duly filed prior to March 20, 1933, may be adjudicated by the Veterans' Administration on the proofs and evidence received by the Veterans' Administration prior to March 20, 1933, and any person found entitled to the benefits claimed shall be paid such benefits in accordance with and in the amounts provided by such prior laws: Provided, That the payments hereby authorized to be made shall continue only to include June 30, 1933, and only one original adjudicatory action and one appeal may be had in such cases. Where a veteran died prior to March 20, 1933, under conditions which warrant the payment of, or reimbursement for, burial expenses, such payment or reimbursement may be made in accordance with the laws in effect prior to March 20, 1933, provided that claim for such payment or reimbursement must be filed within 3 months from the date of passage of this act.

Notwithstanding the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, the decisions of such special boards shall be final in such cases, subject to such appellate procedure as the President may prescribe, and except for fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation, 75 percent of the payments being made on March 20, 1933, therein shall continue to October 31, 1933, or the date of special board decision, whichever is the earlier date: Provided, That where any case is pending before any one of the special boards on October 31, 1933, the President may provide for extending the time of payment until decision can be rendered. The President shall prescribe such rules governing reviews and hearings as may be deemed advisable. Payment of salaries and expenses of such boards and personnel assigned thereto shall be paid out of and in accordance with appropriations for the Veterans' Administration.

Notwithstanding any of the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, in no event shall the rates of compensation payable for directly service-connected disabilities to those veterans who entered the active military or naval service prior to November 11, 1918, and whose disabilities are not the result of their own misconduct, where they were except by fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation, in receipt of compensation on March 20, 1933, be reduced more than 25 percent, except in accordance with the regulations issued under Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, pertaining to Federal employees, hospitalized cases, and cases of beneficiaries residing outside of the continental limits of the United States; and in no event shall death compensation, except by fraud, mistake, or misrepresentation, being paid to widows, children, and dependent parents of deceased World War veterans under the World War Veterans' Act of 1924, as amended, on March 20, 1933, be reduced or discontinued, whether the death of the veteran on whose account compensation is being paid was directly or presumptively connected with service.

Notwithstanding any of the provisions of Public Law No. 2, Seventy-third Congress, any veteran of the Spanish-American War, including the Boxer rebellion and the Philippine insurrection, who served 90 days or more, was honorably discharged from the service, is 55 years of age or over, is 50 percent disabled, and in need as defined by the President, shall be paid a pension of not less than $15 per month.

The above will be signed into law by the President and will become a part of the Regulations of the Veterans' Administration. Mr. PATMAN gave same his approval. Mr. BROWNING in approving same said that nothing more at this time could be gotten for the veterans. Mr. POU, whose beloved son did not return from France, and who is one of the oustanding friends of all veterans, asked all Democrats to approve of the above agreement with the President.

To offset what Adjutant Harris said about my "change of heart", I want him to see one of my possessions more valuable to me than money—the following letter from my good friend and colleague from Kentucky, Congressman A. J. MAY, than whom the veterans of all wars have no truer or better friend in this Congress:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., May 26, 1933.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: As I told you on the floor of the House a few days ago, I am planning to retire from Congress the 1st of next January to accept a judgeship in my own State; but at the time I told you of my contemplated plans it had not occurred to me that it would be but a few days until our active service together shall have ended.

Under these circumstances I cannot refrain from expressing to you what is in my mind and heart concerning your services in Congress as a Representative of a great constituency and to reaffirm my appreciation of your never-ceasing diligence, industry, and fearless devotion to duty at all times and under all circumstances. In my public and business career of nearly 40 years I have not known any man more faithful and devoted to the interests of his country than you have been in all these trying years of these terrible economic times in which we are living.

Often have I been amazed at not only your parliamentary skill and cool, deliberate judgment, but I have wondered at your never-failing skill and ability in overcoming the opposition. I wanted to say to you from the very depths of my heart and in all sincerity that in my judgment no district in the United States ever had a more faithful or honorable Representative in the Congress than the district you have so ably represented.

I do not know your plans for the future, but in parting may I say that I shall devoutly hope you may continue to represent your district here; that the masses of the common people of America may continue to have at least one great champion of their cause continue in Congress; and that the Treasury, where the people's money is deposited, may have a real watchdog.

With kind regards and best wishes, I shall continue always,

Very cordially and sincerely yours,

A. J. MAY.

In conclusion I want to predict that the President of the United States will have the backing of the veterans of all wars in his earnest, patriotic efforts to save this Republic and bring about an economic recovery and get things back to normalcy. I have confidence in him. I believe that he is going to make good. The country believes in him, and has absolute confidence in him. Let us all give him a hand. And when things get prosperous again, the President and the Congress are going to make more generous provision for our veterans of all wars.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and thirty-three Members present; not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-nine Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 7 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, in the next few hours or perhaps a few days or at least a week or 10 days, this House will have adjourned—we hope. I understand that the Banking and Currency Committees of both Houses are having conferences with reference to the guaranty bank deposits bill. I think that this House and the country generally is for the guaranteeing of bank deposits. [Applause.] I rise to call attention to some statistics that I secured this morning with reference to the condition of banks that were closed on March 5. On February 29, just a few days before the general closing, there were 1,069 national banks under liquidation, with assets of $1,358,000,000. On May 29 there were 1,029 national banks that were closed by the moratorium, now under conservatorship or receivership, with assets of $1,150,000,000. There are 2,380 State banks that were closed by the moratorium, with assets of $1,835,000,000. There are approximately 800 State banks placed in liquidation since the moratorium with assets of approximately $500,000,000. There were 249 mutual savings banks with assets of $2,400,000,000, which are also under conservatorship or receivership, making a total of 5,527 banks with $7,243,000,000 in assets locked up at the present time in the 48 States of the Union.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. PARSONS. Let me get through, please. I cannot yield.

If a guaranty bank deposit law is passed, whether it guarantees $2,500 or $5,000 or up to $10,000 deposits, practically every one of these banks, whether they are in liquidation now or not, will be placed in liquidation, and $7,243,000,000 of assets will be locked up for an indefinite period, probably 50 percent of which will never be paid to the depositors.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman kindly say that again?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Will the gentleman put in the deposits also?

Mr. PARSONS. The figures will appear in the RECORD. We passed a bank bill providing for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to come to the rescue of those banks and take preferred stock. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation adopted the policy that they would not take a single dollar of preferred stock in any bank until they had combed their own communities and raised a like amount of preferred stock at home.

Naturally, a large portion of our money has drifted to the commercial centers. Most all of these 5,527 banks are located in the smaller towns and cities and rural communities, involving about 20,000,000 people, with the number of deposits equally as great, but not as great in amounts, of course, but in numbers, as a large portion of the metropolitan centers. Hundreds and thousands of those depositors with $100 or $200 or $300 on deposit are now on charity in many communities. I say to you it is a crime and a shame, with all the relief that has been granted here in one form or another—$500,000,000 appropriated directly for relief, $3,300,000,000 to go into the public works bill to put people back to work and to revive confidence and to revive business, that we cannot take two or three hundred million dollars and go to the rescue of these 5,000 banks and open them. [Applause.]

I do not mean that I would have the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or the Federal Reserve just pour money into a bank that does not have any good assets at all, but I say to you that practically all these banks have slow paper which, with the revival of prices, with the rise in commodity levels, will be good assets in the next 2 or 3 years. If we are going to predicate the reopening of these banks upon present business conditions of the moment, certainly they never will be opened.

We ought to have a more liberalized attitude given the depositors and officers of the banks than the Treasury Department is at the present time giving to them. What are we doing? We are asking the depositors to take preferred stock with their money that is on deposit. We are asking the stockholders to go out and comb the town and the community for every dollar they can get, to take preferred stock, or to pay on their stock assessment, or come in, in some manner to revive the bank. You are combing the county and the city for money. You place it in the bank to make the bank solvent, and there it is locked up because the bank will not loan a single dollar to a single individual because of lack of security, values, and lack of confidence. You have adopted a deflationary policy for every one of these banks that are still closed.

I did not want this Congress to adjourn without making a protest to someone who is in authority or the ones who may be in authority, who have the power to adopt a liberal attitude toward a reopening of the banks. The Reconstruction

Finance Corporation has the power and authority to make these extensions of loans on preferred stock, but certainly they will not do it unless the Congress demands it. I think we ought to have a resolution adopted before we adjourn calling upon the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or upon the Treasury Department and the Comptroller of the Currency to take a more liberal attitude, so that 20,000,000 people who have deposits in these 5,500 banks with $7,243,000,000 assets can get some relief; at least get some of their deposits paid at this time, pending further liquidation.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield there for a question?

Mr. PARSONS. I yield.

Mr. EAGLE. Even if that were done, and it ought to be done, does the gentleman think that the American people who still have some money, will ever again deposit in anybody's bank unless this Government insures, in some reasonable way, those deposits, and should this Congress adjourn at all until we first pass a bank guaranty deposit bill? [Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. PARSONS. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to have bank deposits guaranteed; but if you pass the bill which is now in conference, without making any provision for extending aid to banks now under conservatorship or receivership, their assets will be wiped out, because the requirements will be such that no bank of this type can be included under the guaranty plan.

One year ago, practically all the bankers of the country were against guaranteed deposits. Today most of them have come around for it. Why the miraculous change? A number of large bankers have come to support guaranteed deposits because they see that what I have just described will happen. That is, that we will by law, enforced under regulations written by the authorities in charge of the law, prohibit the 5,000 banks described, from qualifying under the guaranty clause. These banks will be liquidated and wiped out, making room for expansion by the large bankers, either through branch systems or interlocking directorates, into all the sections which will then be without banking facilities. The credit of local and rural communities will be dictated by a central bank or central authority in the larger towns and cities, perhaps hundreds of miles removed from the place where the loans are located.

While it is true that many bankers have honestly come to support guaranteed deposits, nevertheless I can see in this movement the motive that I have just described.

This kind of movement will be fine for those banks that are left, but it will absolutely destroy more than 5,000 banks with $7,000,000,000 deposits affecting probably twenty or twenty-five million of our people. We have tried to restore confidence. How can confidence be maintained when one fifth of our population see their last savings destroyed by liquidation?

The reason these banks are not opened is that the examiners are requiring certain degrees of liquidity and additional security on loans. Billions of these loans are on farm and city property, which, of course, under the present conditions, cannot be liquefied, and in many instances the interest cannot be paid up to date to make the paper acceptable under the strict requirements. Certainly all this paper is slow if you appraise it on the basis of present prices and values. But if predicated upon a rise in price and value, these loans furnish as sound security as any stock or bond. If the farm lands, city homes, and smaller business properties on which are based all our city, State, and Federal bonds is not good security, where under heaven are you going to find sound security? We have set up the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to finance nearly every kind of industry, bank, and insurance company, but only those that have liquidity, and which do not necessarily need to borrow, are the ones who can and are borrowing. The institutions that are in need, and who must borrow if they are to survive, are the ones who are ignored by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

If the United States is coming back to normalcy, then the assets of the closed and restricted banks will eventually become sufficiently valuable that they can either reopen on a sound basis under the guarantee-deposits plan, or else liquidate for enough to pay off the depositors. I am informed that a provision is contained in the guarantee deposits bill now in conference to provide funds to loan to banks now under liquidation. That will help to liquidate perhaps, but it will not conserve banking facilities for the communities.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PARSONS] has expired.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 5 additional minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I object. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I object. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BEEDY. Mr. Speaker, will not the gentleman withdraw his objection?

Mr. CONNERY. I cannot. They are filibustering on me.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I present a privileged report from that committee and ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution accompanying the report.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 188

Resolved, That during the remainder of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress it shall be in order for the Speaker at any time to entertain motions to suspend the rules notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1, rule XXVII; and it shall also be in order at any time during the first session of the Seventy-third Congress for the majority leader to move that the House take a recess, and said motion is hereby made of the highest privilege.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order this resolution is not in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the consideration of the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced that in the opinion of the Chair two thirds had voted in favor thereof.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I was on my feet making the point of order I had previously reserved.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I had previously reserved a point of order. Then I made the point of order that this resolution is in violation of rule XI and is not privileged. It must go over for a day under the rules.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, not necessarily.

Mr. Speaker, I move the immediate consideration of the resolution. This, under the rule, will require a two-thirds vote.

Mr. CONNERY. That is all right. This will give us a chance to vote it up or down.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the resolution be now considered?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand it, in order for the motion to carry it must receive a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. Yes; certainly.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. I understand that, under the rules, 20 minutes to a side would be allotted for the consideration of the resolution. Inasmuch as the gentleman from New York has not moved the previous question, will he not yield some time to Members on this side?

The SPEAKER. There is no such rule applying to the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. There is no such rule. Under the rules, of course, I would have been entitled to 1 hour, but the clamor for a vote deterred me from explaining the resolution. I do feel, however, that perhaps some few Members of the House do not understand the purpose of it.

Mr. GOSS. That is the point, and I am hopeful the gentleman will yield some time so it can be threshed out before a vote is taken. The previous question has not been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been requested.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SNELL. As I understand the situation, when a rule of this character is brought in for consideration, it should be considered in exactly the same way in which any rule would be considered, except that it takes a two-thirds vote to pass it.

The SPEAKER. The question is one of consideration, and it requires a two-thirds vote to consider it.

Mr. SNELL. The motion of the gentleman from New York is not now in order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; it is.

Mr. SNELL. It requires a two-thirds vote. As I understand it, we are merely passing on the question of consideration at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York calls up the resolution. The question is on the consideration of the resolution. The yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. SNELL. The question is on the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; that is right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announced on a viva-voce vote that two thirds had voted to consider the resolution.

Mr. CONNERY and Mr. FISH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 233, nays 118, not voting 79, as follows:

Mr. O'Malley with Mr. Hamilton.

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "aye."

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. OLIVER of Alabama. I was not, Mr. Speaker.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object; I am sorry, but I shall have to object.

I demand the regular order, Mr. Speaker.

CALL OF THE COMMITTEES

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. What is the regular order at this time, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The calling of the committees.

The Chair notes the time is now 3:33 o'clock p.m. The Clerk will call the committees.

Mr. SABATH (when Committee on Elections No. 2 was called). Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, there are several contests pending before the Committee on Elections No. 2. I wonder whether the chairman or some other member of the committee is present and can give the House some information relative to these contests.

The SPEAKER. There has been nothing reported by the committee.

Mr. CONNERY. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the next committee.

BEDFORD COUNTY, TENN.

Mr. BROWNING (when the Committee on the Judiciary was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I call up the bill (H.R. 5909) to transfer Bedford County from the Nashville division to the Winchester division of the middle Tennessee judicial district.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order. Did I understand the gentleman to say he is directed by the committee to call this up?

Mr. BROWNING. Yes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Bedford County of the Nashville division of the middle district of the State of Tennessee is hereby detached from the Nashville division and attached to and made a part of the Winchester division of the middle district of such State.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BROWNING] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire, within the 1 hour, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. HESS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield half of the time to this side?

Mr. BROWNING. I will yield time to Members on that side, but I shall not yield time except as gentlemen request it.

Mr. HESS. Will the gentleman yield one half hour of the time to this side?

Mr. BROWNING. To be confined to the bill?

Mr. HESS. Yes.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOSS. Do I understand this time is allotted for general debate, or is the debate confined to the bill, under the rule?

The SPEAKER. In the House debate must be confined to the bill under consideration.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to remove from the Nashville district of the Federal court of Tennessee one of the greatest bluegrass counties in the world. [Applause.]

We seek by this bill to prevent any contaminating influences that may prevail within the environs of Nashville, Tenn., or any local talent in middle Tennessee that might be guilty of manufacturing liquids rather than solids. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. BYRNS. I want to say to my good personal friend and colleague that there is nobody in Tennessee, either in my district or in the gentleman's district, who thinks there are any contaminating influences in Nashville.

Mr. MITCHELL. Whatever contaminating influences may prevail in Nashville come not from Tennessee but from the bordering States of Kentucky, Georgia, and Alabama. [Laughter.]

Mr. BYRNS. I accept the gentleman's explanation.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. EAGLE. Will the gentleman state that no matter what the controversy on this floor between the gentleman from one section of Tennessee and the gentleman from another section of Tennessee, what is it outside of this floor that the gentleman from Tennessee says to the other gentleman from Tennessee? [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has an absolutely unanimous report from the Judiciary Committee. It seeks to transfer Bedford County's criminal jurisdiction from Davidson County, where it was originally placed, to another great, middle Tennessee county, where the Federal court sits in regular session under the present statutes.

There is a difference in mileage that would result in a saving to the Federal Government and likewise a saving in the expense incident to holding Federal court.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. With pleasure.

Mr. TABER. Does this bill have the approval of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. MITCHELL. Insofar as I know, there is no opposition from any section—the attorneys, officers of the court, or anyone else it may concern. There is this distinction so far as the attendance of witnesses go. It is 70 miles from Shelbyville to Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. GRANFIELD. What is the attitude of the bar of Bedford County for this change?

Mr. MITCHELL. The bar of Bedford County have unanimously signed a petition requesting the change. There is likewise a unanimous petition by the members of the bar in Franklin County. If there should be any opposition to this measure it would have to come from some jitney driver or hotelkeeper in Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. With pleasure

Mr. BEAM. I should like to ask the gentleman what is the population of these respective counties, and how do they compare, and how it will affect the dockets of the respective courts?

Mr. MITCHELL. The judge on the bench and the attorney general endorse the bill, although they did not want to be placed on record. The population of the two counties is about equal.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Do the members of the bar of both counties endorse this bill?

Mr. MITCHELL. The attorneys in each bar agree that this is a meritorious measure.

Mr. TERRELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. With pleasure.

Mr. TERRELL. Does this measure have the endorsement of the President of the United States?

Mr. MITCHELL. The President of the United States stands for every proposition that is right, and against those without merit. This is right, and consequently he is in favor of this bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will.

Mr. DIES. I am informed—I do not know whether it is a fact—but I should like to ask the gentleman whether or not my able and distinguished colleague, Mr. CROSS, originated in Bedford County, Tenn.? If the gentleman knows the details I should like the information. [Laughter.]

Mr. MITCHELL. I am going to plead guilty to the intimation of my friend, and I may say that his distinguished colleague, a Representative from Texas, the Lone Star State, did originate in Bedford County, Tenn.

Mr. DIES. Then we are for your bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREGORY. I understood the gentleman to say something about Kentucky. Will he please be kind enough to repeat it?

Mr. MITCHELL. Kentucky is a great State. [Laughter.] It has a reputation for slow race horses and fast ladies. [Laughter.]

Mr. JEFFERS. Will the gentleman repeat that last statement?

Mr. MITCHELL. The gentleman from Kentucky will repeat it. I never made any reference to Kentucky except in a complimentary way.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MITCHELL. For a very brief question.

Mr. BROWNING. In answer to the gentleman from Kentucky who made the inquiry, I should like to interject a statement. My colleague in addressing the House intimated that some contaminating influences came from neighboring States. And the gentleman from Kentucky said that those contaminating influences were run out of that State and got into Nashville. Does the gentleman endorse that?

Mr. MITCHELL. If, perchance, evildoers escape the jurisdiction of Kentucky and go down into the Hermitage district, where the majority leader, J. W. BYRNS, radiates such wholesome influences, it immediately works out a complete reformation.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. For a short question, but be brief. [Laughter.]

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, I notice that Bedford County is mentioned. What is the population of Bedford County?

Mr. MITCHELL. I could not tell accurately about the population, but if you measure the great service that the people are rendering in that great bluegrass section one would think that the population ran into the millions. They feed and clothe the world in that section of the country.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman has not answered my question. About how many people live in that county? An effort is being made to transfer it from one judicial district to another. How many people will be affected by the transfer?

Mr. MITCHELL. The population is approximately 15,000 in each of the counties affected.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes.

Mr. DIES. There is no question about the fact that the people wear shoes down there, is there?

Mr. MITCHELL. Absolutely no question about that. And if it were not for the white-faced cattle and the black Angus cattle raised in that section of the country, the gentleman who asked the question would be barefooted right now. [Laughter.] We furnish the beef, we furnish the livestock to feed the world from the bluegrass hills of the Fourth District of Tennessee.

Mr. PARSONS. And is it not a fact that that section of the country furnished most of the pioneer residents of the State of Texas?

Mr. MITCHELL. Except for Tennessee there never would have been a Texas in this country. We have furnished the motive power and intellectual ability to run the Lone Star State for a hundred years.

Mr. BEAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. With pleasure to a Representative from the great city of Chicago.

Mr. BEAM. It is my pleasure to serve on the Agricultural Committee with the distinguished gentleman now occupying the floor, and I rise to say that the farmers of this Nation have no more stanch friend than the gentleman from Tennessee. His efforts in behalf of agriculture and in behalf of the poor people throughout the country pertaining to agriculture have been crowned with great success, and the farmers of the Nation should be congratulated to have such a distinguished Representative upon that committee. In due deference to the gentleman and his efforts here today I think the entire assembly should be present to hear his speech. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifty-seven Members present, not a quorum.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

[Roll No. 69]

Adams	De Priest	Kerr	Reed, N.Y.
Allgood	DeRouen	Kinzer	Reid, Ill.
Almon	Douglass	Kleberg	Rich
Andrew, Mass.	Doutrich	Larrabee	Richards

Corning	Huddleston	Perkins	Woodrum
Crosser	Jenckes	Peterson
Crump	Kemp	Pierce
Cummings	Kennedy, N.Y.	Pou

The SPEAKER. Three hundred and thirty-six Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S.Con.Res. 5. Concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 1580), the Emergency Railroad Transportation Act, 1933, and authorizing its reenrollment with an amendment.

RECALL OF RAILROAD BILL

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent Senate resolution, which was read.

Senate Concurrent Resolution 5

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, requested to return to the Senate the enrolled bill (S. 1580) to relieve the existing national emergency in relation to interstate railroad transportation, and to amend sections 5, 15a, and 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

Resolved further, That in the event the said bill is returned by the President, the action of the Speaker of the House of Representatives and of the Vice President of the United States in signing the said enrolled bill be rescinded, and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to reenroll the said bill with the following amendment, viz: In section 13, after the word "conditions", insert the words "and relations."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, is this is a privileged resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

BEDFORD COUNTY, TENN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, reverting to the contribution of Tennessee to Texas, near where this court is to meet, and in this same congressional district, which I have the honor to represent, at least four Texans, Members of the present House of Representatives, first saw the light of day. [Applause.] It was in this same congressional district that I have the honor to represent that the greatest law school in Dixie is situated, Cumberland University, which has graduated more than 25 Members of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. BEAM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Chicago.

Mr. BEAM. I do not like to unnecessarily interpose myself upon the gentleman's speech, but I come from the great State of Illinois. [Applause.] I believe, in studying the history of our country——

Mr. DIES. May I interrupt the gentleman long enough to congratulate the State of Illinois? [Applause.]

Mr. BEAM. I thank the gentleman. I am cognizant of the great contributions which the great States of Illinois and New York and Massachusetts have made to this Commonwealth. I believe I am also familiar with the history of the country relative to the contributions that Kentucky, Alabama, Louisiana, Ohio, Virginia, and the great western sisterhood of States have made, but what I am concerned about is, outside the contribution of sending such a distinguished delegation from Tennessee to this House of Congress, what contribution has the State of Tennessee made to the greatness of our Republic?

Mr. MITCHELL. If the gentleman is not familiar with the contribution which Tennessee has made to this country it would be a very serious reflection upon the gentleman who makes the inquiry. [Laughter and applause.] Has the gentleman not heard of the hero of New Orleans, Andrew Jackson? [Applause.] Has the gentleman not heard of James K. Polk? [Applause.] Has the gentleman not heard of Andrew Johnson? [Applause.] Has the gentleman not heard of Bedford Forrest? [Applause.] Has the gentleman not learned of John Sevier? [Applause.] Has the gentleman not learned of David Crockett and Sam Houston? [Applause.] Has the gentleman not heard of Alvin York? If not, I could not expect him to understand what contribution the State has made. [Applause.]

Mr. GUYER. Did Dr. Scopes come from Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. I want to ask what those gentlemen from Texas did that you ran them out of Tennessee?

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to make this observation——

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not yield.

Mr. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield for the parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir; I do not yield.

Mr. DUNN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. No. I decline to yield further. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is from the wrong State to expect me to yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to make this same observation, that in this same environment we speak of, the greatest Secretary of State that any administration ever had, Mr. Cordell Hull, has his residence. He lives in the Fourth District of Tennessee and served my State and district in Congress for one quarter of a century. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. I was wondering also if Mr. Scopes came from the State of Tennessee?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to inform the gentleman of the whereabouts of Dr. Scopes. He moved out of the old Volunteer State and journeyed immediately to the swamps of Florida. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Texas. In the list of notables that the gentleman has mentioned as having come from Tennessee he overlooked three distinguished sons of Tennessee who are now in this House, Members from the State of Texas—namely, Hon. HATTON W. SUMNERS, Hon. SAM RAYBURN, and Hon. R. E. THOMASON. I think their names should be added to the list of notables.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to thank the gentleman for that contribution and make this observation—that these are great and distinguished colleagues.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Has the gentleman put in the name of Norman H. Davis?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BLANTON. The regular order is the speech of the gentleman from Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. For a brief question.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Tennessee ought to tell his colleagues that if they will visit McMinnville and go to Miss Sedbury's inn, they will get the finest meal they ever had in their lives, splendidly served by the most courteous Negro servants in the country. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the gentleman from Texas for making that observation.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. In just a moment. I want to make this further reference to the bluegrass fields of middle Tennessee. If any of you gentlemen have failed to journey down southward and see that magnificent environment, you have lived practically in vain. [Laughter and applause.]

You can take this same environment, composed of 18 counties in the Fourth District of middle Tennessee, and you can fence off the rest of the world, and we will never ask for any assistance from the outside. Cotton, corn, livestock, all the mineral resources that are known, and, above all, Tennesseeans continue to produce fathers and mothers to go west and help settle that country over there. [Applause.]

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Is this county that the gentleman desires to transfer from one district to another the county to which the gentleman referred in the last session of Congress where farmers were getting 5 cents a dozen for eggs?

Mr. MITCHELL. That is one of the counties.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. In view of the fact that the people of that county are only receiving 5 cents a dozen for eggs, it is reasonable to assume that they do not have the necessary money to go 60 miles to court; and I think this bill should be passed. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. MITCHELL. I appreciate the observation of my colleague. I only regret that I could not convert him at the time to the necessity of championing the measure in behalf of which I appeared before his committee.

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. For a brief question only.

Mr. PARSONS. The observation the gentleman has made with reference to this particular part of Tennessee shows that a great people must live there. I have driven through that part of his State. Will the gentleman inform the House if the people of this county he wants to transfer to another district are in favor of refunding the national debt at this time and reducing the interest rate on Government bonds?

Mr. MITCHELL. So far as my constituency goes, they are in favor of inflating the currency, cheapening the dollar, and increasing the income tax on the wealth of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall be delighted to yield to my friend the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GLOVER. I thought when the gentleman made his statement a while ago that he had the greatest State in the Union he was taking in a whole lot of territory, but since he has voiced the names of so many of these wild fellows from Texas who were born and reared in Tennessee, I am bound to concede his statement. I want, though, to inquire further with reference to the statement made by the gentleman from Illionis a moment ago about the distinguished service the gentleman who is now addressing the House had rendered to the agriculture of this country. He has served on the Committee of Agriculture, together with the gentleman from Illinois and others, and I know of his valuable service. I have seen him, day after day, sitting with Mr. Morgenthau, Dr. Meyer, and our great Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Wallace, and working over the various problems with which we have to deal in this Congress. While I know of his valuable service there, I want his people in Tennessee to know that he has made a record.

Not only that, but I should like to say that the gentleman who has yielded to me has been a leader of economy here in carrying out the President's program, saving not only 25 percent but even, in some instances, 50 percent, and even being willing to go to the extent of cutting his own salary. [Applause.]

I want his constituents and others to know also of his pleasing personality, something that has manifested itself to me ever since I have learned to know and love the gentleman. Over and above the most excellent record he has made in Congress I am told he has withstood the fiery darts of the opposite sex and is still an unmarried man. I want the world to know not only his great ability as a Congressman but his wonderful personality. I believe his condition of celibacy will soon be remedied.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague from Arkansas, and I trust he will broadcast to the fair ladies of the country the latter part of his complimentary reference. [Laughter.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall be delighted to yield to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. In view of the fact that so many distinguished Texans were sired in Tennessee I shall not vote against the gentleman's resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. I appreciate the observation of my colleague.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. FORD. Can the gentleman inform the House how many distinguished Tennesseeans have contributed to the wealth and greatness of the State of California?

Mr. MITCHELL. If I had the capacity of an adding machine, and knew all the statistics contained in Mulhall's Reports, I would be enabled to answer the inquiry of my colleague. Men like McAdoo and others came from Tennessee and went to California. [Applause.]

Tennessee is in the center of the world, my friends. She has contributed not only of material wealth but of that which is immensely more valuable—the service rendered by her patriotic sons on the battlefields and in the Halls of Congress throughout the years.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I wish to recall to the gentleman's attention the great service of that gallant Tennesseean, Andrew Jackson, who was able to collect a war debt from France—every dollar of it. A reading of his statesmanlike utterances on this matter, recorded in the Presidential papers, will teach us how to collect money from France today. France has the money with which to pay. She is spending over $500,000,000 a year on her army and her navy. If Andrew Jackson, that great Democrat, were here we would be able to collect this money.

I am glad the gentleman yields for a brief statement. One of America's greatest statesmen was Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee—a gallant, courageous, fighting American, a real American—a Washington, Hamilton, Jefferson American—who believed in America first.

I want to bring to the attention of every Member in this great House the state papers of the Jackson administrations concerning the French war debt. Yes, we had a war with France, although it was never declared.

During the Napoleonic wars, there were many engagements between French and American vessels upon the high seas, and if you will go down to Annapolis you will find captured battle flags taken off French ships which were defeated and destroyed in combat with American ships on the ocean during that period.

When the struggle was over and America had brought France to terms, that great nation—and we were then a small Nation compared to the French Empire—signed an agreement to pay America so many million dollars, a very large sum of money for those times, to pay for the damages done to American commerce and to pay for the violation of American rights as a neutral in that very great world war between Napoleon and the allies.

For 25 years the negotiations continued about the payment of this debt. For 25 years the French evaded and promised and evaded again. The Chamber of Deputies refused to appropriate the money and the French Cabinet refused to pay. The French Government would not pay, but finally, the American people elected a man to the White House by the name of Andrew Jackson from Tennessee, and I hope that every Member of Congress, House and Senate, will read the words of Americanism which flowed from the Jacksonian pen. He was still the same American who refused insult at the hands of the British officers when a boy. He had not changed since the day he rode so boldly before his armies at New Orleans and won the greatest battle of the second war with England. I say he was still the same red-blooded, fighting American, and he negotiated with the French Empire in a manner of which we can well be proud at this late day. Just about 100 years ago Andrew Jackson demanded the money which France withheld in order that she might arm herself for future wars and withheld in order that she herself might profit at American expense. Andrew Jackson exchanged state papers with France, called their attention to their solemn pledges and promises reduced to writing and signed; called their attention to the long friendship we had had with France prior to this clash and disagreement, and expressing desires for continued peace; nevertheless, he made it plain that America would enforce her rights under international law and that if France did not pay, he would, under international law, seize upon French property, private property, property belonging to the nationals, the property of the French Government, to satisfy that debt.

There was a great flurry in France. There was even talk of war and preparation for war, but, by standing like granite, by maintaining an American position, by refusing to yield in a weak, in a feeble manner, by maintaining American dignity and American rights, Andrew Jackson made France see that she was dealing with a man, with a soldier, and a statesman. When France recognized that here was a man unyielding, courageous, and able, France paid, paid every dollar due the American Nation, and wiped the slate clean, without any reductions, without any cuts in the debts, without any refunding arrangements, but paid in full satisfaction of the American demands; and I say to the gentlemen of this House today that if we had an Andrew Jackson in the White House today—and he was a great Democrat—there would be no refunding and cuts in the present French debts. France is today spending more than $500,000,000 per year in cash to maintain her army; France today has the greatest air fleet in the world for war; one of the greatest and most powerful navies in the world; France has the greatest and best-equipped standing army in the world; France has, in the language of her own financiers, practically no unemployment; the savings banks of France are filled with cash; France has the second largest gold reserve in the world, and the greatest in Europe.

We need another Andrew Jackson to lead us in this day and hour of trial. Why in today's papers I see that the British Premier urges a cut in the debts. The papers report that the United States group at the parley in London is handed a surprise. The Premier starts off the London confab by exploding a bomb of first import, and our delegates sit there at the feet of the British King and Emperor of India, ruling one fourth of the earth's surface, ruling the world's greatest empire, without protest, tamely and lamely failing to sustain an American-Jacksonian position.

Just as we expected, the papers record that Secretary of State Cordell Hull announced shortly before the opening of the conference at London that the United States would "keep faith" with any agreements entered into at the parley. America is supposed to enter into an agreement with the best part of a score of nations that owe us money, and these nations are supposed to lay down the law to our country, and we are supposed to "keep faith" with them. God save us from that type of Americanism lest our country be destroyed.

What sort of Americanism is that which fails to protect more than 13,000,000 Americans who wander over our land without employment? What kind of Americanism is that which permits our women and children to starve, and the American standard of living and wages to fall ever downward, while Europe, the kings and emperors of the ruling nations of Europe owe us billions upon billions of dollars, a debt which already has been cut in two during the negotiations of 1926, and now the British Premier demands that it be cut down full 90 percent, so that we are only to have 10 percent. And I say to the gentlemen of this House that if we permit that, I will not be surprised to see them demand that the 10 percent be eliminated and wiped off the international slate to the detriment of America.

Will Rogers once said, "America never lost a war and never won a conference."

I thank the gentleman for permitting the interruption. I wish to pay tribute to the great Jackson of Tennessee, a great American who knew how to defend American rights.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague for the observation.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. If the gentleman will permit, I should like to make a contribution to his list of notable Tennesseeans.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should be glad to have the gentleman's contribution.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I believe Martin W. Littleton, the great lawyer, who was formerly a Member of this House, either was born in Tennessee and migrated to Texas or was born in Texas and migrated to Tennessee. Will not the gentleman include his name in the roster of great Tennesseeans?

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleague for his eulogy of this former Member of the House and one of the Nation's great lawyers and a former Tennesseean, who was born in Roane County, Tenn.

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me to submit a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

KITS FOR CONSERVATION CORPS

Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the purchase of Army kits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Speaker, I feel called upon as a matter of simple justice to Colonel Howe, the secretary to the President, and other officials of the Government whose names have been linked in a critical way with the supply of toilet kits to the Civilian Conservation Corps, to express my firm conviction, after carefully perusing the testimony given before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs and conferences with various ones of those involved in the transaction, that the officials of the administration, directly or indirectly responsible for placing the order with BeVier & Co., Inc., deserve commendation and praise and not censure or criticism for the course which they took. Any fair-minded person could not entertain any other view in the light of all the facts.

For my part, however, I may say that the Senate's inquiry does not end the matter. When the estimates of appropriations for the Military Establishment are considered at the forthcoming regular session of Congress, in my capacity as a member of the Appropriations Committee I shall inquire very carefully into all phases of the Army's connection with emergency conservation work, particularly procurement transactions and material expenditures from Army stores and issues purchased out of emergency conservation work funds. I propose, then, to find out why the Army was so persistent in pursuing a course—contrary to the impression which has gained wide-spread credence—that actually would have cost the Government more to supply toilet kits than it will under the BeVier contract. If any criticism or censure is justified, I am inclined to feel that it should be directed against the War Deparament. I do not like the Department's conduct in the matter at all.

The public has been grossly misled in the matter. It has been led to believe that the Army could supply kits at a much lower cost to the Government and that some favored concern stepped in and was awarded a contract that would net a handsome profit.

What are the facts? Up until the very day this contract was let the Army was buying components of the kits from the very firm that received the kit contract, BeVier & Co., and from other concerns. As a matter of fact, the Army has been doing business with BeVier for something like 15 years. Now, please mark this: Taking the lowest prices the Army has been quoted or was paying prior to the execution of the BeVier contract for each of the several components of the kits, the total cost of a kit, exclusive of a sewing outfit and a container or kit box, was a fraction of 1 cent less than the contract price for a complete kit. The figure was $1.3912, and that included a 6-cent toothbrush and excluded a sewing kit, worth about 12 cents, and a container for all of the articles.

Think of a 6-cent toothbrush! The toothbrush supplied with the contract kit is a standard, durable brush, scientifically constructed, and of a make offered to the Government under formal proposal prior to the kit contract for 26 cents apiece in a $25,000 lot.

In the light of these facts, I submit there is absolutely no foundation for anyone to entertain any sort of doubt as to the reasonableness of the BeVier contract. It is so obviously to the advantage of the Government that it really seems foolish to dwell upon it. The record shows conclusively that it was costing more to supply the kits by purchasing the component articles separately than it will cost under the BeVier contract to supply complete kits with, in some instances, a better grade of article. This emphasizes the need of a change in Army procurement methods, which I have long condemned. There is a lack of procurement concentration. Every Tom, Dick, and Harry buys. The record shows that before the BeVier contract was made Army quartermasters all over the country were buying a quantity of this, that, or the other component of toilet kits. That was the course that actually was being pursued, instead of the Quartermaster General here at Washington determining the entire needs and making one procurement contract in an orderly way. For example, some purchasing officers were paying as high as 60 cents for a safety razor and five blades, while others were buying the same articles for 36.49 cents. The high-grade razor in this kit, plus five blades, was sold for 23 cents. Some purchasing officers were paying 12 cents for combs and others were buying the same articles for 5.4 cents each. This will illustrate the costly method of not concentrating purchases and demonstrates, with some purchasing officers paying top prices, why the kits, on the average, were costing more than under the BeVier contract, and I might remark that my information is that the Army continued to pursue this most ineffective and expensive course for as much as 15 days after the consummation of the BeVier contract. Think of it! Practice of that sort is responsible for the urge for a single Federal procurement agency, and I am truly glad to see that the President has proposed such an agency in his reorganization order just submitted.

It has been urged that the kits comprise more articles than those supplied enlisted men of the Regular Army upon first enlistment. This is not denied. The regular soldier gets a toothbrush, so-called, a shaving brush, a comb, and a safety razor and five blades. Whether or not a more complete outfit should be supplied is not the question here. In this connection, however, I might point out that the Army recruit upon first enlistment is given a $5 credit at the post exchange, which he might use to augment the toilet articles issued to him gratis. That $5 is as much as members of the Emergency Conservation Corps receive in the course of a month, all in excess of such sum being paid to their dependents.

I hold no brief for the Emergency Conservation Corps. I opposed it in the beginning; not because I was not in sympathy with providing for the needy but because I felt and still feel that greater good could be done by extending relief in the way of money through organized relief agencies throughout the country. We have adopted the most expensive way imaginable. I am perfectly confident that it will cost us not less than $5 per diem for each man enrolled in the camps. This is at the rate of $150 per month. This is five times as much as is paid to each man enrolled per month. Under a direct-relief plan five families could be cared for, with the male members remaining at home where they belong, at no greater cost than relief to one family is costing under the conservation program, and the one family is getting but $30 of the $150. However, having embarked upon the plan to provide relief through giving employment in conservation work, the Government is obliged to see that its charges are adequately housed, clothed, and fed, and are given medical attention. Their health depends upon personal cleanliness, and personal cleanliness makes it mandatory that each man have a supply of the articles contained in the much-advertised toilet kits. Neither in quantity, quality, nor price is there ground for any complaint. Sound common sense and business judgment are abundantly evident.

I do not contend that if the War Department in the beginning had executed a single procurement contract for the entire number of kits required a better price might not have been obtained. Instead, however, through piecemeal, scattered purchases up to the very time when large numbers of men were enrolling for the camps, an emergent demand arose that precluded ordinary procurement procedure. The remarkable thing is that a contract under such circumstances was obtainable so favorable in price and performance.

In conclusion I wish to quote the following proposition made to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs by Mr. BeVier at the outset of his testimony on June 7, 1933, viz:

Ever since this controversy has started the Quartermaster General's Department has claimed that they could purchase the same quality of nationally advertised brands of merchandise and other articles included in the kit at a price of 85 cents. We have claimed that the price of $1.40 as of May 15, 1933, was a fair and equitable price and could not have been duplicated by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army.

In fairness to us and the Government officials instrumental in the signing of this contract we respectfully ask that the Army be called upon to produce all orders for Civilian Conservation Corps toilet articles purchased on or prior to May 15, 1933, and that these orders be tabulated so as to show the exact unit price paid by the Quartermaster Corps for similar articles of similar quality as contained in the kit. When the exact unit price has been obtained and the price for the articles in the kit added, it will show the exact figure which the Quartermaster Corps is entitled to claim as a cost of a kit in comparison to the $1.40 contract price.

In view of the contention of the Quartermaster Corps, we make this offer to the Federal Government, namely: We will sell to the Government the kits in question at a price which will be 10 percent lower than the price at which the same quality of nationally advertised branded merchandise has been purchased by the Quartermaster Corps of the United States Army for Civilian Conservation Corps recruits at or prior to May 15, 1933, the date on which this contract was signed.

It is respectfully asked that a committee of three be appointed whose duty it shall be to recap the figures presented by the Quartermaster Corps of the Army. These three members shall be R. B. BeVier, president of BeVier & Co., Inc., any member of the Quartermaster Corps chosen by the Quartermaster General, and any member of this committee or appointee of this committee.

As there are certain items in the kit which are not purchased by the Quartermaster Corps, the committee shall obtain affidavits from the manufacturers as to the lowest manufacturers' wholesale prices up to and including the 15th day of May 1933 for such items.

The committee shall compile the figures showing the exact cost prior to May 15, 1933, of similar items to those in the BeVier kit, and which have been purchased by the Quartermaster Corps, which data shall be submitted to the Chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the Senate.

In this respect BeVier & Co., Inc., will be pleased to pay all reasonable expenses incurred by the committee in recapping the figures presented by the Quartermaster Corps.

Could anything be fairer?

BEDFORD COUNTY, TENN.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Will not the gentleman tell us the true story of Davy Crockett?

NATIONAL BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have until midnight to file a conference report on the bank reform bill [applause] and to dispense with the filing of a statement.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the majority leader would tell us what the program is, and then we can tell better what we want to do.

Mr. BYRNS. If this permission is granted, we should like to take this bill up the first thing tomorrow.

Mr. SNELL. What is the further program, provided we do not adjourn for the next 2 or 3 days?

Mr. BYRNS. We have nothing else in view. As the gentleman knows, the Senate is now considering the independent offices appropriation bill, and I hope they will be able to conclude its consideration in a few minutes and either vote the motion that has been made over there up or down. If they vote it down, the bill will go to conference, and I hope by tomorrow we may have a conference report upon that bill. There is nothing else, so far as I know, outside of these two matters, except the passage of the deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. SNELL. Then does the gentleman intend to at least use his efforts to adjourn?

Mr. BYRNS. I have been doing that since Saturday and I am sure we all have, and I am hopeful we will be able to get away from here very soon. This is one reason I was anxious to see the rule adopted awhile ago. I did not want to bring in any controversial matters that might delay adjournment.

Mr. SNELL. I have been trying to keep out controversial matters for several days myself, but have not been very successful.

Mr. BYRNS. Unfortunately, the gentlemen on the other side did not join with us in voting for the resolution.

Mr. SNELL. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BYRNS. Then, I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. CONNERY. If the gentleman will yield, practically every Republican voted against the adoption of the rule.

Mr. SNELL. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Except the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] I know of no other.

Mr. CONNERY. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I dislike to object to my friend's request, but I think today I am fighting a battle for labor, and I am going to object.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CONNERY. I hope that motion will be voted down.

Mr. BROWNING. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. BYRNS. I withhold it.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the passage of the bill now before the House.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to that bill.

Mr. BROWNING. The gentleman cannot do that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BROWNING, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I know there is another and the usual way of accomplishing the result, but I desire to make this statement with reference to the able and distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CROSSER]. He has been in bad health, as we all know, for quite a while, and within the last few days there fell upon Mr. CROSSER's shoulders, as chairman of the steering committee of the Democratic Party, the arduous and responsible duties of undertaking to work out with the Chief Executive some compromise on the veterans' compensation proposition. These labors which he has performed with such fidelity and such zeal have resulted in a further impairment of his health, and upon the advice of his physician he has gone to his home in Ohio to recuperate. I think it due him that we should pay this tribute to his fine service, and I ask that the gentleman may have an indefinite leave of absence on account of illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. LUCE. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. BYRNS. I withhold it.

Mr. LUCE. In order that I may appeal to my friend and associate. The conferees on the banking bill have been working many hours under the difficult circumstances of the weather and have at last, I think to the gratification of both branches of Congress, reached an agreement. [Applause.] It will take but an instant to allow this report to be filed tonight so that it may be considered tomorrow. I beg of the gentleman to permit this to be done. [Applause.]

Mr. CONNERY. I should like to say to my distinguished colleague from Massachusetts that no one realizes any more than I do the position I am in, but I am fighting a battle for little, hungry kids, and I am not going to yield.

Mr. BLANTON. The bank bill affects every laboring man in the United States.

Mr. CONNERY. We can pass it within the next 2 or 3 days.

HOW TO SAVE FEDERAL-AID PROJECTS

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. COCHRAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, recently I placed in the RECORD a statement concerning Federal-aid appropriations including a table received from the Secretary of the Treasury showing the Federal aid granted each State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1932. I have received a letter from Dean F. B. Mumford, of the College of Agriculture of the University of Missouri, relative to my remarks, and I feel that it is of sufficient importance to print in the RECORD. The letter follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MISSOURI,
Columbia, June 8, 1933.

Hon. JOHN J. COCHRAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. COCHRAN: My attention has been called to certain remarks made by you reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 29, 1933, relating to Federal appropriations for agricultural education and agricultural research.

I know and appreciate your sincere attitude and desire for basing any important action on the facts. I feel certain that you would not willingly and knowingly be a party to any movement in the Federal Government that would be a distinct and permanent injury to farmers and the agricultural industry of Missouri.

As Congressman representing the great city of St. Louis, which is very dependent upon the development of a very large agricultural territory, I am sure that any enterprise looking toward the permanent development of the agricultural industry is a matter of very great importance to the city of St. Louis.

As one who has been connected with the College of Agriculture of the University of Missouri for nearly 38 years, and with another college of agriculture for 4 years, and as a citizen of Missouri interested in its progress and development, I am taking the liberty of commenting on your remarks with a view to establishing the facts and if possible convincing you that some of your remarks might be interpreted as a direct and intentional blow to the agricultural industry of Missouri. I am sure you do not so intend.

1. It is my understanding that the Federal appropriations to agricultural experiment stations are not in the list of permanent appropriations and are not required to be matched by State appropriations. It is significant, however, that the comparatively small Federal appropriations made to agricultural experiment stations have proved of such exceptional advantage to farmers in the several States that the legislatures have, without any Federal requirement for matching, expended about $3 of State money for $1 of Federal money. Surely, if these Federal appropriations for agricultural research were harmful to farmers and to the agricultural industry, the great agricultural States of the Middle West would not now be expending three times as much for agricultural research as is expended by the Federal Government.

2. There is little evidence upon which to base a general statement that "there is an immense duplication of work." The very great differences in climate, soil, topography, and cropping systems of the United States require researches adapted to these varying conditions. Plant varieties adapted to Missouri conditions have no value in Arizona or Louisiana or perhaps Minnesota and northern Michigan. An examination of the list of projects now active in the State experiment stations, which is available, would seem to an impartial observer to have avoided, in the main, harmful or wasteful duplication. It is undoubtedly true that there may be some duplication which could be avoided, but this is small in amount and of comparative unimportance. In this matter the stations have been influenced by the constant pressure of farmers demanding that certain investigations be made in the particular States for the reason that they insist upon the importance of varying State conditions.

3. The inference in your remarks seems to be that the chief purpose of the agricultural experiment stations is to stimulate production, that the surpluses now existing in staple crops are due to the stimulation and that because of the surplus the prices of farm commodities have collapsed. Each of these assumptions is wrong. It is not true that the agricultural experiment stations have stimulated production or encouraged farmers to produce more than the market demand. They have made the farmer more efficient, and if the farmers had not increased in efficiency they would all have been destroyed in the recent economic depression.

The experiment stations have repeatedly and earnestly advised farmers to sell 25 or 30 percent of the cows now being milked because the poorer 25 percent of cows now being milked return no profit and do add to surplus. They have repeatedly and constantly urged the culling of poultry flocks, selling 20 to 25 percent of the poorer producers, which again is a direct effort to prevent overproduction.

If there is one principle or policy advocated more often than another by the experiment stations since their beginning, it is that the farmers cultivate fewer acres and employ better methods on the reduced area.

4. It is an error to hold the experiment stations responsible for present low prices of farm commodities or the surplus. The apparent surplus in recent years is due to the reduction in exports to foreign countries. The reduction in exports to foreign countries is due to the increasingly high tariffs in foreign countries against American agricultural products, in part due to retaliation for the high tariffs on manufactured goods in the United States.

There are, of course, other causes; but I cannot go fully into this matter in a letter. I am, however, taking the liberty of sending to you an article prepared by me for the annual meeting of the American Association of Land Grant Colleges and Universities, which discusses the responsibility of the agricultural experiment station for the present agricultural situation.

I am sincerely convinced that if the Federal appropriations for agricultural experiment stations and for extension should be withdrawn it would be the greatest injury to agriculture that could possibly be made at the present time. This is not alone the opinion of one who has been associated with these enterprises for 42 years but it is the collective opinion of the farmers and farm organizations of the whole United States. You may disregard the opinions of men like myself holding official positions in these institutions, but surely you cannot safely disregard the opinions of farmers and farm organizations throughout the whole United States.

I hope sincerely that you will not only not oppose these appropriations, which mean so much to the State of Missouri, but that you will give them your friendly support in the interests of the permanent prosperity of Missouri agriculture and the effort being made to develop in this State a contented and efficient rural civilization.

Very truly yours,

F. B. MUMFORD, Dean and Director.

I am not in disagreement with Dean Mumford of our State university on the value of this service. It is clearly evident that Dean Mumford did not grasp the intention I sought to convey. It seems to me that the above letter justifies the warning I sought to send to those interested in the experiment stations, the extension service, and the State agriculture and land grant colleges that receive aid from the Government.

While my language might have been misconstrued or not properly understood, I will say now that what I intended to emphasize was that unless the Government found a way to collect money so that the Budget could be balanced all appropriations would suffer, Federal aid included, because there was a feeling that in future years we are going to stay within the revenue collected to run the Government.

It was my purpose to impress upon the friends of the various services mentioned that one way we could get money would be by making it legal through the repeal of the eighteenth amendment to collect $500,000 or more annually through the taxing of distilled spirits, and if the dry States, many of them now drawing from the Federal Treasury more money in the form of Federal aid than they actually pay into the Treasury, did not assist us in repealing the eighteenth amendment so that revenue could be collected, there was danger that the Federal aid would be discontinued.

What has happened since my remarks appeared in the RECORD? The President has sent to the Congress a message in which he embodies a reorganization program and he provided in that program a reduction of 25 percent in the appropriations for the experiment stations, the extension service, vocational education, and aid to agricultural colleges. This will be objected to, but when every other branch of the Government is suffering reductions is it not reasonable to assume that the Federal-aid appropriations will likewise suffer?

I repeat I am not in disagreement with Dr. Mumford as to the value of the service. It seems to me that the warning I have uttered should be heeded and that steps should be taken by those interested to use their influence with the officials in the dry States to secure assistance that will result in the repeal of the eighteenth amendment so that the Government can collect a half billion dollars and continue meritorious Federal-aid projects.

FEDERAL GUARANTY OF BANK DEPOSITS

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the guaranty of bank deposits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McLEOD. Mr. Speaker, millions of depositors, small as well as large, have seen their life savings melt away in the terrible banking cataclysm that culminated in the suspension of all banking activities throughout the Nation by Presidential proclamation on March 6, 1933. Inevitably and naturally, the collapse of the Nation's banking structure has resulted in an insistent demand by the people for stability of the country's banking system and absolute safety for depositors.

We have reached that stage of affairs where temporizing and ineffectual compromise can no longer be considered or tolerated. Every possible measure must be taken to minimize the losses to depositors in banks that failed to reopen upon termination of the national banking holiday. In addition, depositors must receive assurance that when they place their funds in a bank they can withdraw them whenever they please, regardless of what happens to the bank. Furthermore, unification of our banking system, under strict supervision and control of the Federal Government, must be attained if we are to rebuild on a firm and unassailable basis.

To eliminate the lengthy and burdensome delays that go hand in hand with liquidation of insolvent banks, to prevent additional losses and hardships entailed by forced liquidation, and for the purpose of releasing the tied-up funds in closed banks that are paralyzing the purchasing power of millions and further decelerating the slowly turning wheels of industry, I have introduced a bill, H.R. 4974, directing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to acquire the sound frozen assets of closed banks and liquidate them only when such action will be to the best interests of the depositors and debtors alike.

In addition to providing, through reduction of interest rate to 4 percent, a powerful incentive to debtors to meet their obligations to banks in preference to letting them go by default, the liquidation of such assets over a period of years will prevent further ruinous deflation and depression of the real-estate and securities markets. In this way it may be possible for depositors in closed banks to realize most, if not all of their funds. This aid I am proposing to extend in my bill would be a fully secured loan and not a gift or grant in any sense or meaning of the word.

Adequate provisions must be taken by the Federal Government to guard against a costly and dangerous repetition of our recent banking collapse, the fourth in our country's history. In the year 1819 practically all of the banks in the United States suspended operations. The country witnessed another distressing period of almost universal bank suspension in 1837. Twenty years later, in 1857, another similar catastrophe befell our country. The complete collapse of our national banking structure last March was the first serious curtailment of banking activities since 1857, although in 1873 our country experienced wide-spread banking difficulties for a time.

We must not only restore confidence in our banking system but must justify that confidence in every way. Unification of our banking system, with absolute regard for intrinsic soundness as a primary requisite for entrance of all banks into such a system, is a national necessity of the most urgent and extreme importance. Legislation to accomplish this end must be drawn in the interests of the millions of depositors and not considered primarily as legislation for banks.

To prevent the future loss of a single cent to any depositor and to provide for maximum stability and safety of the Nation's banking system by unification of all banks in one system under rigid Federal supervision and control, on May 9 I introduced a bill, H.R. 5571, to provide a Federal guaranty fund under control of the Federal Reserve Board, to be made up of assessments of all banks in proportion to their deposits and guaranteed by the Treasury of the United States, at the same time making it mandatory for all banks within the United States to enter the Federal Reserve System, subject to control and supervision of the Federal Reserve Board.

Bank failures are brought about in part by depressions, but they also deepen and prolong depressions. Canada and Great Britain have suffered from the present depression, yet neither country, with its rigid supervision and control of its unified banking system, has had a single bank failure. On June 30, 1921, there were 30,821 banks in the United States, while today there are only approximately 14,000 banking institutions operating unrestrictively and under license of the Federal and State authorities. Fully 80 percent of these bank failures were in institutions capitalized at less than $25,000. One of the principal flaws in our banking system was the large number of banks, with the unwarranted competition resulting therefrom. Branch banking, certainly when confined to proper regional districts, based entirely and wholly upon the needs of the locality, offers more hope as a constructive and sound step in safer banking than any other single measure.

By proper supervision branch banks can be made safer than a large number of individual banking institutions, entirely dependent upon their own resources and upon the prosperity of their particular local industries and communities. To illustrate the true importance of this point we may take the experience of two States in this country—North Dakota and New York—before the crash in 1929.

In 1920 North Dakota had 898 banks, or 1 bank for every 725 inhabitants. New York had 1,057 banks, or 1 for every 10,400 of her citizens. The human base which supported 1 bank in New York had to support 14 banks in North Dakota. It is significant to note that during the period 1920–1929, 444 banks failed in North Dakota and 12 in New York.

In Canada no bank can start in business unless it has a paid-in capital of half a million dollars. This is extremely important since the capital of the bank is the hostage which the stockholders offer the depositors to insure the prudent management of the institution. If the bank makes mistakes which result in losses, they are chargeable first to the profits of the bank, next to its capital, and finally to the depositors. Thus the greater the capital fund, the safer the bank, other things being equal. Many of our States have no minimum capital requirements for banks, with the result that banks can be operated on risky and unsafe margins of capital.

As a stabilizing provision of extreme importance, my bill provides that no bank shall be permitted to operate whose capital, surplus, and undivided profits are less than $50,000 and directs the Federal Reserve Board to order and arrange for the merging of all such small banks, so that by combining the resources of several such institutions, a sufficient degree of strength and stability will be attained to warrant their admission to the Federal Reserve System and guaranty of their deposits.

The guaranty fund provided in my bill would consist of assessments levied on all banks, in proportion to their deposits, payable in such installments as the Federal Reserve Board shall decide, and thereafter whenever necessary to replenish the fund so as to keep it equal at all times to an amount not less than 1 percent of the deposits of all banks within the United States.

Had the guaranty of deposits in all national banks alone, been in effect for the past 18 years, the cost would have amounted to approximately one fifth of 1 percent of the yearly average of total deposits. In reality, it is extremely doubtful if the cost would actually have been this high. The confidence which a guaranty fund, and Government control, in itself would inspire, as proposed in my bill, would be a tremendous factor tending to reduce the number of suspensions and the total expense of the fund. Psychological factors, under such indemnity provisions, would cease to play havoc with banks and the banking system. No bank could again fail because of fear. The cost of guaranteeing deposits would indeed be insignificant compared with the great expense of periodically trying to liquidate the entire banking structure of the country.

If we had had Federal guaranty of deposits during the more than 3 years of depression, there would not have been as many bank failures or as great a loss of deposits. But if bank failures had been just as numerous and the assets of the failed banks no greater in proportion to the deposits, the entire amount of the loss during the 3-year period would have been about $500,000,000, or $167,000,000 a year. The cost of guaranteeing deposits would be slight indeed when compared with an annual loss in wealth production, because of present conditions, of not less than $30,000,000,000. We did not hesitate to spend $28,000,000,000 and sacrifice thousands of lives to protect our country in the World War. Our country is threatened now with a very much graver danger, and I deem it my duty to press for enactment of legislation to make banking absolutely safe for depositors.

According to the Annual Report of the Comptroller of the Currency, the demand and time and savings deposits in all reporting banks in the United States and Territories on June 30, 1932, amounted to $63,863,456,000. One percent of this figure would amount to $638,634,560, leaving more than a sufficient margin to take care of the most serious situation that could reasonably be anticipated. However, if in the event that this sum should by any chance prove insufficient, my bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to advance money out of the general fund of the United States Treasury as a loan to make up the difference.

For purposes of safety and unification of control, my bill carries provisions that the Federal Reserve Board, in controlling the guaranty fund, shall only invest the fund in securities issued or guaranteed by the United States and shall have such full power to inspect and examine all banks as is now possessed by United States bank examiners under existing law. Furthermore, as a safeguard against abuses by banks of their position as custodians of indemnified deposits, the Federal Reserve Board is authorized by provisions of my bill to, in its discretion and after a hearing, remove officers and directors of such banks as in its judgment engage in unsound practices. The removed officers and directors would be replaced by others to be selected by the stockholders of such banks, by and with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

Any bank official or employee who falsifies any record or who knowingly makes any false statement or willfully overvalues any security for the purpose of influencing the Federal Reserve Board in exercising its control and supervision of banks shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 10 years, or both.

The surplus fund of a bank exists as an additional safeguard to its safety and stability. As a stabilizing measure of utmost importance, I have incorporated a provision in my bill to prohibit dividend payments by any bank to stockholders until its surplus equals one fourth of its capital. When surplus equals one fourth and less than one half of capital the maximum dividend paid shall be 6 percent. When the surplus equals one half of capital, the maximum dividend shall be 8 percent, but the dividends shall be discretionary after surplus equals capital; provided, however, that no yearly dividends shall be paid in excess of 25 percent.

The idea of Federal guaranty of bank deposits is not essentially new. The idea of some form of deposit guaranty was a part of the original intent and meaning of the Federal Reserve Act. In 1913 a provision for the indemnity of depositors was eliminated in the conference on the bill between the two Houses of Congress. The objection at that time was one of technicality, and the understanding was that the provision would be redrawn and enacted at the 1914 session of Congress. The outbreak of the World War was the cause for this undertaking not being carried out.

The Federal Government already guarantees payment of deposits made with the Postal Savings System. The increase in deposits of the System during the last 2 years, notwithstanding the fact that only 7,500 of the 48,000 post offices are depositories and that deposits are limited to a maximum of $2,500 to each depositor, is striking evidence of what might happen if the deposits of all banks were placed under Government supervision and fully guaranteed.

During the fiscal year 1931, ended June 30 last, deposits of the Postal Savings System about doubled, and they again about doubled during the ensuing 8 months. For the fiscal year 1928 Postal Savings deposits totaled $152,143,349. Last March 31 the estimated deposits—audited figures are not yet available—were more than $1,111,000,000.

About 80 percent of the Postal Savings deposits are redeposited with banks in the localities from which the deposits have come. As security for these deposits, the Government requires the deposit by the banks of approved bonds supported by the taxing power—that is, Federal, Federal Land, State, or municipal bonds. Similar requirements apply to other Federal deposits in banks, and likewise to deposits of State, county, and municipal authorities. Thus protection is afforded to public deposits, but no similar protection is now afforded to private deposits in any State. This is significant of the terrible weakness of our national banking system. There is absolutely no guarantee of any sort for private deposits, despite an impression that has been widely prevalent among many depositors to the effect that funds placed in national banks were more or less safeguarded by the United States.

Not only must the justifiably shattered confidence of the people in our banking system be restored by removing all risks from placing money in banks for safekeeping but we must coordinate such action with adequate relief for the cities of the country who, through bank failures and other disasters accompanying the depression, have been brought to a most grave and serious condition of tax delinquency. Although my bill, H.R. 4311, to provide for a moratorium on the bonded indebtedness of insolvent municipalities, has been tabled for the time being by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, such relief is imperative and cannot long be delayed. In my own city of Detroit operating expenses have been reduced to a minimum and taxes have been increased to a point beyond endurance. This essential relief must be granted not only to help the cities but as a protection to the holders of municipal bonds themselves. It is most conservatively estimated that over 90 principal American cities are on the verge of financial collapse, with 6 having already repudiated bond obligations through sheer inability to pay.

In summarizing the advantages to be gained by the banking legislation I am sponsoring we find that complete confidence would be restored and people would be given renewed faith in the soundness and integrity of the banking system as no other action would give. An absolute guaranty by the Government would bring from hiding many millions of dollars hoarded in all parts of the country. Passage of my bill would prevent runs on banks through fear and other psychological factors. Such action would give peace of mind, comfort, and confidence to the poor man who may have accumulated savings for a lifetime. The guaranty of deposits and unification of our banking system under Federal control would contribute to an inestimable degree in keeping the industrial energies of America uniformly employed at maximum efficiency, thereby acting as a most powerful factor in combating unemployment. With unified control and stricter supervision, with the penalties contained in my measure, would come safer and saner banking, based on the principles of service and safety to depositors rather than private profit to stockholders.

Our archaic system of banking has long outlived its usefulness and must be reorganized along the lines I am proposing in order to meet the greater demands made by the more complex and modern civilization of today. Eventually, this vital reform, touching as it does the very foundations of our economic system, must come about. The crucial moment has arrived, and it is up to us to insist upon immediate action. Unless confidence in the structure of our banking system is restored, I can see no hope for the early return to normalcy we have every right to demand and expect as citizens of the greatest and most productive nation in the world.

I have signed the petition now on the floor of the House, demanding the deferment of adjournment of this special session of Congress until a Federal guaranty of deposits bill is enacted into law, and I urge all of my colleagues on our side of the aisle to do likewise. To me there is no legislation proposed, sponsored, or enacted that transcends this in importance.

H.J.RES. 202

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include House Joint Resolution 202, introduced by Mr. IGLESIAS, providing for extension of the cooperative work of the Geological Survey to Puerto Rico, together with the committee's report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANZETTA. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following joint resolution (H.J.Res. 202), introduced by Mr. IGLESIAS, providing for extension of the cooperative work of the Geological Survey to Puerto Rico, together with the committee report.

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of law authorizing the making of topographic and geological surveys and conducting investigations relating to mineral and water resources by the United States Geological Survey in various portions of the United States be, and the same are hereby, extended to authorize such surveys and investigations in Puerto Rico.

[Report No. 236, 73d Congress, first session]

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY IN PUERTO RICO

Mr. MCDUFFIE, from the Committee on Insular Affairs, submitted the following report to accompany H.J.Res. 202:

The Committee on Insular Affairs have had under consideration H.J.Res. 202, and respectfully submits the following report in explanation of said resolution authorizing the Department of the Interior to extend the work of the United States Geological Survey to the island of Puerto Rico, the cost of said work to be borne one half by Puerto Rico and one half by the United States Government.

During the last year the value of the commerce between the United States and the island of Puerto Rico exceeded $160,000,000. The island ranks sixth as a customer of the United States. Puerto Rico has an area of approximately 3,500 square miles. No survey of this island has ever been made, either by the island authorities or the United States Government.

The committee feels that it is not only feasible but advantageous both to the United States and the island to have topographic maps made, and likewise a study of all the natural resources of the island. The committee believes that its surface and underground water resources, as well as its mineral resources, should be surveyed. Because of the stricken condition of the island due to hurricanes in 1928 and 1932 its people are financially unable to carry on this work without assistance. The Legislature of Puerto Rico in 1925 set aside the sum of $100,000, which is now in its treasury, being appropriated for this purpose, and to be devoted exclusively to a survey by the Department of the Interior of the United States Government.

The survey is estimated to cost approximately $250,000, and should be completed in 3 or 4 years.

The committee herewith submits a letter from the President of the United States enclosing a letter from the Secretary of War expressing their respective opinions of the proposed legislation. The committee is unanimous in its approval of the joint resolution.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 3, 1933.

Hon. JOHN MCDUFFIE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. MCDUFFIE: I inclose a letter from the Secretary of War in regard to a bill introduced by the Delegate from Puerto Rico. I see no objection to the passage of this bill. It merely authorizes the Geological Survey to extend its work to Puerto Rico, the cost of such work being shared on a 50–50 basis.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, May 31, 1933.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: This is the bill which will authorize the United States Geological Survey to make a survey of the mineral and water-power resources of Puerto Rico.

I think it desirable that you request its passage.

However, it involves the general policy of Federal relief to Puerto Rico, which, by law, is exempted from contributions to the Treasury, thus extending greater benefits to Puerto Rico than are extended to the States, which pay Federal Taxes.

Very respectfully,

GEO. H. DERN.

NATIONAL BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I realize the situation of the House that the banking bill is about as important to the poor people as my bill, and I am going to continue the fight. I will withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

(For conference report see Senate proceedings.)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and condense my remarks. [Laughter.]

There was no objection.

BANK GUARANTY DEPOSIT BILL

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, more than 100 Members of the House have signed an agreement to oppose any adjournment of Congress until the bank guaranty deposit bill shall be brought before the House and disposed of. I ask unanimous consent to insert that agreement with the names in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The agreement is as follows:

JUNE 10, 1933.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C.:

We, the undersigned Members of Congress, hereby pledge and obligate ourselves to vote against any motion to adjourn this special session of the Seventy-third Congress until the bank-guarantee deposits bill is brought out from conference and placed upon its passage by the Congress, or until we have bank-guarantee legislation.

EUROPE AND THE GOLD STANDARD

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement by Max Schofield on adjustment compensation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article by Max Scoffield, relative to Europe and the gold standard:

[From the Winchester (Idaho) Reporter of Oct. 10, 1931]

France controls the gold stock of Europe. As long as the gold standard exists France can rule Europe, holding other nations in economic subjection. But the gold standard cannot be maintained unless continued in America.

The gold standard operates the same among individuals as among nations. Those who have the gold can hold others in economic servitude, drive down prices by hoarding gold, exact high interest rates, bring on depressions and panics and bankrupt the masses.

France offers a fine demonstration of the gold standard. Its quick recovery of gold reserves after the World War, the ease with which it paid the gold indemnity after the Franco-Prussian War, witness the operation of the gold standard in France. These gold stocks were accumulated by the nation producing more than it consumed. To provide the surplus wealth which the financiers of France piled up in gold someone in France must consume much less than they produce, and that someone is the peasant class.

We read about gay Paris with its boulevards, its wealth, and fashions; but ask the doughboys who visited France how the peasants live. They tell that families lived in the same house with their cow; that the women toiled in the fields, becoming old and haggard at the age of 40; that the children had neither shoes nor stockings, but wrapped their feet in rags in wintertime; that adults wore wooden shoes—one pair of which would last a lifetime. They'll tell you of the third-class accommodations provided by the railroads, quarters little better than America provides in shipping livestock, but beyond the means of the peasant class. They tell of the old stone houses that have stood for a hundred years with no improvements in that time—no lights, no plumbing, rough floors, and practically no furniture. That is the condition under the gold standard in France.

In America it has produced 7,000,000 unemployed, which with their dependents easily total 20,000,000. If these 20,000,000 had been content to live as do the French peasants, America would not feel the depression as it does. If the 20,000,000 had not bought homes, cars, radios, washing machines, etc., for which they now cannot pay, the credit of the Nation would not be frozen with repossessed property and merchandise.

Although many leaders in Congress are advocating changes in the money system, the President agrees with Premier Laval that the gold standard should be maintained. The French Premier can speak with authority, because the French peasants are content to live in such conditions. But Americans are not satisfied with such a life. They wish some of the joy and comfort of living. Under the gold standard they cannot share in the accumulating wealth of the few who control the Nation's gold. The 20,000,000 can only share in what is left for the masses, increasing the number who are in want. Twenty million people cannot rule the Nation, but when fifty, sixty, or seventy million people feel the depression they may vote to overthrow the gold standard.

CLEAN UP THE BANKRUPTCY ACT

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, in 1898 the Congress enacted a bankruptcy act which is in force today. This act of Congress had a twofold purpose of relieving a debtor who was unable to meet his obligations from lifelong harassment, and the purpose of applying the efficiency of the debtor's estate to the payment of the claims of his creditors. I regret to say that the original purposes of the Bankruptcy Act have become almost entirely lost under the practices of many of our courts. This act of Congress, adopted to fill a place of great need for the relief of both debtors and creditors, has become the principal instrument and means of operation of a distinct group of racketeers.

The bankruptcy racketeers are classed all the way from the appraisers, adjusters, up through the receivers, trustees, attorneys, and referees, and some judges who appoint them. Why is it that a reputable attorney, representing large interests of creditors, is unable to suggest the name of an efficient, capable man for the position of receiver for the bankruptcy estate? Why is it the judges will neither listen to nor give heed to the advice of creditors vitally interested or their attorney in whom they have placed their confidence? Why is it that these same judges regard the appointment of receivers, and attorneys for receivers and trustees, as perquisites of their judicial office? These things are so. The very robes of justice are used to cover the practices of racketeer cliques in many parts of the country.

The judge appoints his own receiver. The receiver in some cases is in the same office with the attorney appointed by the judge, and the referee must pass upon the acts of that receiver. The receiver or the trustee, together with the referee, then appoints attorneys to represent the interests of the estate. These attorneys quite often have no interest in the case whatsoever; that is to say, they do not represent the interests of any creditors but merely the theoretical interests of the estate. The referee appointed by the judges appoints appraisers who appraise the property of the estate in bankruptcy. These appraisers have to do with the sale of the property conducted by the receiver or the trustee. All these officials in a particular jurisdiction quite often form a clique, passing things back and forth from one to the other. When all the fees, allowances, expenses, and so forth, are first deducted from the liquidated assets of the estate, creditors quite often wake up with a headache and infinitesimal check representing what should have been a substantial dividend from the liquidation of substantial assets.

Expenses are padded by these receivers and trustees like nowhere else. Many professional receivers or trustees conduct their office on a supposed time prorate basis, charging employees' time on various estates. Telephone, postage, stationery, and overhead expenses are also divided among their estates in receivership and bankruptcy. I can assure you that if the books of some of these receivers and trustees were ever really audited they would show rent received from estate accounts many times the amount actually paid the office building. Stenographers, bookkeepers, and other office employees' time charged against various estates added up would equal many times the actual salary of the employee. I am sure that a rigid investigation would show in many cases kick-backs where the estate checks are drawn payable to the employee. These things happen quite often in the offices of the receivers and trustees, and these same receivers and trustees are the favored darlings of the same referees and judges who arbitrarily refuse to hear any interested parties on the matter of appointment of receivers.

The actual practice of the Bankruptcy Act has so far departed in many instances from its original purpose that this House should be advised through the results of a thorough investigation on the necessary measures to correct the wide-spread evil which exists in the application of the Bankruptcy Act of 1898.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, on the next call of committees, if it is not Calendar Wednesday, does it go to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. Under the rule each committee has 2 days.

Mr. GOSS. So the next day would be taken by the Judiciary Committee?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

PASS THE CREDIT ON TO THE PEOPLE

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the banking situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, this Congress has made a record in putting through a great reconstructive program to bring about national recovery. War against depression has been made on all fronts. But as yet no relief has been offered the thousands of men and women in this country who borrowed money from banks on real-estate security and are unable to get their mortgages renewed. If renewal is considered at all, the banks are demanding an initial cash payment on the mortgage or they are insisting upon having the mortgage amortized by means of monthly payments. This works a hardship on those able to make the payments; and it brings ruin to those unable to pay, because of lack of income.

It seems that the banks have adopted the theory that the only sound asset is money. Real-estate mortgages are looked upon with disfavor and suspicion, although these mortgages may be in every way sound. This deflationary policy is undermining all values; and it is destroying honest property owners who by rigid economy and actual sacrifices are paying their taxes and interest and upkeep on improved property but are unable to make payments on the principal. This applies especially to home owners and to owners of small-income properties, who do not come under the provisions of the home-loan legislation already passed.

This Congress has given aid to the home owner who is unable to pay his interest and taxes and who faces foreclosure. But as yet we have done nothing for the very large class of property owners who are every day faced with new and difficult demands from banks and who have resources that are being sapped by the banks.

I ask you if there is any reason in the world why solvent property owners who are paying all carrying charges on mortgages should be thrown into bankruptcy or forced to ask aid of the Government? And I ask you how much longer the Government is going to continue to permit the banks to follow the deflationary and ruinous policy I have mentioned?

It is my reasoned opinion that the Congress should take some step to force the banks that have received loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to adopt a new and constructive policy in regard to self-sustaining real-estate loans. No longer should they insist that such loans be reduced and amortized.

This "reduce and amortize" policy of the banks is not only working hardship and worse on many thousands of our people but it is also against the public interest because it is entirely destructive and deflationary. This policy is no small factor in deflation. I do not need to tell you that it is deflationary, because it diverts income to the banks that should be used in general spending. Thus purchasing power is lost while balances in banks mount to no good purpose. In my own district, normally a rich and prosperous one, I personally know of scores of cases where people are stripped of every dollar they can raise by forced amortization of bank loans amply secured by good real estate.

If the loans made through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to banks are not to be reflected in benefits to the depositors of those banks in the way of more liberal credit and more liberal refinancing policy, why make them? It is time that the people got the direct benefits of all this credit extension, and it is time we men and women representing the people take action to assure such benefits being passed on from the banks to our constituents.

One of the measures, popularly known as the "Steagall bill", passed by this House and now in conference, with a bank-deposit-insurance plan as one of its features, will, I believe, go a long way toward allaying the fears of the banks, which is one reason for their persisting in the present ruinous deflationary policy. That bill ought to be promptly enacted into law.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TRUAX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein two letters from constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOBBINS. I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 5495. An act to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Great Lakes Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.", approved June 25, 1930, and to extend the times for commencing and completing construction of said bridge; and

H.R. 5645. An act to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 1634. An act to provide for the redemption of national-bank notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and Federal Reserve notes which cannot be identified as to the bank of issue.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on the following dates present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

On June 10, 1933:

H.R. 3511. An act to authorize the creation of a game refuge in the Ouachita National Forest in the State of Arkansas;

H.R. 3659. An act to extend the mining laws of the United States to the Death Valley National Monument in California;

H.R. 4872. An act authorizing Farris Engineering Co., its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River at or near California, Pa.;

H.R. 5589. An act granting the consent of Congress to the city of Washington, Mo., to construct, maintain, and operate a toll bridge across the Missouri River at or near Washington, Mo.; and

H.J.Res. 183. Joint resolution extending for 1 year the time within which American claimants may make application for payment, under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928, of awards of the Mixed Claims Commission and of the Tripartite Claims Commission.

On June 12, 1933:

H.R. 5495. An act to amend an act entitled "An act creating the Great Lakes Bridge Commission and authorizing said commission and its successors to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the St. Clair River at or near Port Huron, Mich.", approved June 25, 1930, and to extend the times for commencing and completing construction of said bridge; and

H.R. 5645. An act to amend the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, June 13, 1933, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

By Mr. KENNEY: A bill (H.R. 6100) for the relief of Wenzel A. Klinger; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RICHARDSON: A bill (H.R. 6101) for the relief of Luther Edward Savage; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H.R. 6102) granting a pension to Emma R. Lessly; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 6103) granting an increase of pension to Catherine A. Wolf; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H.R. 6104) granting a pension to Mary Alice Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 6105) granting an increase of pension to Ann Eliza Ansell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 6106) granting an increase of pension to Ella Dean; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 6107) granting an increase of pension to Melissa D. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H.R. 6108) granting an increase of pension to Mary Wilson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

1375. By Mr. FORD: Petition of certain citizens in the State of California, requesting Congress to restore to all service-connected disabled veterans their former benefits, privileges, schedules, ratings, etc.; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

1376. By Mr. GOODWIN: Resolution from George D. Cook Post, No. 3, American Legion, Ellenville, N.Y., stating that a great injustice has been done the veterans of the wars of the United States by the promulgation of the new administrative regulations governing the compensation and hospitalization of veterans, and a telegram from William J. Otjen, commander in chief United Spanish War Veterans, Washington, D.C., requesting that the Connally amendment to the independent offices bill be accepted by the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Appropriation.

1377. Also, telegram from Fred Wales, commander, Liberty, N.Y., asking favorable consideration of the Connally amendment to the independent offices bill, and a letter from Joyce Schirick Post, No. 1386, Veterans of Foreign Wars, asking that veterans be not cut more than 25 percent; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1378. By Mr. GOSS: Petition of citizens of the cities of Torrington, Terryville, Waterbury, and Thomaston, Conn., protesting certain phases of the so-called "Economy Act regulations", especially as they apply to service-connected veterans; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

1379. By Mr. KENNEY: Petition of the American Legion, Department of New Jersey, insisting that the Lyons (N.J.) regional office be continued; to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

PETITION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a petition from Eula Lee Hardy, of Natchitoches, La., praying for a senatorial investigation relative to alleged acts and conduct of Hon. HUEY P. LONG, a Senator from the State of Louisiana, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CURTAILMENT OF BENEFITS TO SPANISH AND WORLD WAR VETERANS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in the RECORD, omitting the names of the signers, and appropriately referred a memorial signed by citizens of Plymouth, Mass., protesting against injustices to Spanish and World War veterans and their dependents by reason of existing regulations.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures, as follows:

PLYMOUTH, MASS.

We, the undersigned citizens of Plymouth, Mass., sincerely protest the injustices being done the Spanish and World War veterans and their dependents. We view with alarm the increased cost that it means to this town in increased payments of soldiers' relief and request our United States Senators and Congressmen to rectify these injustices by adhering to the Connally amendment, and not to adjourn until the same is accomplished.

REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS—THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I present and ask to have printed in full in the RECORD, omitting the names of the signers, and appropriately referred a memorial of sundry citizens and voters of Massachusetts, relative to the reduction of armaments and the League of Nations.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures, as follows:

CHARLESTON, MASS., June 6, 1933.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR WALSH: The undersigned voters of Massachusetts, residence as indicated in each case, address you as the senior Senator from Massachusetts in connection with recent press reports, that there has been broached by administration representatives abroad two general propositions that most emphatically meet with our disapproval. These propositions relate to a general reduction of armaments and to a coordination between this country and foreign nations that amounts to all intents and purposes to a revamped League of Nations. Both, we believe, are contrary to the best interest of our Nation and should not be permitted to go through.

The voters in this State have several times expressed their opinion that this country does not wish anything savoring of the League of Nations, World Court, or any alliance between the United States and foreign powers that would have the general effect of destroying the right of the United States to arm according to its needs, to ally itself according to its national rights, whether in the guise of general all-around friendship between nations or otherwise.

We ask that you immediately employ all the power at your command to negative the efforts being made at this time by Mr. Davis—he whom the Hearst papers call the "roving ambassador"—to force this country into any alliance with any and all foreign powers. We also request that you do all in your power to resist any effort to reduce the armament of this country. The Washington and London treaties have taught us that each foreign nation is entirely willing for the United States to disarm first, and then seek excuses to do the disarming themselves, on paper only, while at the same time evading each clause of the treaties mentioned, in other words, a plain case of "Let George do it", the United States representing George.

We further respectfully ask that you bring this matter to the attention of the appropriate committees of the Senate and the House (through one of the Massachusetts Representatives) and that if possible the contents of this letter be brought to the attention of the White House.

Very truly yours,

TRANSPORTATION OF MEN TO REFORESTATION CAMPS OUTSIDE THEIR STATES

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred a telegram I have received from the commandant of the Essex County (N.J.) detachment of the Marine Corps League, protesting against unnecessary expenditures in sending men to reforestation camps outside of their respective States.

There being no objection, the telegram was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[Telegram]

UNION CITY, N.J., June 12, 1933.

Senator WARREN BARBOUR,
Washington, D.C.:

Several thousand enlisted men sent to reforestation camp, Tacoma, Wash. Transportation $100 per man. Believe keeping them in their respective States would save considerable expense. Contemplated procedure one of the many reasons responsible for reduction of veterans' compensation. May we ask your cooperation in preventing this unnecessary expenditure?

JESSE A. RODGERS,
Commandant Essex County Detachment
Marine Corps League,

FINANCING OF PUBLIC-WORKS PROGRAM THROUGH NON-INTEREST-BEARING NOTES

Mr. WHEELER presented a letter from Fred Brenckman, Washington representative of the National Grange, which, with the accompanying communication, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D.C., June 10, 1933.

Hon. BURTON K. WHEELER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I take this means of expressing my high appreciation of the fight you made on the floor of the Senate yesterday to secure the adoption of an amendment providing for non-interest-bearing Treasury notes, as opposed to Government bonds, for the purpose of financing the public-works program of the industrial recovery bill.

Under date of June 3 I sent a circular letter to the Senate, as per enclosed copy, which was in harmony with the terms of your proposed amendment.

Deeply regretting that your amendment was not adopted, but commending you for the convincing argument you made in its behalf, I am,

Sincerely yours,

FRED BRENCKMAN,
Washington Representative.

THE NATIONAL GRANGE,
Washington, D.C., June 3, 1933.

To the Members of the United States Senate:

The Grange is in favor of financing through non-interest-bearing Treasury notes the public-works program contained in the industrial recovery bill. We have had 3½ years of deflation, and we need a corrective inflation.

As President Roosevelt aptly said in his radio address on the evening of May 7:

"Government credit and Government currency are really one and the same thing. Behind Government bonds there is only a promise to pay. Behind Government currency we have, in addition to the promise to pay, a reserve of gold and a small reserve of silver."

If the Government should issue 4-percent bonds to the extent of $3,300,000,000 to finance the public-works program, the interest during a period of 25 years would be as great as the face of the bonds, while the original obligation would still remain. On the other hand, if we should issue non-interest-bearing Treasury notes, these could be retired at the rate of 4 percent a year, and at the end of 25 years the debt would be wiped out. If we pay this debt in currency, we shall pay it only once. If we issue bonds maturing in 25 years, we shall have to pay it twice.

If a State or a minor subdivision of government desires to borrow money for a long term, there is no other recourse than the issuing of bonds. The Federal Government, which has the right to issue currency, possesses a power which may be capitalized to good advantage under present conditions.

Defraying the cost of the public-construction program by means of Government currency would make it unnecessary to levy any of the additional taxes which are proposed, all of which would be burdensome and tend toward further deflation. The improvement in business which would be sure to result from putting into circulation $3,300,000,000 in new currency would easily produce more than sufficient revenue to provide for the retirement of this money at the rate of 4 percent a year.

The interest on the public debt today is approximately twice as great as the total cost of running the Government when William McKinley entered the White House. If there is any way of avoiding it, we should not add to the burden which the taxpayers are compelled to carry in this connection.

Yours sincerely,

FRED BRENCKMAN,
Washington Representative.

REPORT OF THE CIVIL SERVICE COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Civil Service, to which was referred the bill (S. 583) relating to the classified Civil Service, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DILL:

A bill (S. 1945) for the relief of the Berg Shipbuilding Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REED:

A bill (S. 1946) to amend section 165 of the Revenue Act of 1932; to the Committee on Finance.

JOHN TYLER—ADDRESS BY HON. CLAUDE G. BOWERS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on June 16, 1931, the Honorable Claude G. Bowers, of New York, now Ambassador of the United States to Spain, delivered a brilliant and, from an historical standpoint, a most interesting address on John Tyler, the occasion being the unveiling of a bust of President Tyler in the State Capitol at Richmond, Va. I think the address is of such merit that, although it was delivered sometime ago, it should be preserved in the volumes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A little more than a decade before the Revolution, two ardent Virginia youths at William and Mary might have been seen almost any evening with their heads together in study. They were kindred spirits in their love of liberty and of the inalienable rights of man. Together, with flaming cheeks, they had listened in the Virginia convention to the immortal eloquence of Patrick Henry. One was to become the greatest American political philosopher and the father of American democracy, and the other, one of his ablest and most trusted lieutenants, and the father of a future President whose bust we unveil today.

It was in the year that Jefferson and Madison, riding leisurely through New England, planned the organization of resistance to the domination of the Hamiltonians that John Tyler, to whom we pay tribute here today, was born. Reared in an atmosphere of culture and meditation, he was a precocious youth. He steeped himself in history, and thus found the background for his political convictions; in poetry, and thus cultivated the imagination and the gift of phrasing that was to give a literary flavor to his eloquence. The gentility of his manner was inherent, an inheritance of his blood, a reflection of his home. When at the age of 17 he finished his course at Williamsburg, he possessed already the social charm, the suavity, and urbanity of a gentleman of the world. But his education was by no means confined to the curriculum of the college. From earliest childhood he had come under the influence of the remarkable man who was his father. The relations of Chatham and his brilliant son were not more influential in the burnishing of the genius of the younger Pitt than were those of Judge Tyler and the future President. By voice and pen the elder man impressed upon the scion of his house the fundamentals of the faith of Thomas Jefferson. There came a day when the ardent youth was to meet the great philosopher of his faith at his father's table, to come under the fascination of his personality, and to listen to an intimate political conversation he was to treasure always in his mind.

Thus, on the very threshold of his life, we find him firmly anchored to his creed in politics. He believed that men are the masters and not the slaves of government, that constitutions are the contracts binding on those in power, that States are entities with sovereign rights, that power should be diffused among the people and not centralized in some capital remote, that there are certain inalienable rights of men that governments dare not question, that any political action based on privilege is a usurpation and a crime, and that the function of government is to assure the liberties of the people and to operate for the happiness of mankind. This was his political faith to which he clung tenaciously from the hour, when scarcely more than a boy, he entered public life, until he laid his burdens down with death.

Since we are concerned primarily with his public life, it is interesting to glance at the equipment which was to make him the powerful and persuasive champion of any cause that he espoused. With strength, he had a winning personality which invited confidence. He was easy, graceful, and appealing; his urbanity drew men to him, and his dignity, without pose, saved him from the pawing of vulgarity. His voice in conference and conversation was ingratiating, and his features were lighted with the kindliness of true gentility. But nothing contributed more to the success of his leadership than his Jeffersonian art in the management of men. He was too much the psychologist arbitrarily to give orders. He was a genius in the art of suggestion. He had the subtlety to insinuate his own thoughts into the minds of his conferees, and he was a master in the art of permitting himself to be persuaded to the acceptance of his own ideas and plans. And along with these, he had other qualities, his adamantine honesty and a courage that never in the stormiest moments of his life flinched or faltered under fire.

But he had another implement in his armory that made him a powerful factor in the polemics of his time—a natural gift of eloquence that moved men to his will. He realized the concept of logic on fire, and there was grace and beauty in the flames. Out from a well-stored mind he spoke with a fluency that never faltered, for in his callow days in this very room, like Charles James Fox in the House of Commons, he had spoken with frequency in the perfecting of his art. He made his art so much an art that the artistry was not in evidence. Its cultivation was confined to the literary phrase, and he had trained his taste by constant communion with the greatest masters of poetry and prose. In delivery he had but to give nature rein, for nature had given him a dramatic sense, imagination, a capacity for righteous wrath, and a silvery voice that was an instrument of music.

Thus we have the motivating principles of his life; and the equipment with which, at the age of 21, this young man, mature beyond his years, entered the House of Delegates, and sat within these walls. He entered when we were challenging the imperial power of England in the second war, and when the light from our burning Capitol illumined darkly the treason of the political foes of the administration, young Tyler's voice and vote were in support of Madison, and day by day his eloquence was heard urging a vigorous prosecution of the war. The revolutionary fire of his father tipped his tongue.

Here, too, he fought the battles of Jeffersonian democracy against the bank, and laid down the principle in support of which in later life he was to rise to an heroic stature—that Senators in a representative government are but the servants and never the sovereign of the people they represent. Returned five times with practical unanimity, he was a veteran already at 26 when he was made a member of the Executive Council and elected to the Federal House of Representatives.

Thus he entered the national arena a seasoned debater, a persuasive orator, his principles set in granite, and he moved with easy grace and with consent to a commanding position among his colleagues. Here, perhaps, that which was most significant of his prescience and genius as a leader, was his opposition to the Missouri Compromise. With Calhoun, that giant whose philosophic intellect has seldom been approached in all our history, supporting the measure, the voice of the Virginia youth of 28 was courageously raised against it. And his, not Calhoun's, was the voice of prophecy. Now statesman is the gift of seeing into day after tomorrow. It was not the immediate purpose of the compromise that he opposed; it was the accompanying concession of the constitutional right of Congress to legislate on slavery in the territories. Though not yet 30, he foresaw what others failed to see—that with the admission of the principle of congressional interference, the door was opened for the continuing agitation that ultimately would endanger the solidarity of the Union. He did not propose that the door should be opened with his consent; he raised his voice in prophetic warning, and hastening events would soon vindicate his judgment and prove his statesmanship.

With shattered health, he retired to private life at the age of 30, only to be called by the mandate of the people at 35 to the gubernatorial honors of this historic Commonwealth; and, brief though his tenure was, his instinct for constructive action served his people well. He found that the mountains raised a barrier between the people of the East and West; his was the dream to circumvent the mountains and thus make for the greater spiritual solidarity of Virginia. Under the pressure and inspiration of his leadership the sections were closer knit by the canals and roads he built.

But to me, more important than his plan for the material improvement of Virginia, was his dream of extending the blessings of education to every son and daughter of the soil through the creation of a system of public schools. Jefferson, long before him, had had this dream and failed, and Tyler carried on and failed, but it was from the seed sown and tended by the Jeffersons and Tylers that ultimately was to spring the great public-school system of Virginia.

Thus when Tyler entered the Senate at the age of 37 he was definitely anchored to a political philosophy and adequately trained for statesmanship of a high order. It was the Senate's golden age, comparable to that of the British Parliament in the days of Pitt and Fox, of Burke and Sheridan, and destined to give to literature some of the greatest orations of all times, to engage in gladiatorial combats of the intellect never before approached on this side of the sea, and to deal with subjects that went to the very foundations of our governmental system. And into this glorious company and into this portentous day stepped John Tyler, instantly to take high rank among the acknowledged leaders of that body.

Unhappily we can only sketchily survey the part he played and touch upon the more significant events. With economic issues and the slavery agitation driving a wedge between the sections, the sensitive political consciousness of Tyler caught afar off the ominous foot beats of marching men. He loved Virginia; his forbears from the days of the cavalier had helped direct its destiny and men of his blood were sleeping in its soil; but no man ever loved the Union conceived by the fathers more tenderly or truly. No statesman of his time dedicated his genius for conciliation more completely to the reconcilement of the sections through the healing processes of the legislation of compromise.

Scarcely had he taken his seat when the abominable Tariff Act of 1828 was forced upon the statutes. It was a tax on the agriculturists of the South to increase the profits of the industrialists of the North through the violation of economic laws. Even then, though few knew it, the irrepressible conflict was at hand. In his rural home at the foot of the Blue Ridge, Calhoun was meditating his doctrine of nullification. The sizzling pens of the Rhetts were preaching resistance in the press. To paraphrase Lord Churchill's famous sentence, hotheaded devotees of southern interest, giving more heat than light, were crying that "South Carolina will fight and South Carolina will be right." Emissaries of that great Commonwealth were traversing the South seeking cooperation in resistance; youth was toying nervously with its muskets; secret agents of the grim old man in the White House were beating a pathway to and from his door; and then—the nullification proclamation; and then—the Force bill.

Tyler had met the danger on the threshold and had fought the tariff of 1828 with all his zeal. He saw beyond the economic issue to the danger to the Union. The wisest, soundest, most prophetic speech against that measure of iniquity was that of Tyler, and Madison and John Marshall, divided in political affiliation, joined in lavish praise of the tone, the temper, and the content of the Tyler speech. You will search the records of Congress in vain for a more persuasive and pathetic appeal to the better angels of our nature. Others were combatants in the fight; almost alone, John Tyler plead for peace through justice. But the bill was passed, and the storm clouds gathered, and there were rumblings on the far horizon; and then nullification—and the Force bill.

Now, John Tyler had no sympathy with nullification. "Let government be just", he said, "and nullification has no food on which to exist." But he had no sympathy with the Force bill. "It sweeps away", he said, "all the barriers of the Constitution." He had no faith in the unselfish patriotism of the beneficiaries of the Tariff Act. "The manufacturers will fight", he said, "rather than resign their profits."

And then, in the midst of the preparation for armed action, there came a pause. When at the instance of Virginia, South Carolina suspended the operation of her nullification act to give time for mediation, John Tyler stepped into the breach. Quietly he set about his task. The material was all before him. Here was the Force bill which ultimately meant war; here was nullification which meant the Force bill; and here was the tariff that meant nullification. Reduce the tariff, and nullification would die out, and the Force bill could be abandoned.

He looked about the Chamber for the human elements with which he had to work. There was Henry Clay, whose autocratic and domineering ways had done so much to force the tariff act upon the statutes, and there was Calhoun, whose extreme opposition had brought the crisis on. Could these two men be brought together in a spirit of conciliation, by appeals to their patriotism, the situation might be saved. Already in a speech Tyler had outlined the basis of a compromise. He proposed that if the manufacturers would agree to reduce the tariff to a revenue basis, there should be a gradual reduction to prevent the disorganization of their industries. That was the compromise of 1833, and John Tyler was its father.

But would Clay agree to the reduction or Calhoun consent to the delay? Tyler turned to them—these men who momentarily were not on speaking terms. Clay quailed a moment at the anticipated fury of the manufacturers, but only for a moment. How simply Tyler has told the story: "I appealed to his patriotism. No one ever did so in vain." And then it was Tyler who persuaded Clay and Calhoun to a meeting. And with what Spartan brevity does he record the event, "They met, consulted, agreed."

And thus it was, when the very foundations of the Union shook, that Henry Clay arose to offer as the compromise of 1833 the very proposition Tyler previously had urged upon the Senate floor. The scene deserves the memorialization of a canvas. As Clay announced the compromise he turned toward Tyler, and, meeting in mid-Chamber, the two men clasped hands.

These two men were soon to become inveterate foes, and Tyler was to suffer through the other's acts. But in the twilight of his days, when Clay was dead and in this city a monument to his memory was raised, John Tyler journeyed hither to pay tribute to his foe, to recall the scene that day in the Senate Chamber, and to say, "It is the clasp of that hand that has brought me here today." I know of nothing finer or nobler in the story of American politics. It mattered not to Tyler that his, the essential part, had been ignored by history, that all the credit might go to Clay. He was big enough to—

> "Take the cash and let the credit go > Nor heed the rumble of a distant drum."

It was enough to him that in a grave crisis in his country's history he had stepped into the breach when others faltered and given the Union a new lease on life.

This was the supreme service of his senatorial career, but nothing in that career became him better than his manner of leaving it. He had fought for Jackson against the rechartering of the national bank; for Jackson's fight was in accordance with the fundamentals of his faith. He broke with Jackson on the removal of the deposits—and this was consistent with that faith as well. He conceived the removal of an act of Executive usurpation creating a precedent for a dangerous concentration of power, and he voted to spread a censure of the act upon the record. And when Virginia instructed him to vote to expunge the censure, he rose to heroic heights of manhood.

Throughout his life he had committed himself to the right of a constituency to instruct a representative, and now that principle pressed upon him. He did not hesitate. The people he represented had instructed him to vote against the dictates of his conscience. He could not vote against his conscience; he would not act against the instructions of his people; and thus, putting aside the cynical importunities of partisans, and scorning recourse to the sophistries of self-deception, he tendered his resignation and filed out of the Senate Chamber in the proud company of his self-respect. I know of nothing so Cato-like in the austerity of its integrity as this act which gave new dignity to public station. The situation he confronted was the acid test of true greatness of mind and soul, and John Tyler stood the test.

The 4 years that intervened between his resignation and his return to the national arena were crowded with political events. The Whigs, with whom he was affiliated, were maneuvering for position. The seed of disintegration was in that party's cradle, for it was an incongruous combination of inconsistent and utterly irreconcilable elements. And as the Vice Presidential nominee of this hodge-podge party, John Tyler was elected in 1840, and almost immediately reached the Presidency through the death of Harrison.

Partisan historians have accused the Tyler of the Presidency with disloyalty to the Whigs—and this is false. He had made no compromise with his conscience for the nomination. He had yielded not one jot of his opposition to the protective-tariff policy; and in the very heat of the campaign he had reiterated his uncompromising hostility to the national bank. And did the Whigs then repudiate his leadership? No; they acclaimed his policy the platform of the party on which they appealed to the electorate of the Union. Throughout the campaign of 1840 not one Whig statesman proposed the abandonment of the tariff compromise of 1833; not one Whig leader so much as hinted of a plan for the restoration of the bank.

Ah, but do they say that there was no positive declaration to the contrary? The records are against them. Throughout the campaign the Whig press insisted with reiterated emphasis that the tariff and the bank were no longer issues—that they were dead. The Whigs of the Legislature of Virginia formally proclaimed the promise and the pledge that their victory at the polls would not be followed by an attempt to increase the tariff or to recharter the bank. The Whig campaign was made upon the principles of John Tyler as its platform; and had the party deviated one hair's breadth from him on fundamental principles he would have flung the nomination back into its lap.

And now the victory is won, and now Harrison, with the laurel wreath of triumph fresh upon him, lies in the White House, dead; and now John Tyler succeeds to the Presidency. Now the Whigs, with a brazen effrontery unparalleled in American history, throw off the mask of hypocrisy and prepare to push the very policies they themselves renounced when seeking the suffrage of the people—and now John Tyler confronts them and dismays them with the spectacle of an honest statesman who refuses to be a party to the intolerable treachery.

Picture to yourself the isolation of his position. He had incurred the hostility of the Democrats by his opposition to Jackson, and he challenges now the hatred of the Whigs by his fidelity to the pledge and principles on which he was elected.

The first to reach the Presidency through succession, they seek to minimize his power and belittle his position, and by meeting them with a stern and dignified assertion of his constitutional status he rendered an immeasurable service to the Republic.

But meanwhile, with much waving of banners, his party is moving toward the deliberate betrayal of its pledge under the hypnotic influence of the incomparable Clay. Thus Tyler received his ultimatum—the surrender of his principles or the repudiation of his party. Conscious of the seriousness of the situation, he moved with a statesman's instinct for reasonable conciliation and proposed a compromise consistent with his constitutional objections to the bank, the establishment of a District bank in Washington with branches in the States, provided the States gave consent. It was a statesman's proffer of peace; and brushing it aside, Clay sought the creation of another bank like that which the people, with reason, had destroyed. Then it was that John Tyler proved his mettle by meeting the impudent betrayal with a vigorous veto, and Clay turned loose upon him the dogs of war. In Whig communities he was burned in effigy and even threatened with assassination.

Before the storm, fanned by the bellows of the repudiated bank, John Tyler stood erect, serene in the consciousness of duty done; and when another bank bill equally offensive was enacted he killed it with a veto once again. The Cabinet, bowing to the will of Clay, filed out; all but Webster, who refused to stoop.

Once more Tyler concentrated his constructive mind upon finance, and eventually evolved his exchequer system, pronounced by Webster at Faneuil Hall, "the most beneficial institution, the Constitution alone excepted", to the credit of American statesmanship. But partisanship prevailed; the Whigs refused the measure; and thus through the remainder of his administration John Tyler was the custodian of the Nation's money, and in the end he turned it over without the misplacement of a single cent. The record of Tyler on finance was that of honesty and political integrity, of constructive capacity and conciliation, as far as honor went; it was as a shaft of wholesome light in a darkened room.

Again they tested his honor with a tariff measure obnoxious to his conscience, and they met his instant veto with personal abuse and the menace of impeachment; and he stood in the storm again unbowed, serene, and in the end prevailed. To find another President as dignified and unswerving in the face of foul abuse, one must come down to the days of Andrew Johnson.

But not always did partisanship and faction intervene to thwart him in his domestic policies; and, free from that, his record as administrator was one of quick decision, forceful action, and a conciliating tact. Thus he turned to the Seminole war in Florida that 7 years of fighting had failed to end; he ended it with victory in a few scant months and the red men moved toward the sunset and the white settlers moved in to redeem the waste places to the purposes of men. Thus he faced the unprecedented challenge of the Dorr Rebellion in Rhode Island; and it dissipated before the disclosure of his clear intent to put down insurrection, even though the men in arms were demanding what he himself conceived to be their inalienable rights. He put the insurrection down without the firing of a shot, without the movement of a soldier, without inflicting a solitary wound to the principle of State rights. Unhampered by factious opposition, he met every domestic issue with rare executive ability.

But even so the prospect brightens when we turn to international affairs. In his contracts with the diplomatic corps he was singularly happy; for his elegance of manner, his suavity, and Old-World courtesy gave a charm to his diplomatic conversations. He was by nature a conciliator. He had a genius for negotiations. He had the power, no matter how hot his blood, of keeping his head cool. And seldom has such qualities been so imperatively needed as when he entered upon his Presidency. The clouds on the international horizon were low and threatening and our relations with England were dangerously impaired. The controversy over the northern boundary, continuing through six administrations, had finally found Maine and New Brunswick facing each other, armed, across the border. The incident of the Caroline was pressing for solution, and diplomacy had reached an impassé; and the arrest of a British subject for murder in that connection was threatening to break the diplomatic relations of the English-speaking nations. The searching of American vessels by British cruisers, under the pretext of suppressing the slave trade, had brought on an acrimonious debate. It was under these delicate conditions that Lord Ashburton, a bluff and honest Britisher, sacrified the serenity of his retirement from public life, at the summons of patriotism and humanity, to undertake, in Washington, the negotiation of a general treaty of amity. No finer figure has appeared in such a cause upon our shores.

We cannot enter into the details of the famous Webster-Ashburton Treaty. Suffice it to say that it measurably succeeded in the settlement of all disputes and probably prevented another war. We know the story of the negotiations over the wine and walnuts in the exchange of dinners between Webster and Ashburton in the houses in LaFayette Square; we know the difficulties that constantly threatened rupture; we know that in the deadly miasmic heat of a Washington summer, the negotiators, frequently on edge, and worn to utter exhaustion, were more than once upon the point of breaking off. All honor to the part then played by Daniel Webster, but it was John Tyler who saved the situation more than once by his persuasive tact. Throughout the negotiations he seemingly stood aloof, confiding in his minister, but not a move was made by Webster without a consultation with his chief. His was the decisive voice in every instance. It was in the conferences of that summer's heat that these two men acquired that admiration for each other's qualities which persisted throughout their lives.

One scene from the drama of those negotiations—one not dissimilar to others. In the determination of the boundary line the two ministers have apparently reached the end of their concessions. The accumulating irritations of the prolonged debate have seemingly made the prospects hopeless. The negotiators are sulking in their tents. The aged Ashburton, sweltering and sickening in the unaccustomed humidity and heat, is ready to abandon further efforts and return to England.

And now John Tyler steps into the breach. He invites the British diplomat to a conversation. Instead of the scowling, fighting face of the irritated Webster, he looks into the serene and sympathetic countenance of Tyler. The atmosphere of the controversy is missing now. Nowhere about is to be seen the paraphernalia of combat. And he listens to a kindly, soothing human being making a moving human appeal. He hears an appeal that ignores diplomacy and goes directly to the heart of the generous old man who required no sensational diplomatic triumph to serve the purposes of personal ambition. He hears a reminder that upon the amicable solution of the pressing problems may rest the peace of people bound together by a common language, a common literature, and common traditions of freedom. And he hears the direct appeal to him, "If you cannot settle them, what man in England can?" Before that tactful and almost tender appeal the old man melts. "Well, well, Mr. President", he splutters, "well, well, we must try again." One need not detract one iota from the claims of the two negotiators to conclude that but for the conciliatory genius, the calming serenity, and the pervasive humanity of John Tyler these negotiations might have failed and war have come.

The foreign policy of John Tyler was strong as dignity and conciliatory as humanity. He erased from the agenda of controversy some of the most complicated problems of his time. He had strength without bluster, firmness without stubbornness, and patriotism without chauvinism. History has conceded his triumphs in the field of international relations. The same qualities that made him the conciliator of the Senate made him the peacemaker of the English-speaking peoples at a critical period of their relations.

And now we reach the supreme triumph of his administration. For many years the most prescient statesmen had foreseen the need of the imperial territory of Texas properly to round out the Nation's destiny. Adams had bartered for it and failed. Jackson had increased the offer of many fold and failed. Meanwhile the hardy race of American pioneers in Texas had risen in revolt, and on the bloody field of San Jacinto successfully had challenged the authority of Mexico and proclaimed their independence. With its charter of independence in its hand, signed by the nations of the world, it had offered annexation to Van Buren, who preferred to await the proof of its ability to withstand the assault of Mexico. Five years of testing had intervened before the Presidency of John Tyler, and despite sporadic dashes of outlaws from across the border to plunder, to murder, and to burn, there stood Texas, unshaken and unshakable in her independence, a sovereign nation, master of her destiny.

Within 6 months of his accession John Tyler planned to make the acquisition of Texas a major accomplishment of his administration. He saw in Texas the rounding out of our national destiny; he saw an empire of immeasurable potentialities in wealth and power eager for annexation; and, noting her struggles against marauders, her credit failing, he foresaw the danger of intrigue from England or from France. Within 6 months he had urged the project of annexation by treaty upon Webster in a historic letter. But conditions were not then ripe. The Minister of Texas was in our capital pleading for annexation; but we had private claims pending against the Government of Mexico, and we had to wait on that. There were factions in the Senate which would pass upon the treaty, and the unification of these forces had to be managed with finesse; and we had to wait on that. And while we waited, England, with fifty millions loaned in Mexico, was casting a threatening shadow on the scene; for when we seemed to spurn the Texas plea to take an empire for the asking, she turned a receptive ear to the whisperings of the diplomacy of Britain. The Abolitionists were on the warpath now, and soon Lord Brougham, thundering in Parliament against slavery, would be expatiating glowingly upon the material advantages of the rich domain. The hour had struck for action; delay was dangerous.

Webster had now departed, and Tyler instructed Upshur, his successor, to offer a treaty of annexation to the Texas minister under the seal of secrecy. It was none too soon. Already Houston, the Texas President, was under the spell of England, and Texas was involved in the intrigue. Already the hardy American pioneers in Texas, in ignorance of the maneuvering behind the scenes and discouraged by our seeming indifference to the plea for annexation, were despairing of relief from us; and then, just then, a ringing message to the Congress from John Tyler denouncing the Mexican intermeddling in Texas and demanding that it cease. The people of Texas heard and understood and cheered; the British intrigue was undermined and wrecked.

Meanwhile Upshur was canvassing the Senate for a constitutional majority for the treaty, finding ways he hoped would prevent the raising of a party issue, drawing men together on the higher grounds of patriotism. And out from his seclusion at the Hermitage Andrew Jackson stepped to the side of Tyler; the Jacksonians fell in line behind their leader; and as Fremont, the son-in-law of Benton, turned with the President's commission toward the Oregon trail Old Bullion whirled into the administration camp on Texas. And then tragedy intervened with the death of Upshur.

Out from his retirement at the foot of Blue Ridge, Calhoun, now with some misgivings, was summoned to the portfolio of State. Under the once prevalent and now discredited abolitionist misinterpretation of history Calhoun was credited with the move for Texas. Absurd assumption! The treaty was completed before Calhoun took office, the negotiations were over, and he was to contribute nothing of material importance. He had opposed the pressing of the project in a letter still preserved in the archives of the State Department, and after the event was consummated he frankly avowed his remonstrance at the time in a public speech.

It was Tyler who led and dictated at every single step. It was he who first raised the issue in his letter to Webster; it was he who ordered Upshur to proceed; and the project was completed and the treaty framed before Calhoun took over the portfolio of State.

And now England has been thwarted. Texas has been conciliated, the treaty has been completed and transmitted to the Senate with a stirring message. And now Henry Clay appears to evoke the specter of party to defeat it, and Van Buren declares against it, and the abolitionists denounce it, and under the lashings of the whip of Clay and through the contriving of Van Buren enough Senators are persuaded to the repudiation of their pledge to defeat the ratification. America through political perfidy and personal ambitions had refused an empire as a gift.

But John Tyler had only begun to fight. The campaign of 1844 was on. With Clay and Polk contending for the Presidency, and neither standing for immediate annexation, John Tyler accepted an independent nomination—and unfurled the flag of Texas. With the certainty that the persistence of his candidacy would sound the knell of Polk, he met the importunities to withdraw with the dictation of his terms. If Polk and the Democrats would take the banner of Texas from his hands and bear it openly into the fight and keep the faith, he would retire. The pledge was made, the pledge was kept, and thus the treaty was ratified in the closing hours of Tyler's administration, and the annexation of Texas was an accomplished fact. Thus, the monument to the administration of Tyler is a vast empire brought beneath the flag—Texas is his monument!

When he laid down the burdens of the Presidency, John Tyler could review it with pride in his achievements and in the fidelity with which he had clung to all the fundamentals of his faith. The astonishing vulgarity of his foes had not even tempted him to part company with his gentility. If he had broken with his party it was because his party had chosen the path of perfidy and dishonor. He had kept faith with the people, and his manly vetoes of every act of treachery compels history's tribute to his impeccable personal and political integrity. He had created precedents and made the policies of a people; had defined and enforced the constitutional status of a President succeeding through the death of a predecessor; had met his constitutional obligations in the Dorr Rebellion with meticulous respect for the sovereign rights of States; had adopted the formula of annexation through the treaty, which McKinley was to follow. He broke new ground, and in every instance the furrow that he plowed has become the fixed landmark of the Republic. He had found our international problems pressing, and with finesse had solved them, and dissipating by diplomacy and determination the intrigues that intervened, had brought a great empire of untold value under the jurisdiction of the flag and forever associated with the Lone Star State the name of Tyler.

I know of nothing in our history more dignified or scrupulously correct than the character of John Tyler's retirement to Sherwood Forest. Even there he guarded the dignity of the Presidency with a cautious reticence. He followed with patriotic interest the course of public affairs, but no merely captious criticism from him embarrassed his successors. In the serenity of his retreat he turned again to the beloved classics of English literature from Addison and Steele, from Milton and Shakespeare to Macaulay, and in that goodly company forgot the provocative and futile wranglings of lesser men. Now and then, we see him emerging from his retirement to deliver special-occasion orations that are contributions to history. To me the retired statesman of Sherwood Forest was not unlike the Sir William Temple of Moor Park in his cloistered aloofness; but that "pale" patriotism that Macaulay found in Temple he did not share. From the watch tower of his country home, he had a more perfect perspective of moving events than those who were participating, and he watched with grave concern the gathering of the forces that were threatening the perpetuity of our institutions. He stood four-square for the compromises of the Constitution, and for the preservation of the Union of the Fathers. With reservations, he hailed the compromise of 1850 as a possible harbinger of peace.

But passions and sordid economic interests were in the saddle and riding hard—and riding down the better instincts of our nature. A course and brutal prophet of the new day dawning was lightly saying that a little blood letting would do us good. Sectionalism mobilized in parties and was ready for the fray. The crisis came, proclaimed in raucous accents; and then it was that an old man who had sat at the feet of the sage of Monticello, emerged from his retirement in Sherwood Forest to seek another compromise to save the Nation from internecine strife. What a picture—this of an old man turning away from the delights of his library and the joys of domesticity to spend his waning strength in the cause of peace!

Thus in the midst of the tumult and the shouting is heard again the calm, conciliating voice of John Tyler. The statesman, surrounded by a jostling mob of politicians, has evolved a plan. He knows, or thinks, that the one remaining hope of a compromise of peace lies in the conservatism of the border States, and he urges a convention of these Commonwealths. "These," he writes, "are the most interested in keeping peace, and if they cannot come to an understanding, then the political Union is gone, as is already, to a great extent, the union of fraternal feeling." Had his plan been taken, without deviation, there might have been some hope; but when the call included all the States that hope was blasted.

And now the venerable statesman of Sherwood Forest is summoned to service once again. The problem of the moment is to prevent an act of violence from breaking in upon the processes of conciliation. As Virginia dispatches an emissary to South Carolina, John Tyler hastens to that other venerable patriot, President Buchanan. Again Tyler enters the White House, where Dolly Madison had first received him, to plead for peace and union. We see Buchanan yielding to his persuasive plea and importuning Congress against hostile legislation for the moment. We see Stanton acting as his messenger as he seeks to prevent the premature movement of troops. An old man, pleading for moderation and conciliation as the storm came on! We see him, a little later, presiding over the peace convention, and hear his beautifully moving appeal to the common memories and nobler sentiments of our people. We see him introducing the members of the convention to Abraham Lincoln; and, returning the call, we see the gaunt figure of the President-elect enter the parlor of John Tyler. All that a man could do for peace and union, this unselfish patriot then did; but the dogs of war were straining at their leashes, and the voice of conciliation could not be heard above the dreadful din.

And thus John Tyler carries home the consciousness of failure, consoled by the reflection that he, at least, had done his part. We hear him in the Virginia convention confess his failure with the pathetic comment that he had hoped for a success that would be the "proud crowning" of his life.

And now the conflict he had sought to check throughout his life comes on; and John Tyler casts his lot with the people of Virginia, the home of his fathers, whose ashes mingled with her soil. His voice was not to be heard in the Confederate Congress, where he accepted service. Just as the thunder of the guns began, his spirit winged its way "beyond the sunset and the stars." Happily for him, he was spared the pathos of the bloody struggle, and the intolerable persecution of his people that followed, like vultures, in the wake of war.

Such is the story of the man whose bust we unveil today.

"Statesman, yet friend to truth, of soul sincere,
In action faithful, and in honor clear."

His public life had been based upon the fundamental principles of Jefferson, and from these he never deviated one hair's breadth that "thrift might follow fawning." In the Plutarch of our Republic one will look in vain for a public figure of greater courage, of more impeccable integrity; for a stouter champion of liberty and the rights of man; for one more unselfish in the service of the state; or one inspired by a purer patriotism. Here in the classic building that Jefferson designed, in this room hallowed by heroic memories, we place his bust with those of others whom Virginia has given to the Nation and mankind, that future generations passing through may look upon the features of—a man.

HIGH LIGHTS IN THE LIFE OF JOHN TYLER

1. In the discussion of the Missouri Compromise he saw ahead the shadows of the war of 1861 and anticipated by 37 years the decision in the Dred Scott case. Had the South rallied to his support, the slavery question would have been settled then without war.

2. During the great agitation in 1833 over the tariff and threatened civil war, he outlined the basis of the compromise tariff on which peace was finally made, and he brought together in its support the two great champions of the opposing interests—Henry Clay and John C. Calhoun.

3. In 1832 he anticipated the Compromise of 1850 by putting in his Code of Laws prepared for the District of Columbia a provision abolishing the slave trade or sale of slaves there; and in 1835, as Chairman of the Senate Committee for the District, he opposed the "gag rule" favored by Mr. Calhoun and Henry L. Pinckney, of South Carolina, which gave the antislavery men a pretext for agitation under the guise of the sanctity of the right of petition.

4. As the first Vice President to succeed to the Executive authority, he rendered an immeasurable service by firmly asserting his right and authority as President of the United States, thus permanently settling the tenure of all the Vice Presidents that have subsequently succeeded to the first office by the death of the President.

5. As "Veto President" he destroyed for all time the gigantic monopoly of the United States Bank, and as a substitute he evolved his "exchequer system" of finance, pronounced by Webster at Faneuil Hall as "the most beneficial institution, the Constitution alone excepted." This incomparable measure was defeated by a partisan Congress, and the money of the country remained in Tyler's keeping during his whole term without any loss to the Government; and in his management of the public expenditures the same great authority (Webster) declared that "he was remarkably cautious, exact, and particular." He reduced the debt that came to him and administered the government at one fourth less expense than his predecessor, Mr. Van Buren.

6. The Seminole War, that 7 years of fighting had failed to end, by his tact and promptness President Tyler finished in a few months.

7. Dorr's Rebellion, which he dissipated simply by the firmness of his attitude, without firing a gun and without a wound to the Constitution. Daniel Webster wrote, "Your conduct of the affair will hereafter appear, I am sure, worthy of all praise."

8. The Treaty of Washington, 1842, which stands out as one of the most important treaties ever negotiated by the United States, because of the numerous important questions involved—the controversy over the northeastern boundary which had come down unsolved through six administrations, the right of search claimed by Great Britain under pretext of suppressing the slave trade, and the sanctity of territory and protection of the flag involved in the cases of the Caroline and Creole. In this negotiation, if the immediate labor devolved upon the Secretary of State, Daniel Webster, the constant supervision and direction, as well as final sanction, devolved upon the President. His suggestions and advice were frequently of the most important character, and but for him the English Ambassador, Lord Ashburton, would have gone away leaving almost the certainty of a war, in which England would have had the assistance of both France and Mexico.

9. The Annexation of Texas, during the course of which President Tyler stood forth as the champion of the Monroe Doctrine against the active intrigues of Great Britain and France.

10. Hawaiian Islands. These islands were seized by the British fleet in 1842, but President Tyler protested against the seizure as a violation of the Monroe Doctrine. The British force was withdrawn, and by the precedent created these islands became eventually a part of the United States during the Presidency of William McKinley.

11. By the treaty with China, negotiated through Caleb Cushing, of Massachusetts, in 1844, he was the first President to throw open the doors of the Orient to the people of the United States.

12. As the advocate of peace in 1861 we see him sent by Virginia to President Buchanan to prevent any hasty measure. We see him originating the peace convention, of which he was president, and firmly supporting the Crittenden compromise, which, if adopted, would have prevented any war.

Happily for himself he was spared the pathos of the struggle of the South for self-government and the intolerable persecution of his people that followed the conclusion of the war.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5755) to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, on page 10 of the so-called "national industrial recovery bill", the first paragraph of section 5 reads as follows:

SEC. 5. While this title is in effect (or in the case of a license, while section 4 (a) is in effect) and for 60 days thereafter, any code, agreement, or license approved, prescribed, or issued and in effect under this title, and any action complying with the provisions thereof taken during such period, shall be exempt from the provisions of the antitrust laws of the United States.

The effect of that provision is to eliminate all restraint which the antitrust laws would otherwise impose on the making of the codes which are provided for in previous sections of the bill. In other words, if those who are making the codes see fit to provide anything that heretofore would have come in conflict with the antitrust laws, that inhibition is now removed, because any provision which may be incorporated in such codes may not come in conflict with the antitrust laws in view of the fact that the antitrust laws are suspended as to any provision of the codes.

Mr. President, on page 4 as the bill passed the Senate there was placed in it this amendment, offered by myself and accepted by those in charge of the bill:

Provided, That such code or codes shall not permit combinations in restraint of trade, price fixing, or other monopolistic practices.

That amendment was changed in conference to read as follows:

That such code or codes shall not permit monopolies or monopolistic practices.

It is difficult for me to understand what was in the minds of the conferees. It must be that the conferees and those sponsoring the bill are of the opinion that price fixing is not a monopolistic practice; it must be their view that combinations in restraint of trade are not monopolistic practices. I can perceive no clarity in the amendment as the conferees have changed it and as it is now found in the bill, except upon the theory that those sponsoring the measure are of the opinion that neither price fixing nor combinations in restraint of trade are monopolistic practices. In other words, it is the view, I take it, of those in charge of the bill that under the bill there may be formulated programs of price fixing and that there may be combinations in restraint of trade; and, as I take it, according to the bill as now drafted and construed by those who are its sponsors, any code framed by associations under this bill which may provide for a combination in restraint of trade would not be considered to infringe the rule against monopolistic practices—or any combination which would have the effect of fixing prices would not be a monopolistic practice. I can work out no other construction of the amendment as provided by the conferees.

That being true, Mr. President, we have here a bill which will permit combinations in restraint of trade, which will permit price fixing, and then upon page 8 we have this provision:

When a code of fair competition has been approved or prescribed by the President under this title, any violation of any provision thereof in any transaction in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce shall be a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof an offender shall be fined not more than $500 for each offense and each day such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

This, therefore, is the situation. Trade associations may meet and formulate codes and those codes may contain combinations in restraint of trade. I say that for the reason that the clause prohibiting such combinations was stricken out. The codes may fix prices. I say that for the reason that the clause prohibiting price fixing was stricken out. I take it, therefore, it is proposed to leave free the power of code makers to do those two things. When the codes are thus framed, if they should permit combinations in restraint of trade, nevertheless any individual pursuing his legitimate business may be fined for violating the terms of those codes. We have private parties fixing codes, those codes to be supervised by other individuals in private life, because the President is here authorized to delegate this power to any agency, and it has already been noted that he has chosen his agent. We have codes framed by parties engaged in private business; we have them passed upon by parties selected by the President; and if they see fit to fix prices by the codes there is no inhibition in the bill against it. If they see fit to make combinations in restraint of trade there is no remedy provided against it in the laws of the United States.

It is thoroughly understood by the business men generally that this is the effect of the amendment. I have had a great many telegrams from business individuals, companies and corporations engaged in business and a few of those telegrams I shall read. It is not necessary to read them all because they are of the same general trend. I read one:

If the industrial control bill does not permit industry to establish price levels in consideration of decreased working hours and increased wages, then the whole bill becomes nothing more than an unsatisfactory labor measure.

It is further insisted that the amendment which I propose shall be stricken from the bill. That is a telegram from Rochester, N.Y. I will place the entire telegram with others in the RECORD. A telegram from Indianapolis reads:

If industry control bill contains following limitations, "Such codes shall not permit combinations in restraint of trade or price fixing", it becomes simply a labor measure. Industries must be permitted to establish price levels in consideration of decreased working hours and increased wages.

It is the understanding of those who will be interested in framing the code that they will be permitted by the codes to fix prices. It is their understanding that they will be permitted by the codes to make combinations in restraint of trade. I take it, therefore, in view of the striking out of these clauses that it is also the understanding of those sponsoring the bill that they may frame codes preventing combinations in restraint of trade and price fixing.

I ask permission, without reading them at length, to incorporate several of these telegrams in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegrams are as follows:

ROCHESTER, N.Y., June 10, 1933.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Office Building:

If industry control bill does not permit industry to establish fair, just, and reasonable price levels, in consideration of decreased working hours and increased wages, then the whole bill becomes nothing more than an unsatisfactory labor measure, under which the Government is put in the position of attempting to stimulate efforts at the unionization of all industry.

W. ROY MCCANE,
President Stromberg-Carlson Telephone Manufacturing Co.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 10, 1933.

WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Office Building:

If industry control bill contains the following limitations, "Such codes shall not permit combinations in restraint of trade, price fixing, or other monopolistic practices" it becomes simply a labor measure. Industries must be able to establish fair, just, and reasonal price levels in consideration of decreased working hours and increased wages. If manufacturers cannot get fair return on their capital, insurmountable difficulties will arise.

FRED D. WILLIAMS,
Vice President P. R. Mallory & Co.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 10, 1933.

WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Senate Office Building:

If industry control bill contains the following limitations, "Such codes shall not permit combinations in restraint of trade, price fixing, or other monopolistic practices", it becomes simply a labor measure. Industries must be able to establish fair, just, and reasonable price levels in consideration of decreased working hours and increased wages. If manufacturers cannot get fair return on their capital, insurmountable difficulties will arise.

RADIO MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION,
FRED D. WILLIAMS, President.

NORTH TONAWANDA, N.Y., June 10, 1933.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH:

The main purpose of the industry control bill is to increase employment and increase wages. Neither can be accomplished unless industry is permitted to raise prices. Unless this is permitted the bill will stop improvement in business instead of helping it.

FARNY R. WURLITZER.

FORT WAYNE, IND., June 10, 1933.

Senator BORAH:

Your amendment to industry control bill now before Senate imposes burden on industry by not permitting industry to establish fair and reasonable price levels in consideration of decreased working hours and increased wages. This amendment should not be made a part of industry control bill. Please use your own influence to defeat your own amendment.

The Honorable WILLIAM E. BORAH,
United States Senator:

On behalf of our company and all small enterprises, we support your opposition to certain provisions of industrial recovery bill. Under the price-fixing clause, the small enterprise is unquestionably at the complete mercy of the relatively few big producers who advertise on large scale, whose wealth permits extended credit terms, and who possess other advantages which must be offset by some price flexibility on part of the small operator. Public opinion already is that monopolistic control comes into being with this bill as now reported. We urge further opposition to the clause that permits the fixing of prices.

Senator WILLIAM BORAH,
Republican, of Idaho:
God bless you. Fight on.

The WM. WILSON FAMILY.

Mr. BORAH. I refer now to a telegram just handed to me by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]:

Senator BORAH's amendment prohibiting price fixing very detrimental to Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. President, is it in the interest of the people of the United States that the private industries of the country shall have authority to frame codes which may provide for combinations in restraint of trade, which may fix prices, which make it a crime to violate such codes, and to give no relief to an individual in the way of court review should he undertake to have set aside or enjoined these private codes which have been framed? What chance has the small independent business, and, most of all, what chance have the consumers?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. I will say to the Senator that I have been in receipt of a large number of telegrams from industries setting out that the retention of the Borah amendment prohibiting monopolies destroys the whole purpose of the act and cuts the heart out of the act; in other words, that establishment of monopoly is the purpose of the act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, we have all received similar telegrams.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. It is the understanding throughout the country and the understanding of the authors of the bill that prices may be fixed, and it is the understanding that there may be combinations in restraint of trade, and it is said that without such power the bill is worthless to them. I maintain that there is no protection to the consumer and no protection to small or independent business. This ought to be entitled "A bill to promote and make secure monopoly."

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. In order that we may not have any misunderstanding about the bill, let me say this, and I only reiterate it because of the constant misstatement as to what the bill does: The bill makes a declaration of law, not merely a provision of the proposed codes, that there cannot be any monopoly or monopolistic practice. That is as clear and definite as any declaration of policy can be made. Anyone can go into court if the code violates any particular provision of the law and restrain its enforcement on the ground that it is monopolistic.

Mr. BORAH. But the Senator has declared in the conference report that combinations in restraint of trade are not monopolistic practices.

Mr. WAGNER. Because the Senator knows that there is as much difference, as the courts have construed the words "combinations in restraint of trade and monopolies", as there is between day and night. "Restraint of trade" really means restraint of competition, one of the things we want to deal with being the subject of competition, but we are making an assurance against monopolistic practices greater than has ever been contained in any law heretofore enacted.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, the Senator from New York contends that a combination in restraint of trade which puts individuals out of business is not monopolistic.

Mr. WAGNER. If it is monopolistic it is a violation of the law and can be restrained.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not answer my question. What does the Senator think if we have a code which permits combinations in restraint of trade and puts individuals out of business by restraining trade? Is not that a monopolistic practice?

Mr. WAGNER. If it is a monopolistic practice——

Mr. BORAH. No; not "if it is", but is it?

Mr. WAGNER. That all depends. We may provide for some competitive method which, under the decisions of the courts today, may be regarded as in restraint of trade, which would eliminate cutthroat, sweatshop competition, the thing we are after. Under the provision the Senator proposed we could not eliminate or destroy cutthroat competition.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment to which the Senator from New York refers provided that these codes should not permit combinations in restraint of trade. That is all.

Mr. CLARK. And price fixing.

Mr. BORAH. Yes. I had discussed that. The conferees eliminate those two provisions.

Mr. WAGNER. The term "price fixing" is used rather carelessly here, too. It has been held that when we fix the wages of an individual, we are fixing the price of that particular commodity, namely, labor. Under the proposal the Senator from Idaho offered we could not, under the terms of the bill, fix a minimum wage scale.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no. The Senator now provides that we may not only fix a minimum scale but we may fix prices, and, as these telegrams say, unless business people are permitted to fix price levels they cannot protect themselves against the wage increases. That is reasonable. That is perfectly sound. If we fix wage levels, we will fix price levels at the same time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not talking about a telegram the Senator may have received from some individual. I am talking about the way in which the term "in restraint of trade" has been construed by the courts. I have no doubt the Senator knows that a mere agreement among industries to exchange information with regard to production or with regard to other matters about which they believe they ought to have useful information has been held to be a combination in restraint of trade.

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not know that.

Mr. WAGNER. That is the Collins case to which I referred a short time ago and to which I referred in my explanation of the bill. That is all that is involved. That is why I become indignant over statements to the contrary.

Mr. BORAH. After hearing and reading the able Senator's speech I looked up the authorities.

Mr. President, this much will have to be admitted, that the conferees are of the opinion that a combination in restraint of trade does not constitute a monopolistic practice.

Mr. WAGNER. If it does, it is a violation of the terms of the bill. The moment a cooperative agreement in restraint of trade becomes monopolistic, it is a violation of the provisions of the bill. We are providing not only that the President himself must find it so but the declaration inserted at the instance of the Senator from Idaho provides that as a matter of law the code must not permit monopolies or monopolistic practices.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, Mr. President, they eliminate the specific declaration as to combinations in restraint of trade and price fixing on the theory that those things are not at all times monopolistic practices. That is my understanding. On the other hand, by eliminating those provisions, the conferees have so construed the bill, as a general proposition—because they make no exceptions—that those two provisions do not cover monopolistic practices.

Mr. President, I desire to read a paragraph from Dr. Fetter's recent discussion of this subject, in which he says:

In this period of depression stabilization is a word for selfishness to conjure with. Many individuals and industries, thinking in terms of their own plight, are declaring that if they were permitted to exact higher prices from the rest of us the general depression would quickly end.

And that is the real basis of this bill—that if these different trade combinations can frame a code which will enable them to secure higher prices it will be for the general benefit of the entire country, including those who have to pay the higher prices.

This implies a new theory of the business cycle now and for the future. It is the logic of the panic stricken in a theater fire.

"Let all the rest of you sit calmly in your seats while we clamber over your shoulders and make for the door."

I also read the following from Dr. Fetter:

The regime of special privilege which giant combinations have created, these "virtual" monopolies which have so largely destroyed true competition in free and open markets, are now to be accepted and perpetrated to the injury not only of smaller business but of the buying public (the rest of us). Sauve qui peut. The public is to be left to its fate while antagonists of the Sherman law, intent upon their own safety, undertake the immense propaganda of the past few years—to do what? To create another kind of special privilege for themselves, the privilege of combining in trade associations in restraint of commerce, by conspiring to control production and to fix prices in their industries for all buyers, trusts and public alike.

Sugar-coat such a policy as they may, it means the creation of a multitude of other virtual and semimonopolies over a large part of the field of industrial prices. Its advocates even admit in unguarded moments that it is "price fixing", but excuse it on the ground that it "would operate chiefly to prevent demoralization when supply exceeded demand"; in plain words, that means whenever the competitive price is too low to satisfy the price fixers. They deny, of course, that this is monopoly; they call it, in carefully chosen words, merely charging "the highest price that will attract the largest profitable demand without inviting avoidable competition." But inasmuch as the action of such a legalized conspiracy of sellers would make almost all effective competition "avoidable", the price resulting would be highly monopolistic. Of course, they disavow the desire to get an "excessive" price; they seek only the "right" price—that is, what is right in their own opinion.

Mr. President, I refer again to telegrams bearing on this bill. These telegrams are from those opposed to the bill.

A telegram from New York says:

Unless you prohibit insidious price-control monopolies and restraint of trade, it is evident trade associations dominated by larger firms will pass regulations to cause elimination of small merchants in the textile field.

A telegram from Lincoln, Nebr., says:

You have saved the independent oil industry by your amendment to the antitrust section of the industrial bill. We operate 350 drive-in stations over seven Middle Western States. We hope you will continue to watch this to see that they do not put it over yet without the amendment. We doubt if you could possibly have realized the ulterior motives in the background of powerful oil quarters in this industrial bill. We are generally in position to know in advance the inside activities in these above-mentioned quarters.

Another telegram from Newark, Ohio, says:

We have example of the giant tire companies already showing their attitude in formation of code by employing corporation lawyer who is chief counsel for one of the giant tire companies to write code and then become policeman to enforce same. The giants are using mail-order houses as medium to cut prices and will continue. We beg you to use all your influence to defeat the bill in its entirety, otherwise it will be the end of independent manufacturers.

I ask permission to insert in my remarks other telegrams, which I shall not take time to read.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 13, 1933.

Senator BORAH,
Senate Building:

Endorse your amendment prohibiting price fixing in Industrial Recovery Act. Price fixing will utterly destroy the small manufacturer. We demand right of free competition. Thousands of small manufacturers looking to you for protection against racketeers of large producers already planning to destroy them under price-fixing provisions of this act.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 13, 1933.

Senator WILLIAM E. BORAH,
Care Senate Building:

Fight for the retention of your amendment in the original language. It is the one and only safeguard for small independent business.

THINSHELL PRODUCTS, INC.

I have received many telegrams of similar import. Before sitting down, I desire to say that it is my deliberate judgment that whatever may be the purpose of those who are framing this measure, if they do not have in the bill very strict provisions against price fixing and against combinations in restraint of trade and against things of that nature, in spite of any supervision which can possibly be given to this matter, insidiously the producers will work into their codes these principles which will have the effect of eliminating from business a large portion of the independent business men of the country and of independent enterprises.

I feel that we are in effect turning over to the large business organizations of this country the unrestrained and uncontrolled power which will result in the utter destruction of the small business man. It will finally result in placing upon the people of this country a burden in the way of prices which they cannot carry. This repeal or emasculation or striking down of the Sherman antitrust law is the result of a fight of 20 years, and the same influences and the same forces which have been making the fight for the destruction of the Sherman antitrust law are perfectly satisfied with this bill. They feel that the securing of this measure is that which they have fought for during all these years. Furthermore, Mr. President, it is utterly abhorent to me, even if it were constitutionally permissible to do so, to provide that the violation of a code framed by private parties and private interests shall constitute a crime. This measure in its last analysis provides that an American citizen cannot pursue a legitimate business without becoming criminal unless the pursuit of that business is in accordance with rules and regulations established by powerful business interest.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not desire to prolong this discussion, because to do so involves retracing steps we have already taken and surveying a field of discussion which has already been covered here. I merely wish to emphasize one or two points in order to rebut the conclusion of the Senator from Idaho as to the effect of this legislation.

In the first place, the Senator constantly restates the proposition that this bill is in the interest of large industrialists, large combinations, large enterprises. The Senator seems to be overlooking the fact that the present antitrust laws have conceived and nurtured all these large enterprises. While the praiseworthy original—objective of the Sherman law, as I learned from a careful reading of Senator Sherman's address, was to prevent combinations, to prevent monopolistic enterprises, the result has been quite the contrary. It is during the reign of the antitrust laws that all these tremendous enterprises have grown up in our country. The concentration of wealth about which we have heard so much from the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] and others here has taken place during the period of the present antitrust laws. We are now trying to remold these laws in the light of actual experience, and thus to make possible the attainment of their original objectives.

If this legislation passes, it will be the first time that small business will have a voice in the government of industry. It has none today. Under the law as it exists, with the cut-throat competition, the underselling, and the other vicious practices which are permitted, large business concerns have been able to destroy small business concerns, compelling them either to sell out to the large industry or to join in a merger. This has been the way the antitrust laws have worked, and this is the thing we want to prevent in the future. In formulating the code of fair competition within each industry we want to give an equal voice to the small business man and the large business man. With this in view, we provide that no trade or industrial association which proposes a code shall impose any inequitable restrictions upon membership.

I am in fundamental sympathy with the objectives of the Senator from Idaho. I agree with him that what we must provide against above all else are monopolies and monopolistic practices. But I say to the Senator that we have taken every precaution in this legislation. We not only provide that the President, in passing upon a code, must find that the code neither tends to promote monopoly nor discriminates against small business men. In addition we have accepted the proposal of the Senator from Idaho and gone beyond reliance upon a finding by the President. We have incorporated a definite declaration of law to the effect that the codes shall not permit a monopoly or monopolistic practices. The sort of price fixing which the Senator fears, price fixing which is part and parcel of monopolistic practices, is outlawed by the same language which outlaws such practices.

But we must not accept the Senator from Idaho's prohibition of all restraints of trade. The words "in restraint of trade", through court interpretations, have come to embrace a much wider field of action than the word "monopoly." To ban everything which the courts have called "restraints of trade" would defeat the very purposes of this act. It would prevent attempts to limit competition to levels of efficiency and fairness. It would frustrate concerted efforts to abolish substandard wages, excessively long hours, and the other harmful practices that have dragged business down to where it is today.

The trouble is that the courts have interpreted "restraint of trade" to mean "restraint of competition." Thus, if we tried to restrain some of the vicious types of competition against which this act is directed, we would be hampered by the courts' conceptions of "restraint of trade." We might even find it difficult to establish minimum wage laws by agreement, for such agreements do restrain certain kinds of competition.

Let us examine how the law provides against monopolies. In the first place, the declaration of policy states a purpose "to promote the fullest possible utilization of the present productive capacity of industries in order to avoid undue restriction of production." Monopoly, on the other hand, let me point out, seeks to curtail or to withhold supply, and is inconsistent with this declaration.

Section 3 (a) (2) provides, as I have said before, that no code which is designed to promote monopolies can be approved.

Section 3 (a) (6) provides—and here is another important safeguard—that every code shall be subject to conditions necessary to protect consumers, competitors, employees, and others. If we couple this proviso with the declaration against monopoly, in section 3 (a) (2), we get full assurance that the fears of the Senator from Idaho are unwarranted.

The same provisions which prohibit monopoly prevent monopolistic price fixing. The declaration of policy declares in favor of increasing the consumption of industrial and agricultural products by increasing purchasing power. This is inconsistent with monopolistic price fixing, which decreases consumption by raising prices and thus reducing actual purchasing power. But we do not want to prevent every possible thing which might be called price fixing, even when no question of monopoly is involved. We all agree as to the salutary effects of prohibiting sales below the cost of production. Yet such a prohibition is certainly price fixing.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Am I in error in my recollection that the Senator from New York accepted the amendment of the Senator from Idaho on the floor of the Senate when it was offered?

Mr. WAGNER. I did not accept it. I stated that we would let it go to conference and have it considered there.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, no.

Mr. WAGNER. I am not an obstructionist in matters of legislation.

Mr. BORAH. This was not accepted on the theory that it was going to conference. The RECORD does not disclose that.

Mr. WAGNER. I state my recollection of it. The Senator and I did have some discussion about the proposal.

Mr. BORAH. After the Senator had accepted it.

Mr. WAGNER. And before. I am sure the Senator appreciates that in my discussion with him I was concerned with the restrictive effect of the words "in restraint of trade."

Mr. BORAH. I understand that perfectly. I have understood the Senator's position.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not think it is important whether I accepted it or not at that time. I have not an inflexible mind, and upon further study I became satisfied that the adoption of the amendment in full would nullify the entire act. I told the conference so. I am still of that opinion, and I think that it will be shared by any Senator who has studied the long line of cases which have interpreted the words "in restraint of trade."

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I was wondering whether or not the same professors and the same economists who drew the provisions of this bill drew the provisions of the farm bill, because in the framing of the farm bill they were against any provision which would have guaranteed cost of production to the farmer but insisted upon insuring cost of production in this bill. I agree with the Senator that the manufacturer ought to have cost of production, but I always thought that if the manufacturer is entitled to have legislation passed which will permit him to have cost of production, under no theory of government could the same right and the same privilege be denied the farmers of this country.

Mr. WAGNER. I might say to the Senator that under the farm act there is no limit or restriction imposed upon the power of the Secretary of Agriculture to make agreements; and such agreements may include provisions against sale at a price below the cost of production.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is in error. In one bill they adopted the theory of providing for cost of production, whereas in the other bill they expressly denied the theory of insuring cost of production to the farmer. The Senator will recall that the administration sent a letter here stating that cost of production could not be included in the farm bill. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] calls my attention to the fact that in the farm bill it was the parity price as distinguished from the cost of production for which the administration fought.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator is right about that, but there is a provision in the Farm Act which permits agreements to be made between the processors and the Secretary of Agriculture. There is no limit to the conditions which may be prescribed in that agreement.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes.

Mr. WAGNER. I read the bill, and I am sure about that. Whenever any of the provisions of the agreement are contrary to the provisions of the antitrust laws, the antitrust laws are relaxed to that extent. That is a very broad power.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand that; but if I may refresh the Senator's memory, that provision was with reference to the processor, not with reference to the farmer. The Sherman antitrust law, as a matter of fact, was practically set aside, as far as the processors were concerned, under the farm bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but may I say to the Senator that in the agreements with processors there may be provisions as to the prices which the processors must pay for agricultural commodities, and these prices may be "cost of production plus" prices.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; there is a possibility.

Mr. WAGNER. There is a power. Likewise in the recovery bill there is the power without any express provision. We do not want to put in any provision prohibiting what may become a desirable feature of the codes.

Mr. WHEELER. I have no fight with the Senator's idea of giving the manufacturer cost of production.

Mr. WAGNER. I understand that.

Mr. WHEELER. But I do want to say this, that when we agree here in this body that the manufacturers shall be able to agree upon cost of production, the Senator knows, and I know, that cost of production in the manufacture of goods is a difficult thing to agree upon, because one manufacturer may have his cost of production lower than another person's cost of production.

Mr. WAGNER. That is true.

Mr. WHEELER. That theory was denied by the administration with reference to the farmers because of the fact, they said, that it was so difficult to find the cost of production. I want to point out in all sincerity the inconsistency of the position taken on the part of the administration and upon the part of the leaders upon this side when it comes to this bill. When the farmers of the country were affected it was said, "You cannot have cost of production, but you have to go back to a parity price of 1909 to 1913." Consider the moral effect upon the farm population of this country. In one breath they are told, "You have to go back to the parity price between 1909 and 1913, but as far as the manufacturers of the country are concerned, they can get together and have cost of production."

I am for the manufacturers' getting cost of production, but the Senator knows that manufacturers can juggle the figures with reference to cost of production. The easiest and simplest thing they do is to produce figures which bring up the cost of production. What does cost of production mean? What are the elements which enter into it? In one manufacturing concern or one mining company they can agree upon one thing as cost of production, and another one has a different theory of cost of production.

The point I wanted to make to the Senator was not that I disagree with his contention that we should permit them as a matter of fact to agree upon cost of production, but I should like to know just when the change took place in the minds of some of these men who are working out these bills, these professors, when they assert that the manufacturers should get cost of production, and that everybody else should, whereas they took an opposite view in the consideration and framing of the farm bill.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there were no professors drafting this legislation. Besides, I have not been quoting opinions which have developed during the past few months. I have been referring to opinions held by economists for a long time, to the effect that the objectives which we all want can be reached only by a nationally planned economy. The Senator has been one of the advocates of the movement.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not in disagreement with that; I think we ought to have it. The only worry I have with reference to this provision is that when we take away or break down the Sherman antitrust law we are doing it as a permanent proposition.

Mr. WAGNER. No; we are doing it for a period of 2 years only.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; but let me point out that if we break it down for a 2-year period and permit a code to be set up during that 2-year period, and that code continues beyond that 2-year period, the Government of the United States will go in and say to a particular industry, "You are conducting your business in violation of the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law", and they will reply, "Not at all; this code and its provisions were set up under the direction of a Federal agency itself. You cannot prosecute us criminally, because of the fact that we were doing something under the sanction of the Federal Government itself."

Will the Senator agree with that? That code is set up, and it is maintained from that time on, and no United States attorney and no Attorney General of the United States could ever convict any industry in the world under the criminal provisions of the Sherman antitrust law after they have once agreed, because the intent to violate the law would not be there, and there would be no criminality in connection with it if they lived up to the code which they had adopted during this 2-year period, notwithstanding the fact that we should repeal the law inside the 2 years' time.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I have reiterated many times that we are not changing the antitrust laws as they exist today, except insofar as some changes may be necessary in order to reach the original objectives of those laws.

Mr. WHEELER. O Mr. President.

Mr. WAGNER. That is my opinion.

Mr. WHEELER. If the codes do not permit violation of the Sherman antitrust law, then let me say to the Senator that every industry in the United States and every lawyer for every industry in the United States takes the opposite view.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator misunderstood me. I say that by law we are providing new instrumentalities and new methods of applying the antitrust principle. We are doing this in order to substitute efficiency and honorable trade in place of cut-throat competition and exploitation.

Mr. WHEELER. That was the same theory on which Mr. Hoover proceeded when he was Secretary of Commerce.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not want to get into that kind of a discussion.

Mr. WHEELER. I know that was true. That was the same theory Secretary Hoover followed when he was Secretary of Commerce. That was the same theory on which Attorney General Daugherty defended his failure to prosecute violations of the Sherman antitrust law when he came before the investigating committee of the United States Senate. The Senator will recall that during that investigation the charge was made in the Senate, and it was made before the committee, that Attorney General Daugherty had failed to prosecute violators of the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. WAGNER. If I may interrupt the Senator, the charges were that he permitted monopolies to exist and monopolistic practices to continue without the intervention of the Government. In the present legislation we preserve and emphasize all the safeguards against monopoly, so that nothing can be done under this act which will create a monopoly or permit anyone to indulge in monopolistic practices. Therefore we are not apart on that proposition.

Mr. WHEELER. The difference between the Senator and myself is this, that I have not any faith in the organization which will be set up for the purpose of stopping monopolistic practices, when we permit them to agree upon prices and to arrange their own code. The Senator knows these industries just as well as I do, and he knows perfectly well that if they are given any kind of a free hand under this bill there will be all kinds of practices. Mark what I say, and let me make this prediction, that inside of the 2-year period there will be a clamor in the Senate of the United States for the strengthening of the Sherman antitrust law, because if there is an opportunity—and there will be opportunities—for abuses to such an extent under this bill, in my judgment the people of this country will demand that a change be made.

Mr. WAGNER. What the Senator fears can result only from a faithless and disloyal administration of the act. It cannot come as a result of the enforcement of the act, and I am sure the Senator, along with the rest of the Senate and myself, will be on guard to see that these diversions do not take place.

Mr. WHEELER. I know that the Senator will be on guard, because I know that he will be just as much opposed to flagrant violations of the Sherman antitrust law as I myself would be. I know that is true. But I think we should serve notice upon whoever is to administer the act that if these practices are permitted, we will see to it that whoever is in charge is checked up, and we should give them notice that when we passed the law it was not the intent of the Congress of the United States to give any industry a free hand to go out and violate the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law as it might see fit.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I think there have been a number of instances which have demonstrated the vigilance of the United States Senate both to prevent and to expose any deliberate violations of its mandate.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not know Mr. Johnson, who, it is said, will be the administrator of this bill should it become a law; but statements have been made upon the floor of the Senate to the effect that his connections are such that he would not be diligent in the administration of the law; that he has been so tied up with great financial interests that he would not protect the interest of the public. It does seem to me that the man who is appointed to administer this law should be absolutely free of all connections with any great financial institutions or with persons who are interested in great financial institutions, so that the people of the country may know, at the outset, that the man who is appointed to the position is going to see to it that the public interest is protected.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I do not want to make personal allusions, because I have no information, aside from mere rumor, as to who is to be the head of the administration of this portion of the legislation. But I want to say that I do know General Johnson, and, so far as I am concerned, I have the utmost confidence in his integrity as well as in his exceptional ability. I feel certain that if he should be put in charge the law will be administered in the interest of the public, and the public alone.

Mr. President, I wish briefly to develop the suggestion I made as to the difference between monopoly and "restraint of trade."

Monopoly is excessive control over a product. "Restraint of trade" includes a much wider range of situations. According to court decisions, restraint of trade is any lessening of absolutely free competition among parties, any agreements which might seek to direct the course of trade.

As the court said in the case of United States v. Whiting (212 Fed. 416):

> An attempt to monopolize means an attempt to get control of the industry in which the defendant is engaged. * * * There may be, I think, an unreasonable restraint of trade which does not constitute a monopoly, though there can be no monopoly which does not constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAILEY in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes.

Mr. LONG. I want to call the Senator's attention to a few lines which seem to be somewhat appropriate just now when we are trying not entirely to unfasten these gentlemen. The Senator from New York will remember the little lines—

> The devil was sick, the devil a monk would be;
> The devil was well, the devil a monk was he.

When we turn these gentlemen loose it is going to be an entirely different thing.

Mr. WAGNER. We will all be watching to see that the public interest is protected. I have confidence in the President of the United States. I have known him for many years. I have not only that confidence in his integrity which is held by all of us, I have confidence in his unusual ability and in his interest in the public welfare. If this bill shall be enacted into law he will see that it will be administered for the public welfare. I do not think we need have any further discussion about it.

Mr. President, I want to point out the probable results of putting into this act a prohibition of "price fixing." The term "price fixing", according to court decisions, has very wide connotations. It includes much more than monopolistic price fixing. It includes any concerted efforts to deal with the price problem in any way, to bring price stabilization, or even to engage in such other sorts of industrial cooperation as might tend to prevent harmful price fluctuations.

For these reasons, a prohibition of "restraint of trade and price fixing", as these phrases have been interpreted by the courts, would stand in the way of the most salutary effects which the bill is designed to accomplish.

For instance, exchange of information, which serves to make competition rational instead of blind and destructive and which thus expands trade and commerce, would be prohibited. It was declared an illegal restraint of trade in United States v. American Linseed Oil (1923) (262 U.S. 371).

Price stability, as distinguished from monopolistic price fixing, is a universally recognized necessity in order to achieve economic welfare, and yet it would be made practically impossible by the Borah amendment. This amendment would prevent even the publication by businesses of their own price schedules and their adherence to these schedules even for short periods of time. Such a practice was declared an illegal restraint of trade in the Linseed case. Yet such practices might be necessary to prevent unfair price cutting and other destructive price manipulations.

The amendment would prevent treatment of the problem of price cutters who sell below cost.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask the Senator if this bill be properly administered will it not afford a much more speedy and effective protection against destructive competition to the small business man than the Sherman antitrust law has afforded him in the past?

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator was not here when I began my discussion. That is the very point I emphasized, because under this proposed legislation the small business man will have for the first time a voice in the government of industry. Today he not only has no say; in addition, the larger enterprises absolutely destroy him and dictate to him. He is told, "Join a merger, sell out to us, or get out of business entirely."

Mr. LOGAN. Now he has no escape except to go to the courts, and that is naturally a slow process. But under the codes that might be adopted or under the proper administration of the law he could keep the big fellow off him immediately without having to go to court.

Mr. WAGNER. Precisely, and even if he goes to court, I may say that he is at a great disadvantage in a contest with a large industry—the big enterprise. And I am not speaking theoretically; I am speaking realistically.

One of the largest monopolies in this country rules by ruthless methods, such as selling below cost, employing people long hours, and paying starvation wages. There is no remedy in court to prevent that sort of thing today, and yet on the platform during campaign time we all condemn that kind of practice and the industries that indulge in it. Apparently we are in a different forum now.

I do not want to pursue this question much further. I could recite any number of practices which should be stopped, and which could not be prevented if we accept the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. Selling below cost is an example which I have given earlier in my talk. Decisions of the courts show many other practices which would fall under the prohibition of "price fixing." These would include code provisions in reference to discount practices, although discount schemes frequently give unfair preference, conceal the true state of industrial transactions, and are of a destructive nature. The amendment would prevent code provisions as to credit transactions, although credit terms are frequently so discriminatory and deceptive as to be pernicious in their effect. We have heard about that time and time again.

I have already pointed out that this amendment, if incorporated in the law, might prohibit provisions by agreement for a minimum wage, because that is price fixing; it is fixing the price of labor. It would prohibit codes dealing with the problem of distress selling and buying, one of the most pernicious practices, involving the dumping of goods upon the market. There are any number of other salutary things which the amendment of the Senator from Idaho would prohibit. So I hope that the report will be adopted, because if it were sent back to conference and the amendment originally offered by the Senator from Idaho were incorporated in the bill, there would be a nullification of the purposes of the proposed act. I reiterate for the last time—I will promise not to say it again—that I am in accord with the objectives of the Senator from Idaho, but I feel that the amendment as the conferees have written it in the bill will absolutely provide the safeguard which he seeks and the objectives which he desires to reach.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from New York calls attention to the fact that under the Sherman antitrust law there has been great concentration of wealth. I agree to that statement of fact. It has been so because neither one of the old parties has ever had the will or the purpose to enforce the Sherman antitrust law. Both the old parties, as their platforms disclose, have denounced the failure to enforce the Sherman antitrust law during the campaign, but both have failed to enforce the law after the election was over. For years the great trusts and combines of this country have furnished the sinews of war for the campaigns; they have made their heavy contributions to the campaigns of both parties; and some of them have testified before committees of the Congress that they have contributed to both parties for the purpose of being on the ground floor after the election was over. That has undoubtedly, in my opinion, had its effect in the failure to enforce the Sherman antitrust law. These great combines have for years purchased their freedom from prosecution, they are now securing what they have wanted for years—a repeal—for that is what it amounts to. All this is happening after a campaign in which the successful party pledged the people to enforce the antitrust laws.

I recall what Governor Smith said in 1928, which states the situation, I think, forcefully and correctly. I have no apology to make for the party of which I am a member for its failure to enforce the Sherman antitrust law.

Mr. WAGNER. Will the Senator say which party? [Laughter.]

Mr. BORAH. Said Governor Smith:

> During the last 7 years, under Republican rule, the antitrust laws have been thwarted, ignored, and violated so that the country is rapidly becoming controlled by trusts and sinister monopolies, formed for the purpose of wringing from the necessaries of life unrighteous profit. These combinations are often formed and conducted in violation of law, encouraged, aided, and abetted in their activities by the Republican administration, and are driving all small tradespeople and small industries out of business. Competition is one of the most sacred, cherished, and economic rights of the American people. We demand a strong enforcement of the antitrust laws and the enactment of other laws, if necessary, to control this great menace to trade and commerce, and thus to preserve the right of the small merchant and manufacturer to earn a legitimate profit from his business.

Mr. Smith was of the opinion that there had been a failure to enforce the Sherman antitrust law and that by reason of the failure to enforce that law small business had been embarrassed if not utterly destroyed. He was further of the opinion that the way to protect the small business man was to enforce the Sherman antitrust law and that, I say, is my opinion at this present hour.

The Democratic candidate for President in 1932 said:

> We advocate strengthening and an impartial enforcement of the antitrust laws, to prevent monopoly and unfair trade practices, and a revision thereof for the better protection of labor and the small producer and distributor.

Mr. President, of course, vast aggregations of wealth have been built up under the Sherman antitrust law, and both the old parties have connived at that thing. Now, after the campaign of 1932, instead of enforcing the Sherman antitrust law, improving the antitrust law, we are suspending the Shermn antitrust law. Again the campaign is over and we have the bold proposal to suspend the laws which the victorious party stands pledged to strengthen and enforce. Of course, there has been concentration of wealth, and there will be still greater concentration under the present program. The attitude of both the old political parties toward the antitrust laws has been indefensible, shameless, and it is getting no better.

At this present time, Mr. President, we are not only suspending the Sherman antitrust law but we are eliminating the two powerful bludgeons which the trusts and monopolies have always utilized for the purpose of destroying the small business man and for the purpose of building up their own great aggregations of wealth by extorting unreasonable prices from the people. Take the story of the building up of the vast wealth of the Rockefellers. What were the powerful bludgeons which they used? First were the combinations in restraint of trade, and they added to the ordinary combinations the agreements which they had with railroads to give them advantages in shipping. The second was their success in fixing prices for their commodities.

Now we are eliminating those two bludgeons, giving the powerful combinations the right, if they can, so to formulate their codes as to restrain trade and as to fix prices. Every telegram which I have received in protest against my amendment—and I think they now run close to 250 in number—has been a protest in effect against denying them the right to fix prices and to restrain trade. If we permit these people to formulate the codes there will be no codes formulated which do not in some insidious way, in some effective way according to their viewpoint, permit the fixing of prices and the restraint of trade.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] refers to the fact that we must have the right to insure the manufacturer the cost of production. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], it seems to me, called attention to a very pertinent fact in regard to that matter. When we came to fixing the cost of production for the farmer it was said it was impossible because the cost of production in one part of the country might be wholly different from that in another part of the country. So it is with reference to manufacturers. Give these vast combinations the power to fix prices according to the cost of production to them, and we will put out of business the small man who, because of his smaller plant, is unable to produce at the same cost at which the great producer can produce. The cost of production will be determined by the large interests. If the codes formulated by the great industries of the country fix the cost of production, it will be the cost of production to them, to the great industries which are organized for the purpose of production in the most effective way; but the men scattered throughout the country, in different parts of the United States, pursuing the same line of production, may not be able to produce at that cost, and yet if they do not produce at that cost and cannot produce at that cost and consequently violate the codes, they are sent to jail.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator knows, I am sure, that the specific amount is not fixed as the cost of production, but there is merely a provision in the code that no industry shall sell below its cost of production. It depends upon the efficiency in each industry as to what that cost of production is. I hope I have not been understood to say that there would be one universal price fixed throughout the country which would be established as the cost of production. No such thing is in the mind of anybody—not anyone who assisted in the drafting of the legislation nor, I am sure, in the mind of the President of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Then there will be a cost of production for every industrial plant in the United States.

Mr. WAGNER. We simply have a declaration that they shall not sell below cost of production. What that cost is depends upon the efficiency of the particular plant.

Mr. BORAH. And what the cost of production is of a vast enterprise will never be known.

Mr. WAGNER. The bill can provide an accounting system, which I think could disclose it.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; and there are not enough members of the Democratic Party to furnish men sufficient to conduct that system if we should provide it. Just imagine this vast country of ours, with all of its vast enterprises and vast industries, being supervised and censored with reference to cost of production when we give to each one the right to establish its own cost of production. We would have to go into every plant and determine whether or not it has been established according to the cost of production and whether or not it is selling under that cost of production. Shades of Stalin! Stabilization, what crimes are to be committed in thy name!

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call attention to the fact that the Department of Agriculture has a bureau which has found the cost of production of agricultural products, as it claims. But in enacting the law we disregarded that bureau because of the fact that the administration said the cost of production could not be found.

However, that is not what I rose to say to the Senator. I wanted to call his attention again to the fact that, notwithstanding the fact that the law remains in effect only 2 years, once the code is established under the supervision of the Government of the United States and we then repeal the law or it goes out of effect automatically at the end of 2 years, no criminal prosecution can be had for violation of the Sherman antitrust law if they lived within the provisions of the code which they have built up during the 2-year period. When we relax those codes, we are going to relax without question of doubt the Sherman antitrust law. No prosecution can be had criminally as long as men live within the terms of the code, even after the law has been repealed, for the simple reason that the defense of the group or the industry would be, "We did it under the supervision and direction of the Government of the United States, and consequently there could be no criminal intent."

Mr. BORAH. I believe that is true. If business men go in and formulate a code and the Government of the United States approves of that code, and the Government of the United States by approving of it has said it is not monopolistic and does not tend to monopolistic practices or permit them, we could not then go into a criminal court and prosecute a man with whom the Government has agreed that such practice was not monopolistic. This is in practice a repeal of all antitrust, antimonopoly laws. It is giving over to industry the right to combine, to fix prices, to restrain trade, to lay upon the American consumer every cent the traffic will bear.

I want to come back to the question of the fixing of the cost of production and determining whether or not this and that individual is selling under the rule established by the code that he should not sell below cost of production. Let us assume that Mr. Johnson, who has been suggested as the dictator under the provisions of the bill, the coordinator, or whatever we may choose to call him, has been named. Let us suppose that all the industries of the United States have finally formulated their codes, and they go to Mr. Johnson for approval. Do Senators realize the power being given to one individual over all the industries, all the energies, all the brain power of the people of the United States in every activity of life? He will determine what is the cost of production when he finally comes to execute the code, because that is absolutely necessary; otherwise it amounts to nothing. If we establish that a man must not sell below cost of production, we must know the cost of production to know whether or not he is violating it. There cannot be an industry over which there would not have to be constant supervision. In other words, the efforts put forth by the people of the United States in their respective lines of activity are to be censored and passed upon by one single individual or his subordinates, as I presume he will delegate some of this power to others.

As said by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], there is no appeal. When he has determined what is cost of production, when he has determined whether or not there is selling below cost of production, and a neighbor over here or a man producing in an adjoining county says he is selling below cost of production, then Mr. Johnson passes upon the question and the citizen of the United States has no power of appeal to the courts or to any other institution provided for the adjustment of affairs between citizens. Not only that; he must not only obey, but if he does not obey he may be sent to jail.

Mr. President, I think we ought to hesitate a long time before suspending the Sherman antitrust law in every instance in which it conflicts with the codes which are thus to be framed and thus to be executed. Instead of giving the citizen a chance to go into the courts of his country, instead of being permitted to make his own showing to impartial judges, he must rely alone ultimately upon the judgment of the man who is appointed to administer the provisions of the bill. He may be in Idaho; he may be in California. The place where he may have to go to determine whether or not he is a violator of the law may be a thousand or 2,000 miles from the scene of his activities, but he must make a showing before the ultimate judge. He must make showing or else he goes to jail for pursuing a legitimate industry under the American flag.

Mr. BLACK obtained the floor.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Idaho before he takes his seat?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. Does the Senator understand that under this bill it will be possible to fix a cost below which an article shall not be sold—one cost for California, another for Idaho, another for Mississippi, another for Pennsylvania; that whatever the administrator of the law concludes is fair may be fixed? Do I understand that?

Mr. BORAH. Yes and no, in the language of Andy; but mostly no. [Laughter.] In other words, it may not be only for the State of California and the State of Mississippi, but it may be for southern California and northern California. That is to say, an industry may be conducted in different parts of the State under different conditions which will determine the cost of production.

Mr. HASTINGS. And do I understand that under this bill they can have for one locality one minimum cost and for another locality a different minimum cost?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; because, as I understand the able Senator from New York, we do not propose to say that "thus and so shall be the price which we establish on the question of the cost of production", but we do propose to say, "You shall not sell below the cost of production. Whatever your cost of production is, you shall not sell below that. We will establish your cost of production by going into your plant and finding how much it costs you to produce this article; and, after we have determined that, you may not sell below that." It may be wholly different 100 miles away or 200 miles away. The cost of production in a different plant may be different; but, whatever the cost of production is, they cannot sell below the cost of production. That involves a supervision in the first instance for the purpose of determining what a particular man's cost of production is; and, secondly, whether or not he is selling below it.

Mr. HASTINGS. I wonder if any account is to be taken of the cost of getting the product from Pennsylvania, for instance, to California, in competition with somebody who is manufacturing in California. I assume that would be taken into consideration, also.

Mr. BORAH. That is a mere incident.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, we spent a long time, both in the Finance Committee and in the conference committee, trying to find out just what this proposal was; and it was impossible to get any definite answer from those who were going to be charged with the administration of the bill. First they would say generally, "We are going to prevent sales under the cost of production." Then we would say, "Whose cost of production? If Smith and Jones have adjoining factories, and one can produce at a lower cost than the other, obviously the one with the low cost can sell at that figure and run the other man clear out of business by underselling him, and the no. 2 man cannot even compete." When presented with that absurdity they said, "No; we do not mean that. We mean the general cost of production of the industry." Then we said, "Do you mean the cost of production of the highest-cost producer? Is his inefficient management to be the standard?" They said, "No; we do not mean that."

The long and short of it, as far as I can figure out, is that the administrator is going to take account of regional differences; by which is meant, in plain English, that he is going to permit lower wages to be paid in the South than in the North. That is the plain truth of it. Then, having determined a sort of regional cost of production under which they may not sell, the southerner, having the lower wage cost, will be able to undersell the northerner; and if the northerner tries to compete, he is guilty of a misdemeanor.

That is the way it will work.

Mr. HEBERT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BLACK. I do not yield further. I should like to discuss this matter for just a few minutes. I desire to do so by reason of the fact that I voted to strike title I from the bill. One of my reasons for so doing was in connection with the matter now under discussion.

I wish to say in the outset that it is manifest that the amendment of the Senator from Idaho does, as stated by the Senator from New York, nullify the purpose of the bill.

The Sherman antitrust law is inconsistent with the present measure. It is plain to anyone who is familiar with the bill and familiar with the Sherman antitrust law that both of them cannot be in effect at the same time as the law. They are thoroughly inconsistent. The Sherman antitrust law is a law to prevent combinations in restraint of trade. This bill, it is admitted, if it is to be effective—and I do not say that with any argument against the idea at this time—will create combinations in restraint of production. That is one of the objects—to destroy what is called "cutthroat competition." So the bill plainly will permit combinations in restraint of production.

The bill also will permit combinations in restraint of low price. No one can deny that. If it gives the power and authority to combine for the purpose of preventing the sale of goods below the cost of production, it necessarily means a combination for the purpose of preventing the sale of goods at low prices.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. While the prevention of cutthroat competition and exploitation of labor—which is practically the same thing—in a particular industry may reduce or, indeed, perhaps altogether prevent production, industry as a whole will benefit by its prevention, and therefore ultimately production will be increased.

Mr. BLACK. I am not making any argument on that proposition. I propose to reach that in just a few moments. I am not arguing now as to the beneficial effects of the measure or its lack of beneficial effects. I was simply calling attention to the manifest truthfulness of the statement that the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho will nullify a part of the objectives of the measure. I agree with the Senator fully and completely on that. At the same time, I voted for the amendment of the Senator from Idaho; and I desire to explain why I voted for that amendment and why I voted to strike out title I.

There is no question but that the sweatshop should be abandoned in this Nation. It will not be abandoned voluntarily. Therefore, I have reached the conclusion that its abandonment must be compelled by law. With that objective I am 100 percent in accord.

There is no question, in my judgment, but that the hours of labor must be shortened. With that objective I am in complete accord.

There is no doubt but that wages must be increased if the purchasing power of the people is to keep pace with the power of production. With that objective I am in complete accord.

I am frank to state that I should prefer to reach these objectives by direct legislative means rather than by turning over the matter to the representatives of the industries who are themselves the chief offenders; but I am perfectly willing to go along and adopt the other method if, in my judgment, the chief objective shall be accomplished, which is to increase the proportion of the joint products of capital and labor, both in the factory and on the farm, that goes to labor.

I see no advantage to be derived from raising the salary of the wage earner unless at the same time we meet the other situation, which is to decrease the exorbitant earnings of capital. I think it follows as a necessary and logical conclusion that whenever we permit the passage of a law which will increase the wages of labor, if we obtain any benefit from a national standpoint, we must decrease the unjust proportion which heretofore has gone to capital. That is very material with reference to the discussion of the Senator from Idaho, for this reason:

I am frank to state that this bill, in my judgment, is an abandonment of the competitive system in part, and in large part. I am further frank to state that in my judgment the time has come when we must not rest on the old doctrine of "Let well enough alone"; and I am perfectly willing to go to the full extent of the law which will abandon it in part, if at the same time there is some restraint to take the place of the competitive system in regulating the prices of products to the people who buy.

What is the object of competition in this country? It is to regulate prices. There is no other object. It regulates prices by having a competitor undersell his neighbor. Sometimes that competitor may, in the just course of competition, undersell his competitor by reason of increased efficiency. Sometimes he may undersell him by selling some of his products below cost. That, of course, has been one of the evils of the competitive system; but the point I am making is that if the objectives of this bill are to be carried out, we must abandon the competitive system in part. When we do that the question I ask is, What remedy the people of this Nation, the men who buy the goods, are to have in place of the regulation of price by competition?

This bill, in my judgment—and that was one of the chief reasons why I voted to strike title I from the bill—stops short of the next logical and indispensable step if we are to protect the consumers of this country.

We are not interested merely in raising wages. That is a desirable thing to do, and it must be done if our economic system is to continue its equilibrium; but we must at the same time decrease the exorbitant earnings that have heretofore gone to capital, and have brought about an unbalanced economic system. It has destroyed the economic equilibrium; and, frankly, I am not personally vitally interested in a bill which does not narrow the gap between the products that go into the pockets of labor and the products that go into the pockets of capital. Unless we can narrow that gap we have not met the situation.

Practically every thinking economist today recognizes the fact that our present condition, and previous depressions of a like nature, have been brought on by reason of the fact that capital has used its money to over extend industrial activities. It has taken its money out of the pockets of the chief people upon whom it must rely to purchase its goods, and has put it into a reservoir for unlimited expansion of industry.

I had an amendment which I had really intended to offer to this bill in the outset. I found that I had no chance of securing its adoption, and therefore did not offer it. It would have added to the part of the bill giving the right to fix the minimum hours of labor and the minimum wages the words "maximum profits." I assert that unless we take the next logical and indispensable step, when we put our hands on industry to control it we have by no means guaranteed protection to the consumers and to the people of this country, and we have simply permitted a continuance of the same unfair distribution of the products of industry and labor which has heretofore caused too much to go into the pockets of capital, and too little to go into the pockets of labor.

I am making these observations at this time by reason of the fact that the Senator from Idaho has been discussing with the Senator from New York his amendment, which would in effect nullify a part of the objectives of this bill. It would not nullify the provisions with reference to combinations to fix minimum hours of labor. If his amendment goes into effect, the industries could still meet and fix minimum hours of labor. If his amendment goes into effect, the industries could still meet and fix minimum wages.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, there is no legal authority for that contention. It has never been held that an entire industry reaching an agreement on wages or on hours of labor may not be in restraint of trade.

Mr. BLACK. May I state to the Senator, then, that I will concede that.

Mr. WAGNER. That is one of my apprehensions.

Mr. BLACK. Let me pass over that with a concession.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I will yield in just a moment. If it does not in its present form permit combinations to be formed for the fixing of minimum wages and for the fixing of maximum hours, the conferees could very easily adopt an amended provision to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho. If they could strike it out entirely, they could modify it. They could provide an additional provision that while these combinations could not be formed in restraint of trade, this should not apply to combinations fixing the hours of labor or fixing minimum wages.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, if they formed an agreement or combination on minimum wages and maximum hours of labor, would they not then eliminate a great deal of the evil about which we are trying to legislate?

Mr. BLACK. I may state to the Senator that that is exactly the point I am reaching now. I take the position that we could pass a law which would permit combinations to be formed for the fixing of minimum wages and for the fixing of maximum hours. It would not be necessary to go any farther. But when we reach that point we have then reached the point where we must determine between a law which permits the regulation of prices by competition and the regulation of prices by the Government. We have reached the point where we must regulate profits by competition or regulate profits by the Government.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, is it the Senator's opinion that it is necessary to pass any legislation to permit an agreement for minimum wages or maximum hours of labor? Can it not be done without legislation?

Mr. BLACK. I might state to the Senator that I said in the beginning that, so far as I was personally concerned, I would prefer to have that done by the Congress, where each State has two Representatives to look out for the interests of the State. I would prefer that, as I pointed out a few nights ago, rather than a system whereby we turned over to the elected representatives of the offending industries the right and power to pass the legislation which we, as the people's representatives, could pass in this body. But I am perfectly willing to go along with this administration or any other administration, or with any system of law which, in my judgment, will provide in as short a time as possible the elimination of the sweatshop, which is a disgrace to the United States, the reduction of the hours of labor, and the raising of pay to the wage earners of this Nation.

When I go a step farther, I am confronted with this proposition. This measure does not stop at giving the trade association the power to fix hours of labor and to fix wages. It provides then a system of laws whereby we shall legislatively attempt, by reason of powers delegated to elected representatives of industry, to prevent unfair competition. I am frank to state that in my judgment the time has probably come when that will be done.

Frankly, again, I would prefer to have that done by the Congress, but I am perfectly willing to go on that route in order to prevent the continuation of an intolerable economic situation which calls for aggressive and progressive action, and which calls upon every man not to stand upon any formula of the past, maybe because it has been approved in some past age or by some economist who wrote a hundred years ago. But when we reach that point, we come to this impasse. There is an effort on the part of some to insert in this bill the provisions of the Sherman antitrust law. They might just as well realize now, and they might just as well look at the facts nakedly, stripped of all their camouflage and all of their surplusage, that the Sherman antitrust law is inconsistent with the destruction of what is called "cutthroat competition." One of the two must fall. We must either abandon the competitive system, or we must keep the competitive system. If we keep the competitive system, the competitive system will fix prices. We cannot fix prices by law, we cannot limit profits by law, and at the same time have the benefit of a competitive system. The two just do not fit into our conception or philosophy of government.

Mr. President, the conclusion I reach is this: We must either stop in the powers given in this proposed law at the point where the trade association can fix the hours of labor and the minimum wages—we must either stop there and allow the competition of industry to take its course or we must frankly abandon the Sherman antitrust law, say that competition is antiquated, say that it has outworn its usefulness, say that it has proven itself inadequate to bring about a well-balanced economic situation in this country, and then attempt by legislation to take the place of price regulation by competition and substitute for it price regulation by the Government.

Let those industries which are of the opinion that the people of the United States are going to be satisfied to leave themselves to the tender mercies of combinations of capital as to fixation of prices take warning. It will not be done. I predict that after this law shall have gone into effect, as I think it will, on the very first day of the next session of Congress there will be offered a bill to amend this measure so as to limit the profits of industry. So far as I am concerned, I would be perfectly willing, and would have voted, to keep title I in the bill if it had contained, in addition to the present provisions on providing for a limitation of profits, a provision that any surplus should go into a fund for old-age pensions, for unemployment insurance, and for the use of the people instead of the surplus piling up, as it has in the past, in order to enrich a few favored houses in the large industrial centers of this Nation and to destroy the economic equilibrium which prevents us from having enough purchasing power to buy the goods of industry.

It is as inevitable as the rising of the sun tomorrow that if we abandon the Sherman antitrust law, if we permit codes to fix methods of competition, if we permit trade associations to determine where a new industry shall be located, what shall be its allotment of output, what shall be the price at which it shall sell, either directly or indirectly, it is inevitable that if the people are to be protected we must have some restraining influence on the price at which the industry sells and the profits it makes if we are to protect the purchasers of this country.

What good would it do simply to raise rates of wages if at the same time prices go up in the same proportion and we continue the unfair distribution of the joint products of labor and capital in such way that capital is overpaid and labor continues to be underpaid? A statistician has figured out that if in 1929 all of the products of labor had been equitably divided among the people who aided in producing the products, each family of this Nation would have had an income, on an average, of $22,000 a year. Instead, they had an income of $2,200. What did that mean? It meant that the joint products of labor and capital were being siphoned largely into the pockets of the few, who would not purchase the many things the manufacturers produced, and, as a result, we reached an impasse where the factories must close down because there was no money in the pockets of those upon whom the manufacturers must depend to buy the goods they produced.

Mr. President, I desired to discuss this particular feature of the bill at this time in order that my position with reference to my vote to strike out title I might be made clear. I shall vote against the adoption of the conference report. I believe that the conferees could meet again on this bill and stop this loophole. I believe they could either leave the Borah provision as it is and regulate prices by competition or adopt a substitute which would provide that, in exchange for the boon given the manufacturing interests of a suspension of the antitrust law, there will be some method whereby the public may be protected from the same old system of squeezing the last dollar out of the American public in order to concentrate more of the joint products of labor and capital into the hands of the privileged few. That is possible.

This bill as it is does not reach that desirable objective. It takes from the purchaser of manufactured goods in the city and on the farm the benefit of the regulation of prices they have heretofore received through competition, poorly as it may have worked. It takes away from them the privilege of obtaining their goods at whatever low price competition may have brought about, and at the same time it offers no substitute of any kind or manner of regulation of exorbitant prices.

I am not complaining about the bill being too revolutionary. I admit that it is revolutionary. There is no question about that. It is a departure from the settled forms of government we have followed in the past. I am not complaining of the fact that the President of the United States, with conditions as they are, has seen, with open vision, a situation which demanded bold and aggressive action. I applaud him with all my heart for being willing not to stand on the outworn and antiquated formulas of past ages to meet past conditions, but being willing to step forward boldly and aggressively in an effort to cure the economic unbalance which exists in this Nation. But I am trying to call attention to the fact that, in my humble judgment, the situation will not be remedied, nor will it be cured, nor will there be much tendency to cure it, if we merely raise the money price of labor, and at the same time take away the only remedy which the laborer has of escaping from unfair and unjust prices and exorbitant profits, by repealing the Sherman antitrust law, which was passed upon the theory that the competitive system of this country was not worn out.

What I want to do is to take one horn of the dilemma or the other. Let us not try to straddle the fence. It cannot be done. We are going to regulate prices by competition, we will have no regulation of prices, or we will regulate prices by the Government, and the time has come now for the decision to be made.

The Senator from Idaho through his amendment proposes to continue the competitive system. The bill in its present form proposes to abandon it, at least in part. One of the chief reasons why I shall vote against the conference report is that we do not face that situation squarely. We strike out the amendment of the Senator from Idaho; we thereby leave no regulation of prices by competition; and, at the same time, we substitute no other method to curb the inordinate greed of the profiteers of this Nation. It is against that that I now protest. Mr. President, that is one of the chief reasons why I shall cast my vote against the conference report.

Let us face the situation as it is. Why attempt to conceal our objection behind a multiplicity of words and a surplusage of language? Title I is rather lengthy, but it could be written in 10 lines.

However, Mr. President, just as certain as we are here we are not going to cure the ills that now beset us; we are not going to heal the disease from which this Nation is now suffering; we are not going to prevent a future recurrence of the same disease, which comes from a contraction of the purchasing power of the people, unless we face conditions fairly, squarely, and honestly, and try in some way to let more of the joint products of capital and labor go into the pockets of the man who labors and less go into the hands of those who employ the labor.

Our trouble is not in the problem of production but results from improper and unfair methods of the distribution of our products. Without expressing any view at this time as to which is to be preferred, the continuation of the competitive system to regulate prices or the system of governmental regulation of prices and profits, let us face the situation squarely and adopt one or the other; and when the conferees, if they should come back—which they may not—should continue to adhere to the abandonment of the competitive system by striking out the amendment of the Senator from Idaho to preserve the competitive system, let them substitute something of some kind or some character that will prevent the fixing of prices by monopoly.

Mr. President, no truer statement has ever been made in all history than the statement made by a famous economist—that when a number of men engaged in manufacturing are permitted to get together in a room and discuss anything with reference to their business, when they come out they will come out with an agreement fixing prices. I do not care whether the bill should expressly authorize price fixing or not; it does not have to; that will be the inevitable and logical result of trade associations. Do you mean to tell me, Mr. President, that they would meet and agree on minimum wages and maximum hours and never discuss, to any extent whatever, the question of the price at which they were to sell their goods?

During the past few years while millions of people have been out of work there have been yearly incomes amounting to millions for one individual. At that time there were men and women living in hovels, living in dirt and in filth, working long hours for low wages.

Without at all abandoning the idea that extra individual initiative should be rewarded, that there is something wrong with the operation of a system under which the people of this country have been impoverished by trickery, by the sale of worthless bonds and worthless securities, by fraud and by chicanery, and unfair exercise of undeserved power. We know that there has been something wrong with the system of distribution and it is my intention to vote to send this bill back to conference with the hope that the conferees will either adopt the Borah amendment and give us price regulation by legitimate competition, or if competitive regulation is to be abandoned, give to the public a workable substitute measure to regulate prices and profits, and protect the public from unrestrained price fixing and illegitimate profits.

Whether from natural causes or unnatural causes the profits from the products of labor and capital have certainly been very unequally distributed. There are those who believe that this is the natural result of the difference in ability, the difference in energy, the difference in thrift and insofar——

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. Just a moment and then I will yield. Insofar as it can be attributed to that I have no complaint about it. I now yield to the Senator.

Mr. GORE. I agree with the Senator entirely that rewards ought to be apportioned according to talent and energy and thrift and economy, and I agree with the Senator insofar as he implies that privileges—and I will say privileges conferred by the Government—have largely brought about the disparity in our national wealth, building up a group of rich on the one hand, and of poor on the other. I think the Government has contributed to that disastrous situation so far as that is concerned——

Mr. BLACK. I thoroughly agree with the Senator.

Mr. GORE. And, so far as the Government can do so, it ought to remedy and rectify that condition, in my judgment; not by adding other privileges, but, so far as it can, by subtracting or revoking those which have been granted. That may be impossible.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I understood the Senator from New York to say that we must work out something that would permit price fixing, or, in other words, stop dumping. The Senator from Idaho took the position that this bill, without his amendment in it, permits unlimited price fixing, and I think he is absolutely correct as to that; it seems to me there cannot be any question about it; but if the Senator from New York and those who are advocating price fixing or the cost-of-production theory wanted to cure the evils and still protect the public, it seems to me that they could have amended accordingly the provision which was written into the bill. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Idaho that if the Senator from New York wanted only to accomplish the result that manufacturers should not sell below the cost of production, that could have easily been done by modifying the amendment of the Senator from Idaho so as to provide that price fixing should not be permitted except to prevent sales below cost. In other words, that would have accomplished what the Senator from New York says he wants to accomplish under this bill, and at the same time it would have prevented industries fixing costs at any point they wanted to fix them.

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator is correct, but that would have been as objectionable to those engaged in industry as was my amendment.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, that would be objectionable to these people who want to fix unlimited prices.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. WHEELER. But if the conferees wanted to accomplish only what the Senator from New York says they did want to accomplish under this bill, they could have accomplished that purpose without leaving the door wide open. I hope the bill will go back to conference, because of the elimination of these amendments, which in my judgment safeguarded the bill to some extent. With those amendments eliminated I cannot see my way clear to vote for the conference report.

I agree with the Senator from Alabama entirely in his philosophy with reference to this bill. I want to state further that this bill seeks to set up a dictatorship in industry. I submit to the Senate of the United States that it is an impossibility to have a dictatorship of industry work satisfactorily in a democracy. We cannot have a democracy on the one hand and a dictatorship of industry working within that government at the same time. That never has worked, and it never will work.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, so far as the Senator from New York and his objections are concerned, I pay my highest tribute to the Senator from New York. I know of no man who has a keener grasp of the ideas of social justice and who has worked more diligently in an effort to bring them about. I cannot speak for the Senator from New York, but I feel sure that if he were to express himself upon the suggestion that if we control industry and give them permission to fix prices we must at the same time provide some way to regulate profits. I cannot believe that it would run counter to his views.

Mr. President, in closing, I wish to say that this is not a recently formed opinion on my part. Shortly after the 30-hour week bill had passed this body I was called into the reception room by a very prominent business man of the Nation and was given a proposed bill with the request that I study it and introduce it in this body, with the expression that the sentiment that had been crystallized with reference to the passage of the 30-hour bill would make its passage possible. It provided for the creation of trade associations. It provided for the suspension of the antitrust laws. It provided for permission to be granted for fixing hours of labor for trade associations under supervision of the Government and for fixing minimum wages.

After I had studied the bill, I asked the gentleman what provision was made with reference to protecting the other interested parties, the public, who were to purchase the goods, and what suggestion could be made with reference to the fixing of profits to a limited extent. The reply was that that could be done by an income tax. I am more satisfied than ever, since the recent revelations to this body, that I was correct when I said then that we could not regulate profits by an income tax. It may be we could do so by an excess-profits tax, but I stated then that I would not be interested in introducing a bill that left unprotected the millions of people who are called upon to buy the product of industry in this Nation.

That exact view I have stated here today. What I should like is to have the bill go back to conference and the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] retained or so modified that there would be some guaranty to the people who purchase the goods of industry in the United States that unfair prices shall not be extorted and unfair profits shall not be piled up in the hands of the favored and privileged few.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. LEWIS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator from Wisconsin desire to proceed at this time?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I shall be glad to yield if the Senator from Illinois wishes to address the Senate.

Mr. LEWIS. I would have the Senator understand that what I am about to say does not touch the bill, and I do not wish to intrude upon the time of the Senator from Wisconsin if he wishes to discuss the bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would really prefer to have the Senator proceed.

Mr. LEWIS. I do not hesitate in what I shall say except from the point that I may be disturbing the debate on the particular issue before the Senate. Does the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] expect to address the Senate on the pending question?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I expect later to discuss it further.

Mr. LEWIS. Then I do not disturb any arrangement if, for a few minutes, I take the floor?

Mr. BORAH. Not so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

THE LONDON ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

"THE VINDICATION" OF THE CHARGES MADE IN SPEECH BY MR. LEWIS, OF ILLINOIS

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rise to express the deserts of a self-vindication. I stood on this floor 2 months ago and boldly warned this honorable body that the pretense of an "economic conference" then presumably to be called at London had for its real object a mere assemblage in which to undertake, under the mask of "economy in trade", the revision of the international debts, and the injecting of new issues of money and credit. I meant and said the cancelation or the demolishment of the general debt of which we speak as the foreign debt due to the United States and the discrediting of our American dollar.

Upon another time, not long since, I told this body that the proposition of release would be presented to the United States when it entered into this Conference; that our Nation would find itself embarrassed either to enter upon the matter of the cancelation of the debts or, entering upon it, to have our people put before the world as again having been tricked in a sleight-of-hand performance called "diplomacy."

A third time—a week or so now gone, I took the floor again, and taking my information from the public press as expressed through cables, by the eminent European statesmen who were guiding the prospects of the Conference. These had asserted that there would be nothing done whatever until the matter of the debt revision or cancelation should be taken up. That this must precede anything looking to an adjustment of what is called the 'tariff question.

Upon each occasion when I made bold to assert to my colleagues of the Senate that this form of imposition would be tried and possibly succeed; it seemed impossible. I must confess that to the Senate my observations seemed not justified. Mr. President, I believe they were accepted by the Senate as one of the courtesies which they have often extended as indulgence of me than in the belief that such course as I charged would really be attempted.

At another time I had occasion to present to this honorable body the repeated threat. It was when after the international envoys, who had visited our President, had reached their homes in England and in France. They gave statements, published as being given out, saying that "there was an understanding between these representatives and the President of the United States that the matter of the debt question was to be taken up" and "was to be taken up as an essential to the convention that was called for economic trade adjustment." I then, sir, made free to assert that these uttered assurances were directly contrary to the only proposition which had been made as between the President of the United States and these eminent foreign diplomats. So far as the debt question was concerned I stated that it was agreed that debts were not to be taken up. I said, sir, that there was no foundation for the European official statements that there had been any such understanding between the President and these eminent envoys. I charged that the only statements which were made respecting the debts, as to their discussion or handling at this particular meeting, was that there should be nothing done whatever at the London meet. That that meeting was to be the economic meeting or the meeting of delegates with the object of adjusting something of a fruitful modification in what was called the embarrassing and barricading tariff regulations reared by state and nation against state and nation.

This morning, Mr. President, the distinguished Senators of the United States coming from the different States of the Union are compelled to read the concurrent and unanimous expressions vindicating my accusations. They now read as coming from these eminent gentlemen who open what is called the "conclave" in behalf of the economies which the Conference is assumed to present; is an assertion on the part of the distinguished delegates from England, concurred in by a negative statement by the representative from France, all of which to the single point that, nevertheless and notwithstanding, all the past understandings to the contrary, there was a thoroughly established agreement that the debts were now to be taken up at this Conference at London and entered upon as the first business.

It will be recalled that previously to this meet there was added the qualification that if the debt question was to be taken up for some form of revision, modification, or change from where it stood by previous arrangement—the special session for the purpose of debt negotiation—would be held here in Washington City in America.

I made myself audacious enough to assert that justification for that demand was that we might avoid that peculiar form of international seduction which in European nations began first with the invitation to one's family to some elevated social undertaking, on the assumption that there in the gleam and glitter of the lights which surrounded the scene and the bewilderment of the juggling world, the temptation would be surrendered to, and all asked yielded, because of the "lovely entertainments they have given the families of our delegates." [Laughter.] I said then that the next step would be a gathering together in the moulded spirit of condescension the delegates of America. They now being grateful that their families have received an invitation to the garden party from the King himself, and another, sir, from Buckingham Palace were presumed to be ready for surrender. That the United States ladies arrayed in their glory previously prepared in America with a view to dazzle England. Or, sirs, in such gauzy gushedness purchased at London from the immediate couturiers who had prepared their different workshops to adorn the American lady that she might vie with the lily of the field as she curtsied in obeisance to the Queen, and acknowledged the exciting wonderment of the King. [Laughter.]

Sir, I said that in this particular atmosphere, bewitching as it would seem, the American spirit would cease to assert and the nature would become one of immediate compliance. That in the surrender they would fondle any attitude our foreign debtors chose to dandle before them, and that in this delirium we would carry on to the end what they desired all, sirs, as a proof again of the bounteous and generous nature that has ever influenced America at any time where any other people have demanded that we surrender ourselves for the service of our rivals or our opponents as proof of the liberal spirit inviting "hands across the sea."

Sir, again in the expression of something of an increasing audacity on my part I dare make the accusation that this ridiculous posture would be the course. I had said from time to time to this Senate that if this were attempted, and the question of the debts were to be brought up, despite the honorable understanding that they were not to be in any wise intruded upon this occasion, it would be a proof of bad faith. I said it would be in violation of an understanding, and would do too much to deprive the American people of any respect, much less confidence, in whatever else this international gathering might undertake or conclude.

Mr. President, it is not agreeable to me that I am compelled to observe from the public announcements that all these prospective hatcheries of designing schemes, with their twirling catch phrases and their multiplications of acrobatic action as alluring seduction should be again multiplied for the seventh and eighth time against the American people. Sirs, the attempt now to return to the device, is upon the assumption that the American people either have not ordinary wisdom enough to see the fraud that is again to be played upon them, or that they lack the manhood and courage of a real nation to oppose and defeat the projects.

Mr. President, I took this moment, yielded by fellow Senators from the subjects to which they were appropriately addressing themselves, to express an impending fear—the fear of injustice to be done our delegates. Now, sirs, I invite you to recall that some months ago—under the guise of what was called "disarmament conventions", when there had been an agreement between those who met at Lausanne that certain defined subjects would not be taken up, and these subjects nevertheless were, by chicanery, taken up; and a form of treaty threatened, the represenatives of Germany walked out of the assemblage.

It might have been deplored that such action broke up the convention and left it with the record of nothing accomplished. Here we recall that in something of a short while after, when the delegates for a specially assigned reason were summoned to a meeting, the representatives of Italy, feeling that they had been somewhat overcome; first by pretense and then by boldness of deception; by which was attempted in the gathering that which was a direct violation of the understanding of the call; the Italians, who felt they were deceived, walked out from the place of assembly.

The result was that an agreement was had for another meeting to be held at a separate place. This, as my eminent colleagues will recall, took on a final consummation by the later proposition by the head of the Italian Government, speaking politically, of something of a proposed agreement as a peace pact between France, England, Italy, and Germany making the fourth. This, we are told, is still pending in some form. What will be the result we cannot say, but we may hope for the best. This is now "signed up" on July 15 at Rome.

But, Mr. President, I wish to bring you now to the complete crux of my rising at this moment.

I make bold to advise and warn the eminent representatives of America that there is afoot, on the part of these eminent sources to which we have united ourselves in presumably an economic conference, that this question of the debts will be first injected upon the proceedings. That then will be projected the debt dispute upon what they call the "agenda", for nothing could induce these eminent diplomats to use the word "program." It is too American. [Laughter.] "Agenda" is a fascinating word. It reminds one of the dear lady who declared her perpetual admiration for her pastor because of the manner in which he pronounced "Mesopotamia." [Laughter.] But it is in this agenda they are to project the question of the debts at once, and America is to be put in the position as follows:

Our United States, acting through delegates, out of courtesy and consideration for what might be the amenities of the occasion, must enter into that which has now become the principal object—first of conversation, then of conference, then of debate, then of disposal of the final judgment against us—the debts. Then, if the United States shall be silent, she is to be put before the world as the actor of very disrespectful conduct. We will be charged of having emulated what was done by the delegates of Italy upon the occasion to which I have alluded, and the action of the delegates of Germany. Those who arose and walked out rather than to surrender to the position where they could be entrapped. Sirs of the United States, it is expected that by yielding we will subject ourselves to be bound by what may be decided there. Sirs, we are to be condemned to obedience, irrespective of the previous understanding that the subject matter of the debts was not at the London meet to be entered upon; and that if under any circumstances the debt was to be entered upon anywhere; it is to be at America, in Washington——

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCARRAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LEWIS. I do.

Mr. FESS. I was impressed with what the Senator said in reference to Germany's delegates walking out, and also in reference to the Italian delegates walking out on another occasion. I was wondering whether the Senator was contemplating the suggestion that if, after it was understood that the debts were not to be considered, they decided to do it, our delegates ought to do what the other delegates did on other occasions and whether the Senator is contemplating offering any resolution here making that suggestion?

Mr. LEWIS. I reply to the eminent Senator from Ohio by saying that the very subject to which he has appropriately drawn my attention was the justification of my rising and assuming to address this honorable body upon the subject of my remarks. These gentlemen, the foreign delegates who are dealing with America, and statesmen of the countries which they represent, know full well that the very temper of American good manners, the gentle spirit of American accommodations, the kindly nature that holds our fellow men close to friendships wherever possible, will make it impossible for the United States of America to do the thing which could be imputed before the world as a breach between nations, and disclosing enmity within itself against assembled friends. Such would invite all the nations of earth to conclude that a very serious barrier has arisen as between the United States and all other nations engaged at the council table. Conscious, as our debtors are, that we would not allow such construction, if possible to avoid, to put our people in the exact position which I say to the distinguished Senator from Ohio, is the foreign debtor's object. They know that we would not retire, nor our delegates withdraw, and give the semblance of newly awakened enmities which would shatter the hopes of those who dream of peace and long for a new revived friendship of the world. The foreign debtors know that such evil presumption would follow. They know that to avoid this semblance we would sit supinely, or, if you please, sir, resignedly, without opening a conflict, until our debtors had concluded whatever propositions upon the matter of debts they desired to present. Then, sirs, the embarrassment to America would be how she would respond to it. Would our Nation take it up to deal with it by delegates unauthorized, or treat it in silence, and proceed on the subjects which was the sole occasion of the gathering?

Sirs, I proclaim that because of the consciousness of the eminent foreign representatives from abroad and of the conviction that the United States would not walk out, and would not do that which would give the evidences of a newly lighted hatred among people; we are threatened with being imposed upon by having the subject put before us in the very manner which some of us—myself particularly—had assumed, and which we had advised our countrymen we neither would endorse nor forgive.

I say to my learned and able friend from Ohio that I rise now to strike again a note of warning to our American delegates as I accuse that the whole scheme is now based anew upon the theory that as the United States delegates would not break up the convocation by rising and leaving the chamber it is assumed that they would be compelled to endure to the end whatever propositions may be presented, and then leave our country in the embarrassment—possibly the following:

First, for our delegates to wait in their places for the announcement of our situation to be conveyed here to the President. Then await his response, or that of whatever committee shall be adopted as the source of authority. Then, sirs, in that length of time necessary for response the effort will be made and continued by propaganda for the conversion of the delegates, one by one. This through the slow processes, but the ever-sure conclusion, of social amenities, social favors, royal advances. These have ever been the timely and very appropriate proceedings that ever bewilder the senses, gladden the nature, lift up, as it were, the flattered America, to yield all in turn for her people having been entertained with nourishing and multiplied compliments. Sirs, during all this time it is believed by our debtors that a spirit will seize and animate the American delegates into accepting the very thing that they were forbidden to enter upon at first, or ever surrender to at all.

I feel that an advantage has been taken of the American delegates by the demands expressed at the opening of such proceedings as are now reported, the debts and the revising our money policy. Here, sir, I make bold, in this honorable body, to trust that our voice may go out to our people and to our representatives at London petitioning that in the discharge of their duties, in the execution of their excellent sense as we appeal to them that they will hold strong to their patriotism and not forget their duty to this, their dear homeland. Let them continue having ever before them the wish of America that debts due her shall be paid and true justice done her.

Sirs, from this eminence, this United States Senate, we inform our delegates that if there shall be any qualifications to the terms, figures, or dates in the contract of performance, it will not be at the present London meet for trade adjustment. Sirs, we may sympathize with the situation of any foreign country in debt to us, we may believe in its professed inability to pay, yet we should treat the question, when the reasons of that inability have been presented, and at a proper place—as responds to the kindness of our nature, as fulfills the generosity of our spirit—and as is the nature of the United States.

Sirs, now to have the advantage taken of us in the manner as now reported is inexcusable. Our surrender to the intimidation would be on our part a form of cowardice. Speaking for my confidence I can hardly conceive that those who as Americans represent us will fail to note that this peculiar entrapment has as its object placing the United States in such an embarrassing position that we could not refuse to enter into a discussion on the subject, because we are now the guests of our host, sitting at his table, breaking his bread, drinking the beverage of his hospitality.

In my concluding utterance may I pray Heaven's guidance to the delegates from the United States, that there shall be no time when weakness would surrender their sense of justice. No form of adulation or flattery beguile and seduce them from that which is the duty of Americans. That each and all will stand up, stand out, fixed in patriotic resolve to protect and preserve this, our immortal America.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I have been very much interested, as I always am, in what has been said by my distinguished friend the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS]. I agree with him that a very unfair advantage has been taken of the American delegates to the Economic Conference.

The question of the debts was not to be taken up at this convention. It was not on the agenda, as my learned friend has suggested. But the effort throughout the years, both here and abroad, to have the foreign debts canceled has been so persistent, so insidious, and, in many respects, so deceptive that some of us suspected that the first thing that would be thrown into the discussions of the Economic Conference would be the debts; and here they are.

I agree with my friend that it would be utter cowardice on the part of the American delegates there to surrender to the foreign viewpoint; no discussion of the debts at this Conference should be permitted. I see nothing for them to do except boldly and courageously to state to the representatives of other powers that under no circumstances will they discuss the debts. If it is insisted that the debts be taken up, then our representatives should immediately return to the United States, as our representatives returned from the Geneva Conference in 1927 when the American viewpoint was completely rejected by Britain and others.

In the first place, our representatives over there have no authority to discuss the debts. That is a problem which lies wholly with the Congress of the United States. It is a question of national policy. The Congress has adopted a resolution which outlines our national policy on that question, and only Congress can alter that policy. We have stated as a Nation, through the Congress, that there will be no revision, no cancelation, of the debts. That is the mandate of the only authority which can state a mandate on the subject. Consequently all our representatives there have to do, or all the President needs to do in any official message, is simply to state that there is nothing to discuss. Our policy is plain: They owe us the money, we have their bonds, they are in our Treasury, they can either pay or default; but there is no ground for discussion of any kind. If foreign powers insist on discussing the question, anyhow, then the only honorable thing our delegates can do is to return to the United States forthwith, withdrawing from the Conference.

Foreign diplomacy is steeped in deception. There was an understanding definitely agreed upon that the debts would not be discussed, and the very opening statement of the British Prime Minister contains the suggestion that nothing can be done without a settlement of the debt question. Then, it seems to me, our delegates might as well come home. We have enough trouble here. A great American humorist and wit has said that we never lost a war and never won a conference, and that will be true in this case.

I fear that when our delegates come back perhaps Uncle Sam will not have a shirt left.

Mr. President, I think, too, that all foreign powers dealing with our delegates ought to know that the latter have no authority on debts. Let us not permit them to be misled. Only Congress can decide this question. Congress has decided it, and these foreign powers are just wasting their breath now trying to talk to delegates over there without authority about the settlement of a question with which they have nothing to do.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. NYE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Cutting	King	Russell
Austin	Davis	La Follette	Schall
Bachman	Dickinson	Lewis	Sheppard
Bailey	Dieterich	Logan	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dill	Lonergan	Smith
Barbour	Duffy	Long	Steiwer
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Stephens

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed a bill (H.R. 5909) to transfer Bedford County from the Nashville division to the Winchester division of the middle Tennessee judicial district, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (H.R. 5790) to provide for organizations within the Farm Credit Administration to make loans for the production and marketing of agricultural products, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, to provide a market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the Vice President.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H.R. 5909) to transfer Bedford County from the Nashville division to the Winchester division of the middle Tennessee judicial district, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

RETURN BY THE PRESIDENT OF RAILROAD RELIEF ENROLLED BILL

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCARRAN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

To the Senate:

In compliance with the request contained in Senate Concurrent Resolution 5, agreed to June 12, 1933, I return herewith the bill S. 1580, an act to relieve the existing national emergency in relation to interstate railroad transportation, and to amend sections 5, 15a, and 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 13, 1933.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5755) to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, as a substitute for the motion made by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], I move to recommit the report to the committee of conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is not in order, because the House has agreed to the conference report.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Very well. Mr. President, I intend to make some reference to the manner in which the Senate conferees handled certain amendments which were adopted by this body while the bill was in conference.

We have had upon several occasions at this session discussions of the manner in which amendments adopted by vote of the Senate have been eliminated or emasculated in conference. One such reference was made in connection with the so-called "Johnson amendment", relating to the exemption from taxation of publicly owned electric light and power plants under the emergency tax bill. In that connection I wish to quote briefly from the remarks of the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] on June 6, which are to be found at page 5086 of the RECORD. He said:

> Before, sir, discussing the proposition that is involved in this bill I want to refer very briefly and, I trust, very respectfully to the manner of legislation which has grown up in this body—a system, sir, which I think at the very earliest opportunity that presents itself should be abrogated and eliminated.
> Here was an amendment to an important bill, an amendment which means much to about 100 municipalities in this land. It was adopted by a very considerable majority of the Senate. It was an amendment which exempted, as governmental activities have ever been exempted in the past from tax bills, the municipally owned or publicly owned power plants which generated electricity and sold that electricity to the people.
>
> The amendment, thus agreed to, went to conference. It went to conference—and I say this not in any invidious way—presented by those who were opposed to it, and necessarily, although I have no doubt they did all they could do under the rules of the Senate, under those circumstances an important bit of legislation had ultimately perhaps very little chance.

Continuing to quote from the senior Senator from California:

> Mr. President, this is a system which has grown up in this body for which none is responsible, and against which, perhaps, we ought not too severely to inveigh; nevertheless, it is a system which ought not to be tolerated. Where legislation is passed by the Senate, in conference it ought to be in the hands of those who are friendly to it rather than in the control of those who are unfriendly to it.

In the past out of that system certain things have resulted which none of us like to recall, and the mode by which legislation in conference is accomplished—and accomplished at variance with the will of the body which passes it—is a system which should not, as I insist, be continued here, and which I trust in the very near future we may be able to abrogate entirely.

Mr. President, I subscribe in toto to the criticism which the Senator from California directed on that occasion against the conferees in connection with the so-called "emergency tax bill."

In connection with the pending conference report the Senator from Mississippi stated on the floor of the Senate before the bill went to conference that he intended to make a fight for "some of the amendments." In my judgment, Mr. President, that remark should have disqualified the Senator from Mississippi from service upon the committee of conference. This body is entitled to have made on its behalf a fight for every amendment which the Senate adopts to proposed legislation.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. CUTTING. May I call to the attention of the Senator, along the lines he is pursuing, the fact that Mr. COLLINS of Mississippi in the House made a motion to instruct the conferees to accept the so-called "Borah amendment", and that the motion to instruct was defeated on account of the statement of Mr. BYRNS, to this effect:

Let me say to my friend from Mississippi that we have a request from one of his own Senators, Senator HARRISON, saying it was most important that all of these amendments go into conference, and I hope the gentleman will not insist on his motion.

In other words, if Mr. BYRNS was correct in his statement, one of the Senate conferees made objection to the House accepting the amendment adopted by the Senate.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator's remarks add force and effect to what I have already said. We are confronted by a situation in which the Senator from Mississippi, the chairman of the conference committee, called the House leader and asked him to prevent the House from going on record on any of the amendments agreed to in the Senate, in order that they might be in conference and then, as the Senator from Idaho suggests in an aside to me, be abandoned.

Mr. President, this is a very important issue, and I think one which the Senate should frankly face. Unless we are to have on the part of the conferees representing the Senate a whole-hearted and determined effort to secure the adoption of amendments which this body places upon pending legislation, then, in truth and in fact, we might just as well abandon any further legislative effort in this Chamber; we might just as well delegate all the power which may be exercised by this body to a committee of conference and permit them to write our legislation in the first place, as we now find they are writing it in the second and most important phase of legislative procedure.

Mr. President, it took a long fight in this body in an effort to check and to curb the unjustifiable practices of conferees. It was a common practice years ago for conferees to exceed their authority by taking into consideration matters which were not actually in conference. To guard itself against that practice the Senate was forced to adopt a rule which made conference reports subject to a point of order if the conferees went outside the field of difference between the two Houses. Insofar, however, as matters relating to this conference are concerned, the conferees have not violated that rule. In my opinion, however, they have violated all the unwritten rules of the Senate, in that they have frankly and obviously abandoned the position of the Senate because, forsooth, a majority of the Senate conferees were not in sympathy with the attitude of the Members of this body.

We often suspect such a situation with regard to important legislation, but it is seldom that we have evidence of it in the written record and can prove it by words of House members of the conference committee. The amendment to which I am about to refer may perhaps not seem to be such an important one, but it illustrates the case in point and evidences just as flagrant a violation of the responsibility and the duty of the conferees as though it were an amendment which went to the heart of this bill. I have in mind the amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], which provided for the creation of a liaison officer in the Civil Service Commission to represent the interests of the Federal employees. I now refer to the RECORD of June 10, and I shall in a moment quote from page 5697.

Mr. President, what was the duty, what was the responsibility, what was the obligation of the Senate conferees with respect to that amendment? Clearly, under all the ethics of long parliamentary history, it was the responsibility, it was the duty of the Senate conferees to enter that conference whole-heartedly in favor of every amendment which the Senate had placed upon this bill, to make the best fight they knew how to make for the amendment, and to urge upon the conferees representing the other House, first, acceptance of the Senate amendment; second, if that were not possible, to endeavor to arrive at some compromise. Did the Senate conferees discharge their responsibility, did they discharge their obligation to the Senate with respect to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana? They most certainly did not. I read:

Mr. CONNERY. It has been brought to my attention that a liaison officer was provided by a Senate amendment, who was supposed to represent the Federal employees and act as a sort of advocate for employees who might be discharged without cause or something of the sort. I understand that that was stricken out by the conferees. What was the purpose of that?

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the gentleman the purpose of striking it out. It was an amendment from which the Senate receded. The House conferees were not asked to adopt that Senate amendment.

It was inserted in the Senate, and before there was any opportunity for action the Senate conferees receded and left us with nothing to do.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CUTTING. Has the Senator called to the attention of the Senate the language used by Mr. RAGON with regard to the Senator's amendment?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am coming to that.

Mr. President, as a matter of principle, if this body has any desire to guard jealously its prerogatives, it would send the conference report back and ask for a further conference, if there were nothing else involved in the whole conference report. It presents the issue foursquare to the Senate as to whether or not we propose longer to tolerate this sort of action on the part of our representatives, solemnly appointed and solemnly obligated under all the traditions of parliamentary history to stand in behalf of amendments adopted by the body which they represent.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. As one member of the conference, may I say, as to that proposition, that the statement that is made in the RECORD as read by the Senator is not based upon facts. I am sure every other Senate conferee would make the same statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will accept the Senator's statement, of course, but it seems to me very strange that such a statement should have been made by a responsible Member of the House of Representatives without justification. I am sure the gentleman who made it will no doubt desire to correct it now that it has been called to his attention.

Mr. President, the Senate adopted to this bill an amendment which I happened to offer. It was an amendment which was originally offered in 1921 by my illustrious father. It was offered on another occasion by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] who is recognized as the leader of the progressive group in this Chamber. Prior to offering the amendment I conferred with him concerning it and inquired whether or not he intended to offer it. Upon learning that he had been so pressed with other matters that he had not had an opportunity to prepare the amendment, I prepared and offered it.

There was no question that the Senate of the United States fully understood the entire amendment which I had offered and the principle which it sought to write into the law. It was not one of those amendments which under certain customary procedure, not justified by the rules, are sometimes accepted on the part of Senators in charge of bills with the understanding that they will be taken to conference. The amendment was written into the bill after it had been debated fully. It was adopted by a record vote. The amendment was agreed to by an overwhelming majority of the Senate. The vote is to be found on pages 5420 of the RECORD of June 9. The yeas were 56, the nays were 27, and not voting 13. The amendment providing that income-tax returns shall be public records and open to inspection was adopted by more than a 2 to 1 vote. It was adopted because the overwhelming majority of the Members of this body believed that the provision would be effective in closing the gaps in our income-tax laws and in compelling income taxpayers in making out their returns to give an honest and a fair statement of their incomes.

There is no question in my mind but that the investigation conducted by the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency and the evasion of the tax laws revealed by that investigation had great weight in determining Senators that they would vote for the amendment. In other words, the amendment may not be brushed aside as unimportant. It was regarded by 56 Members of this body as one of the most effective means which could be employed to stop tax evasion upon the part of those who possess large incomes.

The conferees reported the amendment with an amendment. As it passed the Senate it was in identical language with the language which had been previously adopted in 1924 as offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. It proposed to amend section 55 of the Revenue Act of 1932 by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following:

> Except that all returns made under this act after the date of enactment of the National Industrial Recovery Act shall constitute a public record and shall be open to examination and inspection.

The conference report strikes out the amendment and inserts the following:

> And all returns made under this act after the date of the enactment of the Industrial Recovery Act shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection to such extent as shall be authorized in rules and regulations promulgated by the President.

Mr. President, to some Senators giving a casual reading to that amendment it may seem that some advance has been made from the point of view of those who desire to see income-tax returns made public records in order that we may stop the wholesale and flagrant violation of income tax laws by those with large incomes. I want to refer to the act of 1926, which in the act of 1928 and in the act of 1932 was continued in full force and effect. It is section 257 of the income tax law of 1926:

> Returns upon which the tax has been determined by the Commissioner shall constitute public records, but except as hereinafter provided in this section and section 1203 they shall be open to inspection only upon the order of the President and under rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary and approved by the President. Whenever a return is open to the inspection of any person, a certified copy shall, upon request, be furnished—

And so forth.

> The Secretary and any other officer of the Treasury Department, upon request from the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Finance of the Senate, or a select committee of the Senate or House especially authorized to investigate returns by a resolution of the Senate or the House, or a joint committee so authorized by concurrent resolution, shall furnish such committee, sitting in executive session, with any data of any character contained in or shown by any return.

Mr. President, while it may seem upon a first reading that the amendment reported by the conferees is a substantial gain, it is shown by reference to the existing law that as a matter of fact it is not a substantial change, because the conference report does not provide that the regulations concerning the examination and inspection of income-tax returns shall be promulgated by the President. Oh, no! What it provides is that income-tax returns shall constitute public records and shall be open to public examination and inspection "to such an extent as shall be authorized." Obviously and clearly, this can be construed only as conferring upon the President the right to determine what portion and how much, if any, of an income-tax return may be examined and inspected. It confers upon the President not only the power to provide that public inspection and examination shall be made at reasonable hours and under reasonable safeguards, but it goes to the substance of the whole question. We already have in the act authority on the part of the President to grant the right to inspect these returns.

This language must be further construed and must be judged by the Senate in the light of a further fact: The Treasury Department is honeycombed with appointees of the past administration. They are unalterably opposed to making any part of income-tax returns public records. They have already sought to bring this matter to the attention of the President of the United States in an unfavorable light.

So much for the manner in which the Senate conferees and the House conferees have changed the language of my amendment. Now, let me refer to this interesting RECORD of June 10, in which the House conferees were responding to interrogation concerning the fate of certain amendments adopted by the Senate.

This is not the same gentleman who spoke concerning the attitude of the Senate conferees on the Wheeler amendment. This is Mr. RAGON speaking. The Senator from Idaho suggests that he will soon be a Federal judge. I read from page 5694:

> Mr. KVALE. As far as the gentleman knows, did the House conferees feel that it was fair to the House and to the Senate to ask them to delegate this important power to the Executive instead of specifically providing in the bill what measure of publicity should be granted, and in the report which the conferees brought back to the House?
> Mr. RAGON. I may say to the gentleman from Minnesota that we did not have time, as he knows, especially when we were told by the leaders on both sides that we wanted to adjourn tonight—

That was on Saturday—> to consider every amendment as thoroughly as we would have liked. We felt that if we could turn over the gigantic industries of this country to the President and delegate the tender interests of the laboring classes of this country to the President of the United States we certainly could depend on him for the little thing of promulgating rules that would give to the man who had the right to look at them the right to inspect the income-tax returns of the country.

> Mr. KVALE. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?
>
> Mr. RAGON. I yield for a question if it is not a statement. I am very tired.
>
> Mr. KVALE. Is the gentleman willing, as one of the conferees, to grant the House the privilege of expressing its will regarding publicity on income-tax returns?
>
>
> Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman from Arkansas 5 additional minutes.
> Mr. RAGON. The gentleman knows I am not going to impose my frail form here in front of the House of Representatives if it wants to rush headlong without consideration into this matter, but I do suggest to the gentleman as a practicable proposition that we fought for 2 hours over that provision and this is the best we could get in the way of a compromise at this time. We are not writing a revenue bill here, Mr. Speaker; we are trying to put to work 12,000,000 people and save the broken-down industries of this country. That is the prime consideration to remember in this bill.
>
> Mr. KVALE. Then the Senate conferees did not sustain the position of their own body?
>
> Mr. RAGON. That is a thing they will have to take up over there, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes.

Mr. LONG. As I read that—I should like to attract the attention of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] at this point—as I heard the Senator from Wisconsin read that statement, Mr. RAGON was called to task over in the House as to why they had not kept the La Follette amendment in the bill; and Mr. RAGON said, "We did our best to keep it in there, but the Senate conferees did not seem to want it."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. He did not say the Senate conferees did not seem to want it. What he said was:

But I do suggest to the gentleman as a practicable proposition that we fought for 2 hours over that provision and this is the best we could get in the way of a compromise at this time.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Obviously, the statement made by Mr. RAGON must be read and interpreted in connection with the second interrogatory of Representative KVALE, and Mr. RAGON's reply, which was as follows:

Mr. KVALE. Then the Senate conferees did not sustain the position of their own body?

Mr. RAGON. That is a thing they will have to take up over there, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will yield further, reading language as I have been taught to understand the niceties of grammar—though they do not entirely govern—it seems that both the niceties and the spirit are that Mr. RAGON said, "We could not get any better publication than this"; and when Mr. KVALE said, "Then they did not sustain the Senate position?" he said, "They will have to answer to the Senate for that, and not to us."

The Senator from Mississippi probably wanted to say something on that matter, and I was hoping that we might find out just what the bug under the chip was—just how it occurred.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I will show the Senator the bug under the chip when the Senator from Wisconsin has finished his speech, and when the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] has finished his speech. I hope the courtesy will be shown the conferees of permitting them to close the argument on this subject.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I submit that no person can read the RECORD to which I have adverted without coming to the conclusion that the impression which Mr. RAGON desired to leave, and the impression which he did leave upon his interrogator, Representative KVALE, was that the House conferees had fought for 2 hours for this amendment providing that income-tax returns should be made public records, and that this was the best compromise which the House conferees fighting for a Senate amendment could obtain from the Senate conferees.

Of course it is not necessary, I presume, to point out that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who was in charge of the conference, voted against the amendment which I had offered in the Senate.

Mr. President, another important amendment was agreed to in the Senate—the one offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK]. I shall not, in the course of my remarks, refer to his amendment, although I think it clearly evident that the Senate conferees abandoned his amendment, as they did the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], prior to the time when the conferees had their first meeting.

I want also, Mr. President, to get clearly before the Senate the issue concerning the amendment which I offered.

Had the conference report provided that the income-tax returns should be public records and open to public examination and public inspection under rules and regulations to be promulgated by the President, I should have been perfectly willing to accept that amendment; but the conferees went further. They wrote into the law that these income-tax returns should be public records and open to examination and inspection to such extent as might be provided in rules and regulations promulgated by the President.

Mr. President, I debated this question upon its merits when it was before the Senate.

I stated to the Senate that we have had an experience in Wisconsin under our State income tax law, under provisions now existing concerning Federal income-tax returns; namely, that they are secret and are not open to inspection. We have also had an experience in the last 10 years during which returns have been public records, just as property-tax returns are public records, just as other records concerning public transactions are matters of public record.

In the period between 1914 and 1920 we had secrecy of income-tax returns in Wisconsin, and an audit of the years 1916 to 1920 when secrecy prevailed resulted in the assessment and collection, in that one State alone, of $3,500,000 in additional taxes, due to the fact that corporations and individuals making income-tax returns under the veil of secrecy had willfully, wrongfully, and unlawfully underestimated their actual incomes.

As a result of those disclosures, in 1923 income-tax returns in the State of Wisconsin were made matters of public record. Since that time, during the last 10 years, there has been no such willful, flagrant and general understatement of income and willful evasion of taxes. It has accomplished two purposes, the same two purposes which would be accomplished if such a provision were written into the Federal law. On the one hand, it has put upon the individual and the corporation, sitting down to make out their income-tax returns, an additional spur to be accurate, honest, and fair with the State government in making out the returns. In the second place, it has put an additional spur behind those who are in the employ of the Wisconsin State Tax Commission. Knowing that these returns are a matter of public record, knowing that any citizen who desires to do so may go to the office and, under proper safeguards, examine those returns, the auditors and those responsible for the enforcement of the law are put upon their mettle to make certain that they do not make any errors or any mistakes, either willfully or otherwise.

Mr. President, there is not a Senator here who, in my opinion, down in his heart would not be willing to recognize that if we had had this provision in the law during the past 10 years, so far as the Federal Government is concerned, these flagrant, willful, and unconscionable evasions and understatements of income revealed by the investigation of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee would never have taken place. Is there any man in this Chamber who thinks that Charles E. Mitchell would have sat down and made out his income-tax return and gone through a hocus-pocus, slight-of-hand transaction with his wife in order to escape his fair share of the burden of government, if he had known that that income-tax return, and the one of his wife, were to be matters of public record, and open to public inspection? Of course not. The answer is inevitably in the negative.

Does anyone in this Chamber suppose that the J. P. Morgan partners would have indulged in the practices in which it has been revealed they indulged if they had known, as they sat down across the table from their high-priced tax counsel, that the returns which they were making out were matters of public record and would be open to the inspection of citizens, under proper safeguards?

In this connection I want to read an editorial appearing on the front page of the Washington Daily News, the Washington publication of the Scripps-Howard newspapers—

VITALLY IMPORTANT

The Senate last night voted full publicity for income taxes and to tax securities heretofore held tax-exempt.

There are rumors that one or both of these amendments may not survive the tax conference between the two Houses.

The large and decisive vote by which the Senate included these provisions in the national recovery bill cannot be ignored by the Senate conferees, and, we believe, will not be ignored by the House conferees. The White House obviously recognizes these proposals as part of the new deal.

The publicity clause is of particular importance now when investigations are revealing some of the very wealthy as having paid no income tax the last 2 years. Tax evasion will be made harder by full publicity.

Legalistic arguments revolving about the taxation of Government bonds should not deter the tax conferees. The Senate finally has recognized that this rich source of Federal revenue must be tapped. We believe the courts will do the same. In any case Congress can do no less than put the issue to the test.

Mr. President, appearing upon the front page of this morning's Washington Herald, the Washington newspaper published by Mr. Hearst, there appears this editorial:

INCOME-TAX EVILS

Congress in the closing hours of its present session can strike a double blow at pernicious evils of the income-tax system.

1. It can and should make all income-tax returns, individual and corporate, subject to public inspection, as proposed by Senator LA FOLLETTE in his amendment to the national recovery bill.

2. It should return to the same bill the amendment of Senator CLARK which would make all bonds issued by the Federal, State, or municipal governments subject to taxation. This proposal was stricken from the bill in conference between the Senate and the House.

The income-tax publicity clause should be made more explicit. It should make the publicity compulsory, instead of leaving determination of this point in the hands of the President.

A President with the interests of the people at heart would make them public, but a President who wished to protect the tax dodgers would not make them public.

There is no reason why tax returns should not be made public.

The evil that comes from secrecy in tax returns has been dramatically portrayed to the Nation through the Morgan inquiry.

Secrecy regarding tax payments permits the income-tax system to continue as a virtual racket, one of the most costly rackets to which the country is being subjected.

The public is entitled to fullest knowledge about anything that it is as much interested in as the taxes it pays.

It is a piece of impudence on the part of the Government to attempt to withhold such knowledge.

Only the influence of high financiers—high in the sense of their ability to evade Government taxes—is responsible for this withholding of information the public should have.

The devices and artifices, the bordering-on-illegality methods by which enormous income taxes are evaded all serve to emphasize the value to the Nation at large in income-tax publicity.

At least then the public will have knowledge of those who are honorably and fully meeting their tax obligations, and of those who are escaping. Upon this knowledge proper measures can be instituted either for collecting taxes which have been evaded or for bringing the tax dodgers within the law.

Thus, if returns are made fully public, the injustices and incongruities of tax returns would bring the whole income-tax system into the discredit which it deserves.

Of a kind with the income-tax secrecy is the present opportunity affording big incomes to avoid taxes by the simple expedient of investing in tax-exempt securities.

There is no reason for opposing Senator CLARK'S amendment, unless the Government wishes to afford the big tax dodgers legal opportunities to evade their taxes.

Taxation of income from present tax-exempt securities would probably add several hundred millions of dollars to the national revenues.

Prohibition of tax-exempt securities would also end an unjust situation which is tantamount to class legislation.

I could go on at much greater length to buttress the argument for the rejection of this conference report and for sending the bill back to conference and for asking the House conferees to give the House of Representatives an opportunity to express themselves upon this vitally important amendment.

I endeavored to offer, as a substitute for the motion to agree to the conference report, a motion to re-refer it to the committee; but I find that the House has already agreed to the conference report, so that such a motion is not any longer in order. But if we reject this report and ask for a further conference with the House, we can within a very short space of time obtain a record vote in the House of Representatives upon the three important amendments which have either been eliminated or emasculated by the conference committee.

I have made what I believe to be a careful investigation of sentiment in the House of Representatives, and I state my judgment upon this floor, that if the House of Representatives has an opportunity to vote upon this amendment to provide for making income-tax returns matters of public record, they will adopt it by an overwhelming vote.

Mr. President, when the conference report comes up for vote, Senators will have to decide whether or not they wish to afford an opportunity to the Members of the House of Representatives to vote upon the Borah amendment, to vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], providing for taxation of heretofore tax-exempt securities, and the amendment which I have offered, providing that income-tax returns shall be matters of public record.

I want to reiterate that if the conferees had been willing to amend my amendment, simply providing that income-tax returns should be matters of public record, open to public inspection, and had provided that the President should have the right to issue rules and regulations in order to make sure that the privilege should not be abused, I would have had no objection; but they have written in the words that these returns are to be matters of public record to the extent to which the President of the United States may determine.

I know the kind of advice the President of the United States will obtain from the experts in the Treasury Department. He will have no opportunity to weigh this question. The rules and regulations will be written in the Department by individuals who are unalterably opposed to the principle of making income-tax returns public records. Some of them might well be, for, if I remember correctly, it was revealed that, insofar as some of the returns of the Morgan partners were concerned, there was written in red pencil across the face of one of those returns the statement, "O.K. No investigation", and the initials of some employee of the Treasury Department. Does anyone suppose that this would have been done by that individual, employed to protect the interests of the Government, had he known that the return would be open to public inspection?

Mr. President, I am not urging the rejection of this report for any other purpose than to secure an opportunity for the House of Representatives to vote upon these amendments, and thus afford a fair opportunity for these important amendments which the Senate adopted in good faith and by overwhelming majorities, and which, I submit, the record demonstrates, did not have a fair chance in conference.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had concurred in the concurrent resolution (S.Con.Res. 2) providing for the printing, with an index, of the Constitution of the United States, as amended to April 1, 1933, together with the Declaration of Independence.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5755) to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, in the brief time which I shall occupy the floor I want first to call attention to an amendment agreed to in the Senate and which has gone out in conference. It is amendment numbered 44, found on page 19. The bill provided, in subsection (b) of section 202, as follows:

(b) Conservation and development of natural resources, including control, utilization, and purification of water, construction of sewage-disposal plants, widening of streets, prevention of sewers and soil or coastal erosion, development of water power, transmission generation, transmission, and distribution of electrical energy.

An amendment was inserted on the floor of the Senate, to add after the word "transmission" the words "generation and distribution." I supposed, when that addition was made, that there could be no possible objection to including those words. I do not yet see how anyone who would be willing to put in the word "transmission" would not also agree to having inserted the words "generation and distribution."

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. I was in entire sympathy with the amendment offered by the Senator, and tried to retain it as it was written in the bill, but the conference was told that that was included in the other provisions of the bill; that there was not the slightest doubt about the generation and distribution, as well as transmission, being taken care of under the general provisions of the bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, of course, I accept the Senator's statement at 100 percent, but, as a matter of fact, while I think the position taken by the Senator's informant as to generation being included by construction may be tenable, there is absolute certainty, it seems to me, that distribution will be omitted from the terms of the bill. In the electrical world there are two distinct things that happen as to the electricity which is generated; first, there is the transmission; then there is the distribution. It is generally understood, so far as I know, without exception, by engineers that transmission does not include distribution. Transmission means the carrying of electricity from the place where it is generated to the place where it is distributed. That is transmission. For instance, if electricity were generated at Great Falls, and the electricity were brought to the city of Washington, the bringing of the electricity to the city would be transmission, but when it was furnished to the people within the city that would be distribution and would not be included in the term "transmission"; so that, as it now stands, I do not believe there would be any authority for a municipality which wished to distribute electricity to its own citizens to come under the terms of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. May I say to the Senator that we inquired specifically of General Johnson, who was present, as to that, and he said there was no question about it. That was the only reason why the word was stricken out. May I say to the Senator also that I was for including it in the bill because it was so plain?

Mr. NORRIS. I talked the matter over with the Senator from New York before I offered the amendment. It then had his full concurrence, and I have no doubt the Senator yet entertains the same view.

Mr. WAGNER. I will say to the Senator that I think the term should have remained in the bill as the Senator proposed it; but, after all, under a general provision of the bill I am sure any public project of a municipality, State or any other political subdivision is included, and as the bill now stands there is certainly authority for the loan of money for the purpose of building transmission lines such as the Senator has in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. The building of a transmission line is an entirely different proposition from the building of a distribution line.

Mr. WAGNER. I mean there is ample authority also for the building of a distribution line. I refer to section 202.

Mr. GEORGE. May I call the Senator's attention to the language in section 202?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. In section 202, line 5, after describing public works, the language is:

> And any publicly owned instrumentalities and facilities.

Mr. NORRIS. Where is that language found?

Mr. WAGNER. That is the section I wanted to call the Senator's attention to.

Mr. GEORGE. It is section 202 of the bill, page 19, line 5.

Mr. NORRIS. The language of the bill, beginning in line 2, page 19, is as follows:

> (a) Construction, repair, and improvement of public highways and parkways, public buildings (including the remodeling of buildings hereby authorized to be purchased for Federal purposes), and any publicly owned instrumentalities and facilities.

Mr. WAGNER. I think that language covers it.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not believe that includes the distribution of electrical energy; and, Mr. President, even if it did, we should thereby lay the way open for an injunction, to start with, by privately owned power companies. I do not see any escape from it. Why not add the word "distribution"? "Transmission" is already in the bill. Why include transmission if it is already included under the general terms of the bill? And, if transmission be included, why not permit the electricity to be distributed after it has been transmitted?

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, my opinion always has been that these special provisions were unnecessary, in view of the general provision to which the Senator's attention has been called.

Mr. NORRIS. If the general provision applies, Mr. President, then none of this language should have been put in. It was put in by the other House; it was in the bill when it came to us, so far as transmission was concerned; and yet, if the Senator's theory is correct, it was already in in lines 5 and 6, and specific inclusion was absolutely unnecessary. The very fact that the word "transmission" was inserted and the word "distribution" was omitted, it seems to me when it comes to construing the proposed act will be assigned as a reason to show that "distribution" was intentionally omitted.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course, I do not know what was in the minds of the conferees when the word was omitted, but I will say, as one who had a good deal to do with the legislation, that, so far as I am concerned, I feel very certain—and I do not see how any court or anyone construing the act can reach any other conclusion—that under the general terms "publicly owned instrumentalities and facilities" transmission and distribution lines are adequately covered.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope those who construe the act will follow that construction, but if they do they will realize how inconsistent have been the committee and the House and the Senate in putting in the word "transmission" and omitting the word "distribution."

I call the attention of the committee to this matter in case the bill goes back to conference; I mention it because it has not, so far as I know, been mentioned in this debate; and if the bill goes back to conference, I hope the committee will make the correction and remove that uncertainty.

Mr. President, it is not my intention to take up much time on two other amendments which, to my mind, justify us in sending this bill back to conference. I refer to the amendment in regard to the taxation of tax-free securities and the amendment in regard to the publicity of income-tax returns. On one of these questions, the publicity of income-tax returns, the Senate has gone on record on several occasions in prior years, and in connection with tax bills, has put in a provision providing for publicity of tax returns. Such a provision has always gone out in conference; it has always been rejected by the House; it has been rejected by the House without a formal vote in the case of this particular item, but rejected on the general theory applied to most bills where there are many amendments that all amendments be disagreed to and the bill be sent to conference. So that, so far as I know—I may be wrong about it—the House during all these years has never been permitted to vote directly on an amendment of this character.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does the Senator have any doubt, from information at hand and from his conversation with Members of the House, that if the House were afforded an opportunity, as the Senate necessarily is, to vote upon the proposition of publicity of income-tax returns they would vote for it overwhelmingly?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not any doubt of it in the world, I will say to the Senator.

Now, Mr. President, laying aside disagreements that may exist on this question—and I concede there is an opportunity for disagreement; I concede that disagreement may arise from different viewpoints of Senators and individuals—we are confronted now in this country with a condition that has never confronted us before. We have now a constituency covering the entire United States who are in rather a suspicious attitude, and justifiably so. I am one of those who entertain such a suspicion, which is generally entertained among our people because they know that men of great wealth, men who control monopolies and combinations and trusts, have an undue preference given to them in the way of taxation. That is a general consensus of opinion, and recent developments before the Banking and Currency Committee have accentuated that impression. It has been shown from that investigation that some of our wealthiest men have paid no income taxes whatever; it has been shown that they have resorted to methods which I think are unjustifiable, plainly illegal, plainly dishonorable, and, without question, unpatriotic to avoid paying any contribution to the Government under whose laws they have accumulated fortunes that stagger the imagination.

We now hear men, conservative men, talking about the evils that come to us on account of the accumulation of great aggregations of capital and of money. Honest men, who have not given it consideration before, are now wondering if, after all, the men who control the big fortunes through monopolies and through contributions to political parties, enabling them to control the Government from top to bottom more or less, shall escape tax free while the poorer class of people, bent down with burdens, some of them facing starvation, others enduring sufferings of various kinds, must pay the burdens of government.

Some people probably have exaggerated ideas about the tax-exemption features of our laws. Personally I believe that in a time of peace there ought not to be any such thing as tax-exempt bonds or notes. I am not finding fault with the men who have purchased them; men must buy such bonds, both Federal, State, county, and municipal. In my limited way I would want them, and I own some of them now, but it does not seems to me that ought to relieve the holder from paying an income tax on the income which he receives from that kind of securities.

On the other hand, publicity of income-tax returns will, in my judgment, as I have often said on this floor, bring to the coffers of the United States Government hundreds of millions of dollars every year. We have seen how men just before the tax year commences transfer to their wives or to some other relative or friend millions upon millions of securities at such a rate as on their books will show a loss and buy them back the next day after the new year starts at a price fixed by themselves. In reality no transfer has taken place; nothing has happened; the ownership has not in reality changed. It is a method that men of wealth have resorted to to escape paying to the Government their contribution.

I had a talk a week or two ago with one of these wealthy men, a very patriotic man, who condemned the methods that had been invoked and said that it is a common practice amongst men of great wealth to sell just before the tax year closes to their wives large amounts of stock. They get away with it, and some of them think it is legal, perhaps. They buy their securities back the first day of the next year; sometimes they go through the formality of selling them on the stock exchange and buying the same amount back the next day when the new tax year commences. They sell them at a loss, and they buy them back at the same figure the next day, so they have in reality the same stocks or bonds which they had before, enabling them to get the profit that may come later on.

This man told me that he himself was the owner of a yacht. He said he told his wife a year or so ago that business was getting poor and that he would have to sell the yacht. He told some of his associates, other wealthy men, that he did not feel he was able to pay the necessary expenses of keeping up that yacht. They laughed at him. They said, "Why do you not charge it off on your books and have it deducted from your income-tax return?" He said he never dreamed of such a thing. They said, "Why, it is perfectly legitimate; all you have to do some time during the year is to get some of your customers, some of the men you do business with, some of the men that buy your securities or sell securities to you—give them a trip on your yacht. That is an expense in your business. You are entertaining your own customers. The same thing is true of the man who goes out to beg for the sale of bonds of the waterworks in a little town out in Indiana. He gets the town board together the night before and gives them a dinner. He has all of the necessary things surrounding the dinner to make it entertaining. It probably costs $50 or $100 or $500. That is all charged up to the expense of the business." They said, "Why not do it with your yacht? I have done it. All the other fellows that have yachts do it. It will go through. There will be no objection."

This man told me himself that he did that thing in the very next return he made, and he said, "I have charged off the expense of maintaining that yacht every year since in my income-tax returns." I do not know how general that is. He gave me to understand that it is the general practice. If we had publicity of income-tax returns, no business man in the country would undertake to do that. They would be held up to scorn. No official, however friendly he might be in secret in the Revenue Bureau, would dare to permit such a thing to pass under his eye with approval.

Publicity of income-tax returns will be one of the big assets that will go far, if not completely, toward eradicating and wiping out the deficits about which we have heard so much for years. I believe there is not another thing we could do that would bring more revenue in proportion to the Government. Whom does it hurt? In one's home town, a merchant running a little store makes a tax return every year. He itemizes just how much stock he has on hand and all the profits. The farmer itemizes every bit of his stock, cattle, horses, and so forth. Anyone can go to the records and find out just what his neighbor owns. It is public and has been for a hundred years and has not hurt anybody. Why should we not apply it to millionaires? Why should it be applied to you, Mr. President, and to me, when we make our income-tax returns, so that the world could see whether or not we have been receiving anything that was unlawful or questionable? Give it publicity, and publicity will cure more of the evils in our tax system than any other one thing on earth.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. President, that we ought to send this report back in order that the House of Representatives may vote upon the two items—publicity of income-tax returns and doing away with tax-exempt securities. If on a roll call in the House they vote it down or modify it I would be inclined to accept the report of the committee, but we have not gone as far as we ought to go. We have not yet given the House an opportunity to go on record as we have gone on record several times in the Senate. I believe they are anxious to go on record. If we could get the Members away from their leaders far enough so they could have a separate vote upon these two great propositions, I believe there would be no doubt as to the result.

I know we cannot always get what we want, but we have a right to demand that the House should go to the same extent we have gone. When they go that far and refuse to agree with our idea, I am willing to respect their judgment and to accept the conference report; but until that is done I do not believe we have done our full duty.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the position taken by the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] relative to the conference report eliminating from the industry recovery bill the Gore amendment authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans, upon adequate security, to farmers' cooperative oil pools. This was section 303, title III, of the bill. I find myself unable to understand why the conferees agreed to strike out this section. The authority given was purely permissive. These cooperative pools are self-liquidating in fact, if they are capable of giving the adequate security required in this section.

The amendment had the approval of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of the Interior, I understand from Senator GORE. It had the approval of the national farm organizations, and particularly the Farmers' Union, whose subsidiary organizations have organized such pools. There is a Farmers' Union cooperative oil pool in Kansas. There are similar pools, I am informed, in Texas, Oklahoma, and New Mexico. The provisions of the section were the result of a 3-year study and investigation authorized by the Senate itself, when it authorized the Department of Agriculture to investigate and report the extent and value of minerals as farm asset and how farmers could best preserve that asset. My understanding is that the cooperative pools were recommended as the best means of accomplishing this result.

I would like to see the Senate instruct its conferees to insist upon section 303, title III, which is of importance to agriculture in the oil-producing States, being retained in the bill.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, it is naturally with some trepidation that an ordinary Senator at this stage of the session rises to take even a moment of the time of the Senate. The distinguished Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], majority leader, is quoted in the afternoon paper as charging that a conspiracy exists on this floor to prevent adjournment of Congress, and this despite the fact that in sessions of the Senate from early morn until midnight this body in 3 days and nights last week passed a revolutionary measure, a measure of vast complexity, a measure completely changing the economic and governmental life of the United States. I do not think it is fair, after that effort, to say there is any filibuster. The devotion of Senators in their attendance did not indicate any desire to postpone adjournment.

The newspapers repeatedly carry the statement that there is a revolt on in the Senate to prevent adjournment of Congress. On yesterday morning in the New York Times appeared an article by Mr. Arthur Krock, in which he stated that adjournment had been prevented on Saturday night by a combination between the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and myself and 2 or 3 other Senators, who were each prepared to speak at great length, to an aggregate extent of 18 or 20 hours, to prevent adjournment of Congress.

So far as I am concerned, without assuming to speak for any of the other Senators mentioned—all of whom are capable of speaking for themselves—I desire to say that the statement of Mr. Krock that I was here with a long speech for the purpose of filibustering is not only without authority but it is purely and wholly in error.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Since the Senator has brought up the subject, I wish to say that, so far as I am concerned—and I think the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] will bear me out—I have endeavored to assist him in orderly and speedy action upon the bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Inasmuch as the matter has been brought up, let me say that Mr. Krock is a friend of mine.

Mr. CLARK. I will say that he is likewise a friend of mine.

Mr. LONG. In fairness to him, I want to say that, while neither of the Senators mentioned had any such motive, I, myself, was going to speak long enough for Members of the Senate to have time to read the report that had been brought here, and there would have been no need for anybody else to speak. We were not going to adjourn until Senators had a chance to read the report.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator from Louisiana speaks for himself.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. CLARK. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CUTTING. Does the Senator from Missouri know any particular reason why we should adjourn on some special date or at some special hour?

Mr. CLARK. I am not informed of any such reason.

Mr. CUTTING. I ask the Senator the question particularly in view of the fact that I notice on the front page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which was published this morning there is a notice by the Joint Committee on Printing stating that "the last issue of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for the first session of the Seventy-third Congress will be published not later than Monday, June 26, 1933." I was wondering if the Senator could inform me how the Joint Committee on Printing came into possession of information which had not been divulged to the Membership of the Senate as a whole?

Mr. CLARK. I am unable to inform the Senator whether there has been any agreement made for adjournment at any particular time.

So far as I am concerned, in the brief time I have served in this body I have never knowingly or wittingly contributed to wasting one minute of the Senate. I think I have put in as much time on the floor of the Senate during the actual sessions of the Senate as any Member of the body since I have been here. Whether I favor legislation or not, I have always been perfectly willing to contribute in any way possible to the expedition of the consideration of pending legislation by every legitimate parliamentary means. On several occasions when the Vice President had necessarily to be absent from the Chamber I have been requested by him to preside during the consideration of some of the most important legislation enacted at this session because of my known disposition to expedite business. I have no desire to delay consideration of the business now before the Senate or to delay final adjournment of this special session, and yet I believe the bill should be sent back to conference even though it does slightly delay final adjournment.

With particular reference to the amendment involved in the discussion which has been proceeding, I believe as a matter of ordinary self-respect, to say nothing of the momentous issue involved, we should maintain our position and secure at least the consideration by the House of legislation along that line. The Senate owes it to its own self-respect to send it back to conference for that purpose. We have heard much talk in the country in the past on government by caucus or government by committees. We have reached the stage now where certainly we do not have legislation by Congress and we do not have legislation by caucus. We are not even permitted to have legislation by committees. We are having legislation by conferees, because the conferees of the Senate and of the House make no bones about setting at defiance the known will of the bodies which they are supposed to represent.

Mr. President, many important amendments were placed in the pending measure, some of them in committee, some of them on the floor of the Senate, and yet the overwhelming preponderance of the judgment of the administration and of the Senate apparently influences the conferees not at all in making their report. It is generally recognized by the country that the three principal leaks which have been demonstrated to exist in our income-tax system are the capital-loss section, the tax-exempt section, and the failure, under the present law, to have publicity of income-tax returns. Amendments were offered on the floor of the Senate, one by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to close the leak having to do with nonpublicity of income-tax returns. That was placed in the bill over the opposition of the chairman of the committee, and for that matter, I think, of every member of the conference committee appointed on behalf of the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. No, Mr. President; I know the Senator does not want to do anyone an injustice. I voted for the amendment. I was one of the conferees, and I insisted strongly on the retention of the amendment in the committee. I warned the committee that just exactly what is happening now would happen; that there would be prolonged debate if this amendment was even modified.

Mr. CLARK. I beg the Senator's pardon. I had no intention, as he knows, of doing him any injustice. The point I was trying to make was that over the opposition of the leaders of the committee on this proposition, the Senate, by a vote of more than 2 to 1, placed that amendment on the bill.

I offered an amendment to close the leak which existed by reason of the so-called "tax-exempt securities." That was placed on the bill on a roll call, over the opposition of the chairman of the committee and the leaders of the committee, though not by so wide a margin as the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. I am frank to say that I do not think the merit of the amendment which I offered is as outstanding, as conclusive, as the merit of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, and the vote of the Senate did not indicate that the Senate thought so; but by a substantial majority my amendment was placed on the bill.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] offered an amendment which was not even opposed on the floor of the Senate, which those in charge of the bill accepted, and which I do not believe a Member of this body will say could not have been placed on the bill by an overwhelming majority if the committee had desired to contest it.

I say that the Senate was entitled to fair play. When this bill went into conference, I realized fully, of course, that on a measure of this vast complexity, on a measure involving so many diverse and entirely unconnected subjects, it would be almost humanly impossible that all the conferees, or even a majority of the conferees, would have agreed with all the amendments placed on the bill while it was under consideration in the Senate. It so happens—I am quite certain as to the accuracy of this proposition—that all of the conferees on the record vote voted against the inclusion of my amendment. Nevertheless, Mr. President, I feel that in such a situation as that, where the Senate of the United States has unmistakably expressed its opinion and given a mandate in no uncertain terms, where the conferees personally happen to disagree with the position of the Senate, they are in honor bound fully and adequately to present the views of the majority of the body which they are sent into conference to represent.

Mr. President, I hope that nothing I may say on this subject may be taken as in any sense a personal reflection upon any of the conferees who represented the Senate on this bill. They are all my personal friends. Some of them have been my friends for a great many years. With the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the Chairman of the Finance Committee, I have enjoyed relations of intimate personal friendship for more than 20 years. I would not have anything I might say taken as a reflection on any member of that conference; but I oppose the system which has grown up here as essentially a vicious system.

Now let us see what happened on some of these amendments placed in the bill in the Senate of the United States.

I read from the Associated Press dispatch carried in the Washington Star of Saturday afternoon and in almost every other paper in the country Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning:

> Chairman HARRISON of the Senate Finance Committee said today the conference on the industrial control bill probably would eliminate the Clark amendment removing exemption from taxation on all Government, State, and municipal securities. On hearing of a bond market decline—

Certainly Senators have been able to observe in past years attempts upon the part of those in control of bond markets and stock markets to influence legislation by convenient slumps and rises in those markets, depending on legislation pending in Congress.

I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that at the same time he heard of the decline in the bond market following the adoption of my amendment on Friday night he could also have heard, if he had read the newspapers, as I assume he did, that there were threats on all sides among manufacturers to close their factories and not attempt to continue in business if this industrial dictatorship bill should be enacted into legislation; and there was just as much justification for the Senator from Mississippi refusing to bring in any conference report at all, and defeating the whole legislation, as for him to yield on the amendment I introduced by reason of a rumor of a decline in the bond market.

I quote further from the same article:

> On hearing of a bond-market decline presumably on account of the amendment, HARRISON, as chieftain of the Senate and House conferees adjusting differences between the two branches on the huge measure, expressed his opinion. The Clark amendment to subject to taxation all outstanding securities which carry tax-exemption clauses was adopted by the Senate last night on a 45-to-37 vote. HARRISON made his statement as the conferees got together.

In other words, Mr. President, the amendment put on by the Senate the night before, on a record vote, was not even taken to conference; and that statement was incidentally made on the floor of the House in the debate over there on the conference report—that the amendment having to do with tax-exempt securities had not been taken to conference because the Senate conferees receded before the conference met.

> Predictions were also made that the amendment of Senator LA FOLLETTE, Republican, of Wisconsin, for full publicity of all income-tax returns would be stricken out in conference.

Mr. President, it has already been stated here, on the authority of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], that one of the principal House conferees stated on the floor of the House, when this conference report was under consideration, that after a few hours' struggle the weak, wobbly, and ineffective substitute adopted for the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin was the best compromise the House conferees were able to get. I want to read that again:

> Mr. KVALE. Is the gentleman willing, as one of the conferees, to grant the House the privilege of expressing its will regarding publicity on income-tax returns?
> Mr. RAGON. The gentleman knows I am not going to impose my frail form here in front of the House of Representatives if it wants to rush headlong without consideration into this matter, but I do suggest to the gentleman as a practicable proposition that we fought for 2 hours over that provision and this is the best we could get in the way of a compromise at this time.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, I beg to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the best they could get was something that was already provided by law.

Mr. CLARK. I agree entirely with the Senator in that remark.

That should be read in connection with the following statement:

> Mr. KVALE. Then the Senate conferees did not sustain the position of their own body?
> Mr. RAGON. That is a thing they will have to take up over there, I may say to the gentleman.

I say the only inference that possibly could be drawn from that colloquy was that the House conferees were struggling for 2 hours to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin, and voted by the Senate by a 2-to-1 majority, and that they were being opposed by the Senate conferees, supposed to represent the will of this body.

Traveling along further, Mr. President, another matter that has been referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin is the statement that the amendment which was proposed on this floor by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], having to do with the liaison officer with reference to the Civil Service employees—an amendment which did not have the opposition of a single Member on the floor of the Senate, which had the endorsement of the Civil Service Commission, of the Civil Service Committees of both the House and Senate, of the great organizations of Civil Service employees, and which never had been openly opposed by a single Member of this body or the body at the other end of the Capitol—that amendment was stricken out in conference, and the testimony of the House conferees was that it was stricken out because the Senate conferees receded before the bill ever got to conference.

There are some other amendments in this measure that were stricken out apparently without a struggle, amendments which did not have the affirmative action of the Senate on a roll call for the reason that no roll call was demanded; amendments which were put into the bill in the Senate Committee on Finance over the opposition of the chairman and some of the other conferees upon a roll call showing an overwhelming majority in the committee for those amendments.

Amendment no. 4 is a limitation on the appointing power in these words:

Provided, That no officer or employee receiving a salary in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be appointed or designated under this title except with the advice and consent of the Senate; but the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to any person so appointed or designated, and the salaries of such officers or employees shall not be increased for a period of 6 months after confirmation.

Mr. President, that would have been the only limitation on the enormous powers of spending money and of creating a political and administrative machine authorized in this act.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I did not know that that had been stricken out. Did the Senate conferees recede on that amendment?

Mr. CLARK. The Senate conferees receded from that amendment, and also from the two amendments, on pages 16 and 17, imposing similar provisos in title II of the act.

Mr. LONG. I was wondering if what the Senator said relative to these others applied to this amendment. This is the only amendment, as I understand, by which we simply retain in the Senate the right to pass upon the competency of the men who draw more than $5,000 a year.

Mr. CLARK. That is true.

Mr. LONG. And that has been stricken out also?

Mr. CLARK. That has been stricken out also.

Mr. LONG. I thought that had been kept in the bill.

Mr. CLARK. It has not.

Mr. President, we talk here about balancing the Budget. We cut the compensation of the disabled veterans to the bone as a measure of economy. We abolish a few offices as a measure of economy. We cut the salaries of Government employees as a measure of economy. Then we turn around in the face of that and pass an act authorizing the administrator appointed by the President to employ an army of employees, if he may so desire, at salaries to be fixed by himself, in his own discretion and his own whim, without any limitation whatever; and no Senator, no Representative, no other person, can stand up and come within $100,000,000 of estimating the cost of administration which may be incurred under this broad authority that we are granting. Then when the Senate comes along in the Committee on Finance and imposes a simple amendment that any official whose duties are sufficiently important to receive a salary of $5,000 a year or more shall have his qualifications passed on by the Senate and shall be confirmed by the Senate, it is stricken out in conference without a fight!

Mr. President, I dare say that if the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], who voted against that amendment in the committee and was overwhelmingly defeated on a roll call, had made a fight in the Senate against that provision, he would have gone to conference instructed by a 3-to-1 vote in favor of it on a record vote in this body. The same thing applies to the amendments on pages 16 and 17. The same thing applies to the amendment offered in the committee by the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], providing for a board to administer the public-works program instead of a single dictator or administrator.

Certainly nobody in the United States has had more experience than the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] in administering great public works of that sort; and he gave it as his opinion that it could be much more effectively and much more equitably administered by a board than by a single administrator.

That amendment also went out in conference without a struggle.

Mr. President, I have taken more time than I intended to take, because I know the Senator from Mississippi wants to speak. I simply want to say in conclusion that in view of this whole procedure on the part of the conferees, I think it is only a matter of fairness that this bill should be sent back to conference and that the House of Representatives should be given an opportunity to vote on these propositions. I am willing to gamble that if the House of Representatives ever gets an opportunity to vote on these amendments it will adopt by an overwhelming majority the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, the amendment I proposed, and possibly some of those other amendments.

I realize that one body of Congress cannot dictate to another body. I have no such thought in my mind. If these questions are submitted to the House of Representatives and an opportunity to vote on them is accorded to the House of Representatives, and they come back with a rejection, I certainly shall not ask that the matter be further submitted to a conference.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Missouri has not referred to the one amendment whose fate I most regret. I mentioned it last night. It was an amendment adopted in the Finance Committee upon my motion, and concurred in by the Senate, which authorized the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans upon adequate security to farmers' cooperative oil royalty pools.

There are popular cooperative movements in my State, in Kansas, Texas, and New Mexico. They enable farmers to liquefy what might be regarded as a frozen asset. The amendment was permissive in its terms, and not mandatory. It had the support of the Department of Agriculture, the Department of the Interior; and so far as I know, there was no opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK. As I understand it, the amendment to which the Senator from Oklahoma refers was the first proposition in the history of the United States that had the full support of all three of the big farm organizations. I think it should have been retained in conference.

The article by Mr. Krock is as follows:

IN WASHINGTON—SENATE RULES A STUMBLING BLOCK TO ADJOURNMENT

By Arthur Krock

WASHINGTON, June 11.—In future discussions of why Congress last night refused to adjourn despite the President's almost frantic efforts to that end, the blame will probably be laid to his eleventh-hour dispatch of the message on Government reorganization. But it is the opinion of this observer that the real reason was the same one that has blocked other adjournment plans in the past—senatorial individualism protected by the Senate rules.

Under those rules, as is well known, a Senator may speak for hours on anything. There is a provision for cloture. But a cloture petition must be circulated, signed by 27 Members and then lay over for 2 full days before being voted. The effect of this move would not have been to accomplish but rather to defeat the wish of the administration.

As late as 10:30 o'clock the President was responding affirmatively to suggestions from his Capitol advisers that the Senate be held in session until dawn. He agreed that it probably would be worn down by that time. But 15 minutes later he as completely agreed to the advice of Senator ROBINSON of Arkansas, the Democratic leader, that a recess until Monday was the wisest move.

That recommendation and that decision were based on Mr. ROBINSON's experience, gained under the Senate rules. There were not more than 5 or 6 Senators out of 96 who were prepared to resist adjournment. But each of them has demonstrated the ability to speak for several hours. By the time Senators BORAH and LONG had completed their remarks it could easily have been 5 o'clock in the morning. That would have left Senators JOHNSON, LA FOLLETTE, CLARK, and ROBINSON of Indiana, who could have kept on for 10 or 12 hours more. In the face of a situation like that the Senate majority is helpless. And the fact that—though the clock would have been turned back—the calendar day would actually have been Sunday, played its part in the decision to recess.

HOUSE FOLLOWS THE PRESIDENT

The House, which earlier in the day was expected by Senate leaders to prove the stumbling block to June 10 adjournment, finished its business long before midnight. Even after the Democrats in the House knew that the Senate had recessed and final adjournment was therefore out of the question, they voted down a Republican adjournment motion. As on every other point in the administration's program at this session, save for insisting on more money for the veterans than the President wanted to allow, the House carried out the wishes of the President.

The majority in the Senate, ready to do the same, was equally large. But in a race against time it is not the Senate's majority but its rules that count. The handful of Senators determined not to end the session last night were animated by various motives. One of them would like to sit until June 15 so that the President may be less likely to make any accommodation for our foreign war debtors. Another wants to be in session when Secretary of State Hull addresses the World Economic Conference, so that he may have the Senate sounding board against which to launch his reply. A third was angry because the conference committee had rejected and changed certain amendments to the National Industrial Recovery Act. At least two others saw an opportunity to annoy and perhaps to embarrass the administration, and thus avenge themselves for personal grievances.

IRRITATION OVER PATRONAGE

But a large group of Senators who took no part in the obstruction and were willing to end the session last night lent silent and moral support to the tactics of delay. This attitude on their part springs from a number of reasons. Many of them resented the act of the President in sending in his reorganization program at an hour when deliberation was impossible. Others objected to certain aspects of the proposed reorganization. Still others feel that the White House has been arrogant. And running through the entire body is irritation over patronage.

It has been the exception, not the rule, for Senators to be consulted in advance over appointments of constituents. Many appointments have been delayed. The President has named Republicans to several important posts. Last night provided a good opportunity for Senators affected by these various currents of dissatisfaction to get back at the administration. Those who did not venture openly to rebel spoke gently to the rebels. And they were impressed with Senator JOHNSON'S objection to the Senate's being told by a President that it must clear out at a certain hour on a certain day.

If adjournment comes by Tuesday, the rebellion will have been a hollow victory. It seems probable that important moves of foreign policy can be delayed until then. Also, there is no doubt that, though the administration cannot now change the Senate's rules, it retains its large Senate majority. But the rebels are not pleased the less because their triumph was a small one. And some Democrats today are pointing cynically to the fact that Progressive Republicans, whom the President has sedulously courted, led last night in upsetting his plans.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I have only a few moments before we will take a vote on the conference report.

Of course, one who is willing to serve on a conference must be thick skinned, because naturally some are disappointed in not being able to get what they desire in any conference report. I am very sorry the Senator from Oklahoma was not able to get his amendment in the bill. It does him no good for me to say that I tried to keep it in; but we were unable to do so, and it was stricken out.

I appreciate the nice things which my friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] says about me, and I know there is nothing personal in the fight he is making to sustain his position. I did not know that he was really so earnest about this tax-exempt proposal. When he offered the amendment on Friday night, when we were trying to shove the bill along in the hope that we might adjourn within a reasonable time, I did not know that he was so interested in the amendment.

The Senator will recall that not a word was spoken upon the floor of the Senate in opposition to the amendment. I had assumed that this body would not accept an amendment which might be retroactive in character, which sought to have the Government impose a tax on tax-free municipal, State, and county bonds. I just assumed that the Senate would not stand for that proposal at all, because I could envision, if such an amendment as that should be enacted, the little towns in my State, and in all the States of this country, being unable to finance themselves in the future because they could not sell any such bonds.

I am perfectly willing to vote at any time, and will be glad to vote, for an amendment to the Federal Constitution making it legal to tax tax-exempt securities, because I have no faith in that class of people who would harbor themselves behind tax-exempt securities, and criticize other people, and want to take everything they have. So we are pretty well together in principle. But Mr. President, this bill has certain set objects—and it is impossible in its consideration to thwart its purposes and destroy its effect in the consideration of every other proposal, even though many proposals may be meritorious in character. We cannot have our way about everything.

I am not going to discuss what happened in conference. I think it is bad policy to state what happened between conferees. I know that in the enthusiasm of debate sometimes a conferee, whether speaking on the floor of the House or on the floor of the Senate, may say some things which are not exactly in conformity with the facts. But with reference to the remark the Senator from New Mexico seems to glorify in, which he has read from the RECORD about the amendment with reference to the liaison officer and the Civil Service, that I was willing to accept it. I brought it to the attention of the conference time after time. I do not say that the House conferees would not accept it, because it would not be in good grace for me to say that.

Let us be fair about this matter. This is a great piece of legislation. It is legislation proposed by this administration in the hope that it might help to revive business; that it might help to call the unemployed into employment and might increase the purchasing power of the United States. I do not know whether it will be a success or whether it will be a failure. I had some doubt about it in the beginning, but I was willing to try it, because we are living in a time of experiment. It may be a noble experiment. I hope so.

Mr. LONG. Not like the last noble experiment. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON. I have just a few minutes, and I trust the Senator will desist from interruption.

We hope it will do that which the framers of it believe and hope it will do. None in this body has been more zealous, and none has more whole-heartedly applied his fine spirit of loyalty and constructive statesmanship to advance it, than the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin. In committee, and on the floor, he has cooperated with those of us who have been trying to press the bill to an immediate conclusion. I have no fault to find with that Senator.

I do say that I believe there is so much good, that there are so many possibilities, in this legislation that I regret that my friend now halts and will not go the whole way and continue his fine cooperation for the passage of the legislation. I do not know why the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, in the Committee on Finance, when we were drafting the bill, did not see the great importance of publicity of income-tax returns that he sees now. He did not hint it in the committee. He had every opportunity to do so. The amendment was not offered by him when the other tax bill was before the Senate. Why, now, should this great issue be confused through the injection of publicity of income-tax returns, which is a question that has always provoked sharp differences of opinion? Mr. President, the question of the publicity of income-tax returns has been before this body ever since I have been a Member of it. It was an issue back in the Civil War days, when they passed a law providing for publicity; but as soon as the war was over, it was repealed, because it was found that it was affecting the revenues of the Government.

In 1924 we wrote into the law a very broad publicity provision, and Senators will recall how at tea parties and everywhere the women would gossip about how much this man and that man was paying in the way of income taxes. It was the talk of every community, and the press of the country began to make fun of it. In 1926, just as soon as the Congress could get to it, this body and the other body repealed the law. The question of the publicity of income-tax returns is no new thing.

When the question came before us, the Senate conferees tried to stand by what the Senate had done. I told the conference that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin believed in this proposal; that he had a conviction about it. The Senator from Georgia made similar statements, and we stated that its defeat might delay the enactment of the bill. I did not say it would endanger it, because it was inconceivable to me that a man who believed in the purposes and philosophy of this legislation, and saw all the good which might come from it, would be willing to vote against it and defeat it because of rejection of an amendment providing for the publicity of income-tax returns.

We did modify the amendment, we did amend it, so as to say to the President in effect, "We are vesting you with great powers here. All the labor of this country is committed to your keeping. Big and strong industry is committed to your hands. If we are willing to do that, we will turn over to your tender mercies the question of income-tax returns, and give you the power to say whether income-tax returns shall be broadcast through the radio, the press, or what not."

I do not know what the President will do, but he will have the power as soon as this law is enacted to make a regulation providing that income-tax returns may be seen by Jim, John, and Harry, that the curious of the country may go and fill the corridors of the Treasury and look over anybody's income-tax return, that they will be broadcast to the world. He will have that right, if he wants to exercise it, under the provisions of this measure.

The Senator talked a good deal about what happened in the debate in the House, merely trying to criticize the conferees, who had a very difficult job. We worked hard. We went into the conference on Saturday, and we stayed there, with only a few minutes' interruption for lunch, in order to perform our duty, to carry out the wishes of the Senate, and bring back this great piece of legislation in order that the Congress might be adjourned.

The Senator read from the RECORD to show that Mr. RAGON said on the floor of the House that it was up to the Senate, and this quotation was read:

> And this is the best we could get in the way of a compromise at this time.

Ascribing that to the House conferees, leaving the impression upon the people that they did their part, but that it was up to the Senate, and that they could get no better.

Why did not the Senator from Wisconsin, in his usual fairness, read in the RECORD what Mr. RAGON said before that? Is it possible that it was overlooked, or is it possible the remark did not carry out the Senator's idea? This is what Mr. RAGON said in answer to a question, the following question, from Mr. CELLER:

> Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman tell us whether the amendment passed by the Senate concerning the publication of taxation returns is still in the bill?
> Mr. RAGON. I will read that just as soon as the experts can find it. That provision was modified. The House took the position that the Senate provisions were rather drastic, and the Treasury experts suggested it would be a very cumbersome thing for them to properly administer.

Does not that put a different construction upon the Senator's interpretation of it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely wish to say that it does not put a different construction upon it, because the gentleman from Minnesota who interrogated Mr. RAGON got the same impression from his remarks that I drew from them.

Mr. HARRISON. I am not responsible for the reasoning or conception of the gentleman from Minnesota, but any man who will read that will see that Mr. RAGON said that the Senate amendment was too drastic and that the Treasury experts objected to it, and then he said that all the compromise was a compromise by giving to the President the authority.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. GORE. Did I understand the Senator to say that the Clark amendment was drawn by him in such a way as to authorize the Federal Government to tax State and municipal bonds?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. GORE. I merely wish to observe that the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly held that neither sovereign can tax the securities of the other, and in the income-tax case of 1895 the members of the Supreme Court divided on several issues in that case, but a united court held that Congress had no power to tax a State bond or a municipal bond, or the interest arising from such bonds.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, if I may interrupt for just a moment, I should simply like to suggest to the Senator from Oklahoma that since the decision he talks about the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States has been adopted, setting out in specific terms that the Congress has the power to tax income from whatever source.

Mr. GORE. The Senator is mistaken——

Mr. HARRISON. I have only 1 minute left.

Mr. GORE. The Supreme Court has not held that, and the income-tax amendment did not provide that. The same principle has been repeatedly announced since that decision.

Mr. HARRISON. I will say just a word in answer to the criticism of the Senator from Missouri, who conscientiously has been against this bill all the time, and I have no fault to find. He has acted beautifully, he has not tried to obstruct in any way, but he has been against the bill, and he offered some amendments to it which would not have tended to promote the measure.

The Treasury Department informed the conference that they had just sold $900,000,000 of bonds, that they were to be delivered next Thursday. They said they were advertised to be sold with the tax-exempt features included, and that if this provision remained in the bill and was enacted, it would destroy the sale of those bonds, that they were already receiving telegrams from everywhere because of the adoption of the amendment.

Your conferees think they performed their duties, they tried to carry out in good faith the wishes of the Senate. We have brought in the best report we could, and let us all hope the report will be agreed to, that the bill will be enacted, and that it will hasten economic recovery in this country.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 4 o'clock having arrived, under the unanimous-consent agreement the question is on agreeing to the conference report on House bill 5755, the so-called "industrial recovery bill."

Mr. HARRISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a motion has been made to recommit the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That has been held not to be in order. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEWIS (when the name of Mr. COOLIDGE was called). I announce the pair between the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES]. If present, the Senator from Massachusetts would vote "yea", and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "nay."

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. Were he present, he would vote "yea," and were I permitted to vote I should vote "nay."

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], if present, would vote "nay" on this question. He is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE], the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] are detained from the Senate on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 39, as follows:

YEAS—46

Adams	Byrnes	Logan	Steiwer

So the report was agreed to.

FOURTH DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT. According to the order of the Senate, the Chair lays before the Senate the fourth deficiency appropriation bill.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H.R. 6034) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

REGULATION OF BANKING—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside in order that the conference report on the so-called "banking bill" may be considered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside.

Mr. GLASS. I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. BORAH and Mr. VANDENBERG addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GLASS. I yield first to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I simply want to ask if the report may be explained briefly with reference to the deposit guaranty provision?

Mr. GLASS. That I intend to do briefly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from Idaho that the report was printed in the RECORD of yesterday in the Senate proceedings.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understand it was.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I should like briefly to explain to the Senate what the conferees have done. The bill as reported to the Senate, I would say conservatively, contains 98 percent of the bill as passed by the Senate. The differences among the conferees causing so long a delay related to the insurance of deposits provision of the bill. There was a readjustment of what was known as the "Vandenberg amendment" which was accepted by me with the express understanding with the proponent that if it should occur that the bill would be endangered by the inclusion of the Vandenberg amendment providing temporarily for insuring deposits up to $2,500 until the permanent provision of the bill should go into effect, I would feel obliged to agree to some modification of the amendment. That the conferees finally agreed to do because it seemed certain to the conferees that the Vandenberg amendment, as accepted by me and by the Senate, would endanger the passage of the bill.

We have so modified the Vandenberg amendment as that, instead of immediately insuring deposits up to the amount of $2,500 in the member banks and in such State banks as were willing to avail themselves of the privilege of the provisions by the payment of the required fee, we provide for the insurance of deposits up to $2,500 on the 1st day of January 1934, next January, insuring such member banks as may then have been licensed to conduct the business by the Secretary of the Treasury and such nonmember banks as may be approved by the corporation charged with the administration of the insurance provision of the bill.

We did this for the reason that we were assured by the President and by the Treasury and by the authorities of the Federal Reserve Board that it would be disastrous to undertake an immediate insurance of deposits up to $2,500, for the reason that 90 percent of the depositors in banks are persons who deposit less than $2,500, and it would be a physical impossibility to prepare for the insurance provided in the Vandenberg amendment. Therefore we modified the amendment as I have indicated. That was done, I think I am accurate in saying, by the unanimous decision of the conferees of both Houses. It became our conviction that the best that could be done by us was to have this insurance go into operation on the 1st day of next January after there had been suitable provision for it.

In addition to that we modified the permanent insurance provision of the bill so as to provide that nonmember banks applying for the privilege and paying the fee exacted might be insured under the $10,000 provision of 100 percent up to $10,000, 75 percent between $10,000 and $50,000, and 50 percent over $50,000.

We extended from 1 year to 3 years the time when nonmember banks might receive such insurance, before they would be required, in order to continue the insurance, to become members of the Federal Reserve Banking System. In short, a nonmember bank may receive the privileges of the permanent insurance provision beginning on July 1, 1934, or sooner if the President should so desire. That also applies to the temporary provision. They may be insured up to July 1, 1936, without applying for membership in the Federal Reserve Banking System. In other words, the nonmember banks are thus given use of Federal Reserve facilities for that period of time without having to become members of the Federal Reserve Banking System. On and after July 1, 1936, all banks availing themselves of the permanent insurance provision of the bill must become members of the Federal Reserve Banking System.

It may be of interest to state to the Senate that the executive authorities at the outset were all thoroughly opposed to the insurance of bank deposits. I may say also that a majority of the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency having in hand the preparation of the bill were utterly opposed to the insurance of bank deposits. But as sensible men we realized that it was a problem from which we could not escape. We knew perfectly well that the other branch of Congress by an overwhelming vote had passed a bill providing for a guaranty of bank deposits and we therefore knew that we were obliged to deal with the problem in some way.

That being so, the Senate subcommittee made representations to the executive authorities to that effect and suggested that it will be better to deal with the problem in a cautious and a conservative way than to have ourselves run over in a stampede. After representations of that view to the executive authorities, they were brought to agree that it were better to do the thing in that way than to have it done in a severely unwise fashion.

In this way we brought about complete accord between the executive authorities and between the conferees of the two Houses of Congress. The Senate now has before it the result of the conference.

In one other particular we made an alteration in the administrative feature of the insurance phase. In the bill as passed by the Senate we provided that the funds should be administered by a board consisting of 5 members, 1 of them to be the Comptroller of the Currency, 1 to be a member of the Federal Reserve Board, the 3 remaining members to be selected by the 12 Federal Reserve banks. The House provision provided for 5 members, 1 of whom should be the Comptroller of the Currency, the other 4 to be appointed by the President of the United States. We finally compromised our differences there by providing a board of 3 members, 1 of them to be the Comptroller of the Currency, the other 2 to be appointed by the President, and not more than 2 members of the board to be of the same political party.

There is one other provision of the bill which has been altered that might interest the Senate, and that is the provision relating to double liability of stockholders in the banks. We have written into the bill a provision which does not undertake to interfere with existing liability, but which obviates the double liability for future issues of stock.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GLASS. I yield.

Mr. KING. Does the stockholder escape any liability whatever other than the loss of his stock, should the bank go into the hands of a receiver?

Mr. GLASS. Under future issues he has no double liability on account of his stock. We do not deal with his liability in other respects.

Mr. President, I think that just about explains the more or less important alterations made by the conferees in the Senate bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I desire to comment only briefly on the conference report; and I do so because the chief controversy for the past 3 or 4 weeks has revolved around my amendment which undertook to provide immediate and practically universal bank-deposit insurance.

I confess that I have greeted the conference report with mixed emotions. In some degree the proposed formula fails to include some of the propositions that I had felt to be essential. On the other hand, I think the conference report in respect to deposit insurance in general, and in respect to the purpose of my amendment in particular, represents a distinct and paramount victory for a new principle in American banking; and I am glad to join in hospitality to the conference report. We propose, at last, to make the savings of America safe. It has been my objective for months and years.

I should be unable to bring myself to approve the conference report, however, in view of its seeming postponement of the insurance feature under my amendment, except for the inclusion in the conference report of 10 very significant words.

Mr. President, the temporary emergency insurance, it is true, has been postponed from July 1, as was my contemplation, until January 1, 1934; but in addition to that postponement appears the following phrase:

Unless the President shall by proclamation fix an earlier date.

Mr. President, under that language we have created the possibility of immediate deposit insurance if the situation develops in a fashion to require it. We have eliminated July 1, 1933, as a fixed focus, but we have left July 1, 1933, in the bill as a matter of reality if the situation requires. It is my fundamental theory that deposit insurance is absolutely fundamentally necessary to the economic recuperation of the United States. I am absolutely sure in my own mind that if we could have had deposit insurance last New Year's we would have escaped the debacle of last March, and that just so soon as we get deposit insurance of an effective nature we shall escape the hazards of future jeopardy. That jeopardy still abounds. We have not yet answered our banking problem. It never will be answered except on a basis of justified and adequate depositor confidence.

So, when the conferees bring us back a formula which, while tentatively postponing the initiation of deposit insurance until January 1, 1934, nevertheless permits the President of the United States to invoke it at an earlier date, I am satisfied and happy to welcome it as a great landmark on the road to permanent stabilization of the banking function in America. I am satisfied to take it as a substantial fulfillment of my own purposes as expressed in my amendment.

One other point was fundamentally involved in this argument. It was the question of protecting State banks which are not members of the Federal Reserve System.

Many of us have insisted from the very first that if any deposit-insurance system was to be established, it must in the first instance treat the nonmember State banking structure of the country on an equality with Federal Reserve member banks. So the emergency amendment—identified as the "Vandenberg amendment" for easy speaking—which was adopted by the Senate provided for the admission of nonmember State banks to this insurance fund on the certification of solvency by their own State banking authorities.

That provision remains in the conference report, limited only by the subsequent acceptance of that certification subject to examination by the managers of the insurance corporation; and those managers are not the Federal Reserve Board. We are not delivering these State banks into the control of the Federal Reserve System. This management is an independent management, as the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] has indicated. The presumption of validity will attach to the certificate of solvency as furnished by the State banking authority, and it is subject only to a perfectly proper check. The burden of proof to upset a State certificate will rest upon the managers of the insurance corporation.

Therefore, Mr. President, much as I should have liked to have the temporary emergency fund remain in its initial form, recognizing the tremendous odds which the Senate conferees not only have confronted but have faithfully battled against and triumphantly overcome, feeling that these two fundamental essentials to protect the integrity and the utility of this insurance deposit fund are existent in the conference report, I am very happy to join the Senator from Virginia in urging the adoption of the report.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not want to take up any time, and I would not if it were not for the fact that I have spoken so many hours on the floor of the Senate, and it might not be understood by many of those who have worked with me why we are so willing to accept this report.

We have only undertaken to secure equal treatment for State banks. Upon being shown a copy of this conference report last evening, I immediately gave my approval that this was a substantial compliance with all we had requested for the protection of the State banks. That having been done, the act goes to the administration of a board composed of three Presidential appointees, one of whom is the Comptroller of the Currency.

The present Comptroller of the Currency, Mr. O'Connor, is the hope of a fair and good banking system in this country, together with the two gentlemen who will be appointed to serve on this board with him. Unless the act is administered wholly without its spirit and without its terms, there will be no such thing as a banking catastrophe in this country for many years to come.

It is possible for the act to be badly administered; but there is nothing in the terms of the act that would justify anything except a complete protection of the banking system of the United States, including State banks, Federal banks, and national banks.

For that reason we have agreed to support the conference report.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD telegrams from Governor Landon, of Kansas; from H. W. Koeneke, State bank commissioner of Kansas; from W. W. Bowman, executive vice president of the Kansas Bankers' Association; and from C. Q. Chandler, chairman of the board of the First National Bank of Wichita, Kans.

All of these telegrams—and they are only a few of the many score I have received of the same general tenor, Mr. President—protest against the passage of the banking bill, the conference report on which has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. President, I am aware that there are a number of desirable changes in the banking laws, particularly those affecting investment banking and banking affiliates, which are incorporated in this bill.

But as I understand the conference report, its immediate effect would be to close several hundred small State banks in my own State of Kansas; I am informed, and have no reason to doubt, that one of its underlying purposes is to destroy the State banking systems of the country; that another purpose is to establish firmly branch banking for the entire Nation.

Mr. President, I have voted for several pieces of emergency legislation of major importance this session, practically "sight unseen." The President declared this emergency legislation, these broad powers granted to him were necessary, and I took him at his word.

But this measure is not emergency legislation. It is permanent legislation of the most vital importance to agriculture, commerce, and industry, to say nothing of the banking system itself. It should be considered as such and given more careful consideration than has been possible at this session.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., June 13, 1933.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building:

Pending banking bill extremely injurious to State banks and threatens their very existence. It is essential our dual banking system be preserved in order to best serve farm and community interests of Kansas. Urge your active opposition to the guaranty section, which should be entirely eliminated from bill.

ALF. M. LANDON,
Governor of Kansas.

NEW YORK, N.Y., June 13, 1933.

Hon. Senator CAPPER:

Banking bill as reported by conference committee would mean enforced liquidation of several hundred small banks in Kansas; insurance provision depending on Federal board would eliminate State banking systems. Appears our only chance is for Senate to not accept report. Your vigorous action necessary.

H. W. KOENEKE.

TOPEKA, KANS., June 13, 1933.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
United States Senator:

Guaranty of deposits feature pending banking bill extremely dangerous, threatening end dual banking system. We urge its entire elimination from bill.

KANSAS BANKERS ASSOCIATION,
W. W. BOWMAN, Executive Vice President.

WICHITA, KANS., June 13, 1933.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER,
Care United States Senate:

Feel you should have following figures in regard to experience of guaranteed or insured deposits. Law adopted in Oklahoma, 1907, repealed in '23 with $12,000,000 of unpaid claims. Adopted in Kansas, 1909, repealed in '29, with $7,000,000 claims unpaid. Adopted Texas, 1909, repealed '27; cost $15,000,000. Nebraska, adopted 1909, repealed '30; cost $17,000,000. Adopted Mississippi 1914, repealed '30; State issued bond issue to liquidate unpaid claims. Adopted South Dakota 1915, repealed '25. Adopted North Dakota 1917, repealed '29; $25,000,000 in red. Washington adopted 1917, repealed in '29. Wisconsin adopted law in 1932, and after 6-month trial it now shows a deficit of $5,000,000. No government, no matter how strong, can successfully carry out an unsound economic program. I appeal to you to protect your country from a major catastrophe which is inevitable if deposit-guaranty principle is included in Glass bill.

C. Q. CHANDLER,
Chairman of Board, First National Bank in Wichita.

Mr. WALCOTT. Mr. President, anxious as I am to hurry on to a vote upon this important measure, I cannot let this occasion pass without adding just a word in appreciation of the rare opportunity I have had in working two and a half years with the distinguished and able Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

I count it one of the rarest privileges of my life to have been thrown so closely with him on such a momentous subject as this banking bill, which aims at the unification of our entire banking system, which should render impossible a repetition of the cataclysm we have suffered during the last 3 years, no matter what may happen economically to the country, because the financial system of a country may be quite a different thing from the economic prosperity or collapse of a country.

As a result of this work—and hard work it has been, with many hearings—we have evolved a unified banking law, and we have persistently aimed at the adoption of a branch-banking system. The branch-banking plan, as contained in this bill, is embryonic at the present time, but there are in the bill provisions which will enable a branch-banking system to grow as rapidly as the State laws will allow it to grow. It starts out now, or when this bill is signed, will be in 7 or 8 States; I believe that other State legislatures will advance the cause of branch banking rapidly.

The smaller banks of several States have been in dire distress because they have no branch-banking provisions. This should be a very useful and important feature of this bill as a measure of relief and safety. Neither the Senator nor I approve the principle of guaranteeing bank deposits, but the banking bill of 1933 will live to be of great service.

To conclude, I have never in my life seen a man, young or old or of middle age, who had more tact, fighting qualities, thoroughness, and wisdom to persist in a most difficult undertaking and win out, then possessed by the Senator to whom I have referred. All power to my friend the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYDEN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 1425. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933;

S. 1580. An act to relieve the existing national emergency in relation to interstate railroad transportation, and to amend sections 5, 15a, and 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended;

S. 1648. An act to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to provide for loans to closed building-and-loan associations; and

H.R. 5755. An act to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes.

INVESTIGATION RELATIVE TO RECEIVERSHIPS AND BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I should like to secure permission, out of order, to make a report from the Committee on the Judiciary. If it leads to any debate, I shall withdraw it. I ask the attention of the Senator from Oregon

[Mr. McNARY], if he is in the Chamber. If he is not, I will not make the report at this time.

Mr. STEIWER. I think he is in the President's room.

Mr. ASHURST. I also ask the attention of the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO] to a resolution which has been reported today from the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask that it be read. After it is read, I shall ask unanimous consent for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk read Senate Resolution 78, submitted by Mr. McADOO on May 12, 1933, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate with amendments, on page 2, line 8, after the word "employ", to strike out "counsel and", and on the same page, line 16, after the word "exceed", to insert "$10,000", so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That a special committee of the Senate consisting of 5 Senators, to be appointed by the President of the Senate, 3 from the majority political party and 2 from the minority political party, is authorized and directed to make an investigation of the administration of receivership and bankruptcy proceedings in the courts of the United States, with particular reference to the appointment of receivers and trustees in bankruptcy in such proceedings, and the fees received in the course of such administration, and generally of all matters concerning which information would be desirable in order to correct by legislation such abuses as may be found. The committee shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations.

For the purposes of this resolution the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee or member thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Senate in the Seventy-third Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, when this matter was first called to my attention I objected because it had not been reported from the standing committee having jurisdiction. I want to make this inquiry: Has the matter been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and has it reported on it?

Mr. ASHURST. I did not hear the question of the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Has the resolution offered by the Senator from California been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and has that committee considered and acted upon it?

Mr. ASHURST. It was first referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, which reported the resolution favorably. Then it went to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that committee met today at 2 o'clock, considered the resolution for an hour or more, and authorized the chairman to report it favorably.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think that, under the circumstances, I will have to ask that the resolution go over, under the rule, for 1 day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the resolution will be passed over.

Mr. REED subsequently said: Mr. President, a little while ago I objected to the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 78, offered by the Senator from California [Mr. McADOO]. I have conferred with that Senator, as well as with the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary. They have explained to me their purposes in pressing the resolution, and I am entirely in sympathy with those purposes as they have explained them. Therefore I am willing to withdraw my objection, and I now request, in behalf of the Senators I have named and myself, the immediate consideration of Senate Resolution 78.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. I move to amend the resolution on page 1, line 7, before the word "with", to insert "in the more populous centers and elsewhere in the judgment of the committee."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATES—SUBSCRIPTIONS TO CAPITAL STOCK OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation for the Treasury Department, fiscal year 1933, to remain available until expended, in the amount of $150,000,000 for subscriptions to the capital stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, in accordance with the provision of section 12B (c) of the Banking Act of 1933, approved June —, 1933, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

AMENDMENT OF CRIMINAL CODE—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KING submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5091) to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "June 1, 1933, and remaining in force at the time of the doing or omitting the doing of such act or thing", and on page 2 of the House bill, line 4, strike out all after the word "punishment", through the word "District", in line 8; and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM H. KING,
H. D. STEPHENS,
WM. E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
TOM D. McKEOWN,
J. BANKS KURTZ,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I move that the conference report be agreed to.

The report was agreed to.

CONFIRMATION OF PRESIDENTIAL APPOINTMENTS

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Committee on the Judiciary Senate bill 1869 relating to the manner of appointment of certain officers of the United States, with amendments, and the recommendation that the bill be passed. There was 1 vote in the Committee on the Judiciary against the bill. I ask for immediate consideration of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAYDEN in the chair). Is there objection to immediate consideration?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments of the Committee on the Judiciary were, in line 3, after the word "law" and the comma, to strike out "hereafter" and insert "after this act becomes effective"; in line 4, after the word "all", to strike out "persons appointed as officers" and insert "appointments to office"; in line 6, before the words "per annum", to strike out "$3,500" and insert "$5,000"; in the same line, after the words "shall be", to strike out "appointed" and insert "made"; and in line 8, after the word "Senate", to strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to appointments by the President of persons as secretaries or clerks in his service", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding any other provisions of law, after this act becomes effective, all appointments to office in the executive branch of the Government of the United States at a rate of compensation in excess of $5,000 per annum shall be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate: Provided, That the provisions of this act shall not apply to appointments by the President of persons as secretaries or clerks in his service.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask that the bill be immediately passed. I do not think any discussion is required. It is simply a formal matter, that the President's appointments be approved by the Senate. The bill comes from the Committee on the Judiciary almost unanimously, I might say. One Senator said he did not care to participate. I do not understand him to make any objection. I hope that without much discussion we can pass the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention was called to another matter, and I do not know what the nature of the request of the Senator from West Virginia is.

Mr. LONG. There is no request. Consent has already been granted.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the bill provides that appointments to the Federal pay roll which carry salaries of more than $3,500 a year shall be subject to the approval of the Senate. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. Has the matter been before the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. NEELY. It has been, and there was but 1 dissenting vote in the Committee on the Judiciary against it.

Mr. McNARY. Let the bill be reported, Mr. President.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have order in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The clerk will report the bill for the information of the Senate.

The bill was again read.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, it has been mentioned that one member of the Committee on the Judiciary voted against reporting this bill favorably. That is not exactly accurate. The measure was in the form of a resolution when I voted against its favorable report, but if I had been at the meeting when it was changed into a bill I still would have voted against it.

I think that when the Senate of the United States can find nothing more important to do than to consider 25,000 or 50,000 or 100,000 appointments of clerks and subordinates in the various departments, we have very little to do.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has a totally erroneous idea of the number of employees who will fall within the purview of this bill. The Civil Service Commission has informed me since noon that there would be fewer than 16,000 of them; that there are 5,000 of that number in the military service, and of course they would be subject to confirmation anyway. I believe it is quite safe to assume—and I want to distinguish between what I am assuming and what the Civil Service Commission has informed me—that at least half of the remaining 10,000 on the civil list are already subject to confirmation, because they consist of United States marshals, United States district attorneys, and officials of that character.

Mr. LOGAN. I take it for granted that there are not many United States marshals who receive less than $3,500. I would not care if there were only one.

If it is the desire of the collector of revenue in my State and of the marshal down in my State to appoint two deputies, or if it is necessary to appoint some clerk in their office, I think it is a very small matter to insist that that appointment be submitted to the Senate for confirmation. It is a matter which is at least deserving of more consideration than we have any opportunity to give it now. I do not know what the effect will be. We are appointing collectors of internal revenue, and they have deputies who receive more than the salary mentioned. The Senate is getting ready to adjourn. I do not know whether we can make the appointments of deputies, or whether we will have to wait until they can be submitted to the Senate next year. I do not know what the purpose of the bill is. I do not know whether those who sponsor it believe that the President is apt to appoint men who are unsatisfactory or not. So far as I am concerned, I am willing to take my chances on having the recommendations made by my colleague and myself followed without it being necessary to provide that they must send the appointments to the Senate. I can see no good reason for the passage of this bill, and I voted against it in the Committee on the Judiciary, and while I shall not ask for a record vote, I want everyone to know that I am against it here. It is too little for us to be dealing with it at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to strike out "$3,500" and to insert in lieu thereof "$5,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS—PROPOSED CHANGE IN EXECUTIVE ORDER

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 63, disapproving section 18 of the Executive order of June 10, 1933, relating to the organization of executive agencies, which is now on the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of title IV of part II of the Legislative Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1933, as amended, the provisions of section 18 of the Executive order providing for certain regroupings, consolidations, transfers, and abolitions of executive agencies and functions thereof, transmitted to the Congress on June 10, 1933, and printed in House Document No. 69, Seventy-third Congress, first session, shall not become effective.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Oregon should state the effect of the suspension he is proposing.

Mr. McNARY. I shall be very happy to do that. Late Saturday evening the President of the United States submitted a message to the Congress transmitting an Executive order providing for the consolidation, transfer, and abolition of executive agencies. That message has been printed as Document No. 69.

On page 5 appears section 18, which refers to the following functions which are to be abolished in part:

SECTION 18

The following functions are abolished in part:

Cooperative vocational education and rehabilitation, 25 percent thereof.

Payments for agricultural experiment stations, 25 percent thereof.

Cooperative agricultural extension work, 25 percent thereof.

Endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, 25 percent thereof.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have not been able to hear one word the Senator has said, for the reason that I have been interrupted several times, and the noise and confusion in the Chamber make it impossible to follow the statement of the Senator and what he has been reading. I should like to have a copy of the document referred to by the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. Those desiring to converse will retire to the cloakroom.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the document to which I first made reference was the message of the President of the United States, which was brought to the attention of the Congress late Saturday evening, and which referred to the consolidation, transfer, and abolition of certain executive agencies.

On page 5 of that document is section 18, under which certain functions are proposed to be abolished, which I have read.

Yesterday I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 63, which proposes to eliminate section 18 of the Executive order of June 10, last Friday. If this joint resolution shall be agreed to, it will eliminate from the order of the President that section which would decrease the appropriation for these four agencies by 25 percent and would restore the present appropriation. That is the tenor of the joint resolution, which I move to take from the desk and have considered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I am not sure that I fully understand the position of the Senator, but, if I do, his position is that the proposed reorganization plan submitted by the President a few days ago shall be so modified, if not mutilated, as will remove therefrom a number of provisions and items to which the Senator refers in his resolution?

Mr. McNARY. I should not call it "mutilation" at all, I think the action I propose would operate for the benefit of our basic agricultural industry. Section 18, which is the only section on which I make my assault, provides for a decrease or diminution by 25 percent of the appropriation now exigent for the three major activities of the Department of Agriculture. I want the present appropriation to remain; I want no curtailment of the activities of these agencies. I can see, if this Executive order shall be carried out, a great curtailment of the benefits which agriculture should receive, by reason of the decrease in the amount of the appropriation. Consequently it has been my view, and it is my view now, that the only way I can reach the objective is by a bill or a joint resolution. The original act itself reposes in the President the power to abolish or diminish the activities of this Department or any other agency of the Government. That is existing law, and unless the order of the President in some way shall be modified within 60 days it becomes a law unto itself. I reach it not by a motion made here, as ordinarily would be done in the case of a bill, but I believe that it is essential to attack it by a legislative act just as powerful as the original act itself, namely, by an expression of both branches of Congress.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, so that I may be more enlightened—perhaps it is my fault that I am not—I should like to ask the Senator this question: Assume that the measure sent to us by the President is permanent in character, does the joint resolution which the Senator offers affect its permanency, or does it relate only to the ensuing year with respect to the appropriations which are made covering the items mentioned by the Senator?

Mr. McNARY. It takes the activities covered by the joint resolution wholly out of the operation of the order of the President of the United States and restores them entirely to their original status, namely, as provided by existing law under the appropriations now carried.

Mr. KING. Now and forever?

Mr. McNARY. Unless the Congress at some future time should change the act or unless the President should renew his order at some future time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if it is deemed wise to take from under the provisions of the order submitted by the President the activities to which the Senator refers, what reason is there for not taking from under the operation of the order all other activities and agencies with which it deals? Why differentiate the ones the Senator has in mind from the others?

Mr. McNARY. That is answered by saying that some of the provisions of the Executive order may have merit, but I am addressing myself to a provision which I think will cripple agriculture because of restrictions on agencies now maintained by the Department. Some may say that the transfer of the Shipping Board to the Commerce Department is a wise venture; others may say that the consolidation of purchasing agencies into one organization would be wise; but, Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Utah that I am not attacking the whole Executive order; I am attacking one provision which I think is essentially wrong and to the detriment of the rural population of the country and to the disadvantage of agricultural colleges which have given education to the youth in accordance with the philosophy and traditions and the history of this country since 1862, when the first agricultural college was instituted through the land-grant system.

Mr. President, I am not saying that the Executive order as a whole is bad and unwise; I am saying that as to this particular provision I think it should be eliminated; and if affirmative action shall not be taken today or tomorrow, if we shall then be in session, it will become as fixed as the statute itself.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BRATTON. Will action on the motion of the Senator from Oregon or upon the joint resolution operate to displace the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion made by the Senator from Oregon cannot be considered except by unanimous consent. The Senate is now operating under a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I have made some investigation into this subject, and if the Senator will be content to let the matter be passed over until I can discuss it with him, I think we may, perhaps, come to some arrangement about it that will save time.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I realize that the majority party, through its leader, is entitled to fashion the program, but it had occurred to me that there was a possibility of an early adjournment, and I did not want the time to be reached until I had an opportunity to present this particular and vital matter. I am willing, Mr. President, if it meets with the convenience of the Senator and I will not lose any of my rights or opportunities thereby, temporarily to lay it aside.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The Senator is aware that he has not any rights when he asks unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. I do not concur in that suggestion at all.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Well, the Senator will give me credit for an attempt at humor. The point I am making is that the Senator is, in effect, asking unanimous consent.

Mr. McNARY. No; I am not asking unanimous consent, by any means. This is a resolution that went to the desk yesterday; and when there is nothing before the Senate——

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. But there is a general appropriation bill before the Senate, and the Senator cannot have his resolution considered except either by unanimous consent or by displacing the general appropriation bill. I do not wish to raise any technical objection. The Senator from Idaho has offered a similar resolution in which he suggested that the operation of section 18, having relationship to vocational education and rehabilitation and the payments to agricultural experiment stations, and so forth, be suspended until 60 days after the beginning of the next session of Congress. That is different from the joint resolution of the Senator from Oregon, in that the Senator from Oregon proposes to prevent by his joint resolution section 18 from becoming effective at any time. I merely thought that perhaps it would be in the interest of facilitating a final disposition of the joint resolution if the Senator would let the matter go over until after the passage of the deficiency bill; and I can assure him that, so far as any effort upon my part is concerned, he shall not be prejudiced by that action. I do not believe the Senate would vote to displace a general appropriation bill just at this time for the resolution of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, my attention had been distracted by a number of Senators, and I was advised that the appropriation bill had passed, and that there was no unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The appropriation bill is before the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. I am familiar with the rule, of course, and if there is unfinished business there are only two ways I could proceed, one by unanimous consent and the other by displacing the unfinished business. I do not intend to do either, and for that reason, and with the assurance of the Senator from Arkansas that he will assist me on some appropriate occasion to get the joint resolution before the Senate, I shall take my seat.

FOURTH DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I ask that we go forward with the appropriation bill. It must go to conference; the amendments must be printed, and time must be afforded to consider them. I desire to accommodate every Senator, but each Senator is familiar with the situation, and I hope the Senate will go forward with the appropriation bill.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 6034) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1933, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1933, and June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 2, beginning in line 3, to insert the following:

For expenses of inquiries and investigations ordered by the Senate, including compensation to stenographers of committees, at such rate as may be fixed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, but not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words, fiscal year 1934, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, that amendment, beginning in line 3, on page 2, should be transposed to follow line 17 on the same page. I ask that it be transposed and appear in the bill following line 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be transposed to the point suggested by the Senator from New Mexico. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the subhead "Capitol Police", on page 2, after line 22, to insert:

Salaries: 12 privates at $1,620 per annum each, fiscal year 1933, $17,820; one half of such privates to be selected by the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate and one half by the Sergeant at Arms of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 5, after the figures "1934", to strike out "$625, one half to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one half by the Clerk of the House" and insert "$1,876.50", so as to read:

For purchasing and supplying uniforms and motorcycles to Capitol police, and for contingent expenses, fiscal year 1934, $1,876.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 7, to insert:

One half of the foregoing amounts under "Capitol Police" shall be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate and one half by the Clerk of the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 10, to insert:

ARCHITECT OF THE CAPITOL

Senate Office Building: For four female attendants, Senate Office Building, at $1,080 per annum each, fiscal year 1934, $3,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Bureau of Indian Affairs", on page 7, after line 9, to insert:

Compensation to non-Indian claimants, pueblo Indian lands, New Mexico: For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 31, 1933, in settlement of the liability of the United States to non-Indian claimants on Indian pueblo grants whose claims, extinguished under the act of June 7, 1924, have been found by the Pueblo Lands Board to have been claims in good faith, fiscal year 1933, $232,086.80, to remain available until June 30, 1934, and to be apportioned to claimants within the several pueblos as follows: Tesuque, $1,094.63; Nambe, $19,393.59; Taos, $14,064.57; Tenorio tract, Taos pueblo, $43,165.26; Santa Ana (El Ranchito grant), $846.26; Santo Domingo, $66; Sandia, $5,354.46; San Filipe, $16,424.68; Isleta, $6,624.45; Picuris, $11,464.73; San Ildefonso, $16,209.13; San Juan, $19,938.22; Santa Clara, $35,350.88; Cochiti, $9,653.81; Pojoaque, $1,767.26; Laguna, $30,668.87.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Department of State—International Monetary and Economic Conference" on page 11, after line 17, to insert:

Interparliamentary Union: Toward the expenses of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union, including traveling expenses, compensation for stenographic and other clerical services, printing and binding, and other necessary expenses, fiscal year 1934, $10,000, to be disbursed on vouchers approved by the president and executive secretary of the American group.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, in behalf of the committee, I send forward the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico on behalf of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 22, after the word "authority", it is proposed to insert the following:

Including reimbursements for any expenses prior to the enactment of this appropriation incurred at the direction of the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection——

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do object to that most strenuously. If the President has heretofore been spending money without any authority of law, the Congress ought to know what spending he has been indulging in before it ratifies it blindly. To put in the bill any such amendment without giving the Congress information as to what has been done is almost a defiance of the authority of Congress and of the appropriating power.

This amendment was in the bill as reported from the Appropriations Committee in the House; it was stricken out by the House when its attention was called to what was being attempted; and it seems to me that the Senate ought to take the same action as the House took, and not shut its eyes and blindly ratify a lot of spending of Government money without the shadow of authority of law. If our appropriating power is to be respected, it ought to be asserted now.

Mr. BRATTON. I think the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] is more familiar with the subject matter of the amendment than I am, and I shall ask him to explain it, if he will do so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believe no Senator will object to the amendment when he knows all the facts with regard to it. The Congress enacted a law providing for the Tennessee Authority, known ordinarily as the "Muscle Shoals bill," which provided for the appointment of three members of the Board.

After one of the members of the Board had been appointed chairman of the Board and confirmed by the Senate, in order to satisfy himself as to the other members of the Board, and as to who they should be and in order to make some necessary investigation so that no mistake would be made in their appointment, the President asked the newly appointed chairman of the Board to make certain investigations. A large number of names had been suggested. It was very important that no mistake should be made in the selection of the members of this more or less technical Board. The President asked Mr. Morgan, and some assistants to Mr. Morgan, to make the investigations. Mr. Morgan went to the Pacific coast, to New York, to Wisconsin, and through several States of the South.

In addition to that, immediately when the bill was passed there came an avalanche of requests of various kinds for information and otherwise. It was absolutely a physical impossibility for Mr. Morgan to give attention to the work that the President asked him to do and at the same time attend to all this correspondence. So he employed quite an office force to take care of the correspondence which was coming in, letters by the thousands, all kinds of recommendations and suggestions and requests for information.

It was for these purposes that the expenditures were made, the payment of which is provided for by the amendment. In my judgment the President undertook a most systematic method in selecting the members of the Board without regard to politics and in order that he might get good men who were fully qualified to fill the position.

The investigation which was carried on between the time of the appointment of Mr. Morgan and the time that the other appointments were made and while they were pending was one of the most commendable things I ever knew an appointing power to do in order to reach a conclusion that was satisfactory.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree entirely with all the Senator from Nebraska has said. I want to invite the attention of Senators to the fact that it was necessary to have clerks and employees in one of the offices here to answer the inquiries that were made by Senators and Representatives. There was an avalanche of those inquiries and it was necessary to have somebody at the office before the other members of the commission were appointed in order to answer those inquiries.

Mr. NORRIS. In addition to that some of the investigations made while Mr. Morgan was traveling over the country might have been postponed. For instance, one of the things the Board will have to do will be to select some assistant engineers, men with more or less technical qualifications. While Mr. Morgan was investigating the appointment of the other members of the Board he was also doing work of that kind. He paid his own expenses. He has not been reimbursed.

Mr. President, I believe there has not been a penny spent but that was spent in the interest of economy and good judgment. It would have been a terrible calamity if the President had named a Board not competent to fulfill the duties that this Board has to perform. While he necessarily had to decide against a good many men honestly trying to get this man or that man appointed, many of whom had the necessary qualifications, yet there were only three to be named. Mr. Morgan went over nearly the entire country to investigate. It was necessary for him to look up their work, to make inquiries as to the work these men had done in their various lines. He had continual calls on the long-distance telephone when he was here, and he had to get somebody to look after them when he was not here. He was working 16 or 18 hours a day, and doing it, in my judgment, in the very best of faith and with the best effect.

I do not believe anyone can criticize this particular expenditure if he knows what the facts are. It was done at the request and the instigation of the President at a time when it was necessary to do something quickly, because Congress would probably soon adjourn. If I know anything about it that will enable me to give any further information to the Senator from Pennsylvania, I shall be very glad to do it. I think in a general way I have explained just what the expenditures were.

Technically it was not allowed by law. It was done by the President of the United States through the instrumentality of the man who is to be chairman of the Board, all in the interest of carrying out the purposes of the bill. There were some other investigations that he made which I think would be proper under the law and to which no objection could be made.

The Senator will remember that in the bill there was one section which gave to the President the right and the authority to make an investigation of some things that had been done on the Tennessee River at Muscle Shoals and Dam No. 2 and its connections and other improvements contemplated under the Tennessee River. That had nothing to do with the act itself, but while this man went there he killed three birds with one stone, as a matter of fact. He made a partial investigation of that particular item which we authorized the President to investigate. That is all included in this item of expense.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator will understand that I do not know anything about the matter, and I am very glad indeed to accept the statements he has made to us. I do not mean to criticize Dr. Morgan, because I have no detailed information whatever of what has been done.

Can the Senator tell us about how much money has been spent so far?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. In all of these different items, some of which I think would have to be expended anyway—and some of the men employed under an agreement that they are not to be paid unless Congress appropriates—the total amount of all the investigation and other work will be in the neighborhood of $5,000.

Mr. REED. And the amendment now pending will involve only about $5,000 of Government money?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. REED. Will that cover the clerk hire that has been referred to as well?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; up to the time that the law provides for their employment. That is my information.

Mr. REED. Of course, I do not mean to take the time of the Senate in discussing an item of that size in an enterprise of this magnitude. I do not think it would be dignified to do that. I do believe, however, that the practice of authorizing illegal spending is a very bad one.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. REED. I am sure the Senator does agree with me in that respect.

Mr. NORRIS. I most fully agree, but the Senator must remember that here was the condition: Congress was probably going to adjourn in a few days. The Board could not organize until its membership had been appointed and confirmed by the Senate. One of the things I was afraid of all the time was that the nominations would come in so late that Members would for some reason say we were trying to get this man or that man confirmed without notice enough to the Senate.

Personally I want to say to the Senator that, while I did not select any of the three men named, I gave to Mr. Morgan and to the President a list of probably a dozen names which were investigated. I doubt very much whether some of them would have accepted even if the appointment had been tendered, but I gave their names nevertheless.

Mr. REED. The Senator will understand I am not criticizing that matter or his connection with it.

Mr. NORRIS. None of them was appointed. I was advised and consulted about the matter. I believed it was necessary that we do something and do it right away; otherwise we would have to let the matter go over until the next session of Congress.

Mr. REED. Can the Senator from Nebraska understand the storm that would have raised around Mr. Hoover's head if he had done some spending that had not been authorized by prior appropriations?

Mr. NORRIS. It might be.

Mr. REED. I think the roof would have echoed with denunciations.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize the Members of the Senate did not know about this. I am not finding fault in any way with the Senator calling attention to it being a bad practice. If I had not known of the conditions that confronted us I would have advised against doing anything of the kind.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I think I ought to say that I made some investigation of this matter because of my connection with Dr. Morgan. I was very much distressed when I found that the item went out in the House. I called the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to it immediately and stated to him that information had come to me from the office that they were under compulsion to make a temporary organization. They could not defer it. Dr. Morgan had been confirmed many days before the other two names were submitted, and he proceeded on the basis that what he would do would be approved, and if it were not approved he would have to suffer the consequences.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. The real question was whether it was necessary and in the public interest? Did it result in a saving of time and economy?

Mr. NORRIS. There is no question about it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. There is no doubt that the practice of spending money without authority of law is, as a general rule, to be condemned; but this appropriation, as explained, seems to be justified.

Mr. FESS. I meant to say that to read the statement without having the facts would be rather shocking, but when we know the facts it seems to me it is entirely proper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I wish to submit an inquiry to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON]. I invite his attention to the language beginning on page 10, line 3, down to and including line 17 on page 11. I wish the Senator would explain what the Mixed Claims Commission is and what it has to do and to whom it reports.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the Mixed Claims Commission of the United States and Germany has jurisdiction over claims involving property growing out of the war and that it reports to the Secretary of State. In brief, I understand that to be the duty or the function of the Commission.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can the Senator tell us if there are any claims pending now and for what amounts?

Mr. BRATTON. No, I cannot. The item is for $35,700. I assume that a justification was made in the House showing the need for that amount of money.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I notice many appropriations are asked for from year to year for various commissions, but we never see any report from them. I do not know what their particular work is or whether they have any work.

Mr. BRATTON. I join the Senator in that. I assume that this Commission is about ready to conclude its labors.

The Senator will note, beginning on line 17, this language:

> And the expenses of an agency of the United States to perform all necessary services in connection with the preparation of claims and the presentation thereof before said Mixed Claims Commission, and the preparation of a final report.

I assume that that indicates that the Commission is approaching the conclusion of its labors.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I take it for granted to be very important that they close their affairs, and a lot of other commissions as well.

Mr. BRATTON. I join the Senator in the belief that some of these mixed claims commissions have consumed too much time. It has been impossible to secure results upon claims submitted to them. I have had that experience. No doubt every Senator has had the same experience.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think the Commission ought to be abolished.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRATTON. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I think the situation does not justify this appropriation.

I had occasion in March of this year to make some investigation of the claims of some American citizens who had communicated with me who had obtained judgments at the hands of the Mixed Claims Commission. The money was in the Treasury of the United States, but the Treasury of the United States did not pay, I think, some twenty-odd million dollars due to American claimants, because it was alleged that notwithstanding the period had expired within which American claimants must submit their claims against Germany they were trying to secure legislation for the purpose of enabling them to obtain an ex parte hearing and an ex parte judgment.

I called up Mr. Martin, of the organization of the Mixed Claims Commission. He told me that all of the business had been completed; that they had to prepare opinions—judgments had practically been made—upon some 14 or 16 cases and then write their reports; that that could be done within a short time, and that thereupon there was no reason whatever for the continuance of the Commission.

Because of the complaints made to me by a number of Americans who had obtained judgments and could not get their money, although it was in the Treasury, on March 31 of this year I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows:

> MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: My attention has been drawn to the present status of the special-deposit account created under the Settlement of War Claims Act of 1928. I am informed that except for a technical attitude adopted by the American Commissioner and American Agent on the Mixed Claims Commission substantial sums, estimated at about $20,000,000, would be distributable out of the special deposit account—

To American citizens.

> In that connection I am informed that there are only a handful of claims remaining on the Commission's docket; that all these cases have been previously passed upon with an adverse finding by the Commission; that they are on the docket of the Commission in the form of petitions for review or rehearing; that the German Agent has made offers of settlement in all the cases on the Commission's docket on terms acceptable to the American claimants and the American Agent; that the German Agent and the German Commissioner take the position that when the docket of the Commission is cleared then the Commission stands functus officio.
> From a reading of an agreement of August 10, 1922, which creates the Mixed Claims Commission, I find no provision covering the method of finally liquidating the affairs of the Commission. Under the circumstances it seems to me the attitude of the Germans is entirely fair.
>
> As opposed to this attitude, I am informed that our Government has taken the position that inasmuch as Congress has appropriated enough funds to permit the American Agency and Commission to function until the close of the fiscal year—

That would be the 30th of June of this year—

> That the Commission should not be regarded as functus officio until such date, contending that any time up to January 30 of this year any one of the 20,000 or more cases previously decided by the Commission might be reopened.
>
> It would seem to me that our Government's attitude in the matter is very difficult to defend and clashes with what I regard as the spirit of international arbitration. Having entered into an arbitration agreement with Germany more than 10 years ago, and the Commission created under that agreement having functioned so satisfactorily during all that time, it does seem reasonable that when there is no further business on the docket of the Commission that the Commission should be declared to stand functus officio.
> I find it difficult to see why when no further business remains on the Commission's docket the German Government should be obliged to help maintain the expense of the machinery of the Commission in the hope that somewhere a previously decided claim might be submitted for review. What concerns me especially and prompts me to write you at such length at this time, apart from these general international considerations, is the fact that substantial sums could be put in circulation in this time of stress when funds are so badly needed. This is especially so because the funds are lying idle in the Treasury Department, when they could be put to use in various sections of the country to stimulate business in one form or another.
> I trust, Mr. Secretary, that you will see your way clear to expedite the closing of the Commission and therefore facilitate the distribution in the special-deposit account at the earliest practicable date.

May I say that there are approximately $20,000,000 which have been awarded to American claimants. The money is in the Treasury and has been there for many months.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Why do they not pay it?

Mr. KING. They will not pay it because of the action of certain persons who claim that wrongs have been done by some German spies in connection with what are denominated the "sabotage claims." Although those sabotage claims were decided, as I recall, two or three times adversely to the American claimants, and finally the German Government consented that the matter should be arbitrated finally by Mr. Justice Roberts of the Supreme Court, and he heard the matter and confirmed the findings of the Commission that there was no liability upon the part of the German Government, nevertheless these persons now are attempting, as I am advised, by ex parte proceedings to get a judgment against the Government.

I saw a bill which was introduced in the House which permitted persons to go abroad in an ex parte proceeding, take testimony, and obtain an ex parte judgment; and then, of course, they would claim that these funds which ought to be distributed to American claimants should be divided up so that these Americans who have judgments in their favor might be compelled to have a reduction made, and a pro tanto distribution of the fund, in order to help some persons who had failed to succeed in the litigation.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BRATTON. Since the Senator from Minnesota asked me about the facts relating to this item, I have obtained the testimony given by Mr. Carr before the House committee.

Mr. KING. When?

Mr. BRATTON. On June 9, 5 days ago. Mr. Carr said:

All the work under this Commission was supposed to have been wound up on the 30th of this month, and you appropriated money for that purpose.

Meanwhile, however, the claimants in the so-called "sabotage claims"——

Mr. KING. There you are.

Mr. BRATTON (reading):

amounting to about $40,000,000, have applied for a rehearing of their cases, and the Commission—or, rather in the preparation for the rehearing, Congress passed a bill, which was Senate bill 1581, approved by the President day before yesterday——

Mr. KING. May I say that that bill was passed without anyone knowing about it; at least, most of us did not know a thing about it.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Who was the author of the bill?

Mr. KING. I do not know.

I hope the Senator from New Mexico will pardon me for interrupting him.

Mr. BRATTON (continuing reading the testimony):

or, rather, in the preparation for the rehearing, Congress passed a bill, which was Senate bill 1581, approved by the President day before yesterday, providing means by which testimony may be taken under oath in the district courts of the United States, one of the principal purposes of the bill being declared to be to assist in getting satisfactory evidence in the sabotage cases on which to base a consideration of the application for rehearing by the Mixed Claims Commission.

We thought that perhaps they could get through with that collection of evidence before the 30th of June and submit it to the Commission and have the question of the rehearing determined. But they say it is physically impossible for them to get their evidence by that time.

Continuing, Mr. Carr says:

The money will be exhausted on the 30th of June—that is, the amount you appropriated—and they say they cannot possibly get the evidence in that time, and apparently the Department of Justice takes that point of view.

Later Mr. Carr says that it is expected to complete the work of the Commission within 90 days.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. With due respect to Mr. Carr and the State Department, if that is all there is to the appropriation—these sabotage cases that have been adjudicated and arbitrated and settled—then this appropriation is for nothing except to continue a racket.

Mr. BRATTON. It includes the preparation of their final report and the printing of the final report. Of course, that should be done. The report should be made and should be printed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico permit me to read from the testimony given more than a year ago in regard to this matter?

Mr. Bonynge, as you know, was the American agent. He appeared before the committee, and it appeared from the testimony that there were 16 cases before the Commission at that time. The testimony will be found at pages 112 and 113 of the hearings. The following colloquy took place:

The CHAIRMAN. What are these 16 cases—

That was a year ago—

or what is involved in them? Suppose you tell us something about these cases.

Mr. BONYNGE. They involve principally bond, estate, debt, and exceptional war measure claims, where property was confiscated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Black Tom case, as I understand it, has been determined?

That is a so-called "sabotage case."

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes, sir. That is not included in these 16 cases.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, those cases were heard in November.

Mr. BONYNGE. No, sir; only the Black Tom case and the Kingsland case were heard in November. These 16 cases remain to be disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the time been set for disposing of them?

Mr. BONYNGE. No particular time has been set, but we have got to dispose of them during the next 6 months.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. That is a year ago.

Mr. KING. That is a year ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think you can guarantee this committee that the whole thing will be cleaned up by July 1?

That would be July 1 of this year.

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes, sir.

He guaranteed it.

The CHAIRMAN. They will be cleaned up and the records turned over to the State Department?

Mr. BONYNGE. This appropriation will be sufficient to do it. If we go beyond July 1 the language of the appropriation states that we will have to do the work out of this appropriation. It will have to be done under this appropriation, and we will do it under this appropriation.

Of course this Commission is like others in that when there is a chance for immortality—a chance to come back and get their hands into the Treasury again—they find excuses too frequently for continuing their existence.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be no more money asked for that purpose?

Mr. BONYNGE. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. How will that be, if you are asking only enough money to carry you until July 1?

Mr. BONYNGE. I figure that we will be able to get through by July 1, but as we go along, if we find that we do not need as many clerks, we will be able to dispense with them—

They have had a very large number of them—and still finish up the work. If we cannot finish the work by July 1, we can finish it later, but, even if we do not absosolutely get through with the work by July 1, if there still remains some work in connection with turning over the property or making a disposition of the property, including property jointly purchased by the Government of the United States, Germany, and Austria and Hungary, we will do it out of this money.

The CHAIRMAN. How much is involved in these 16 cases?

Mr. BONYNGE. Approximately $2,000,000, including interest.

Let me make a further observation at this point. That was the testimony at that time, a promise, a guaranty that no more money would be sought. During the month of February 1933 negotiations were conducted, and the bases for a settlement of all these 16 pending cases were arrived at in amounts acceptable to every American claimant so that those cases are entirely determined, the settlement being agreeable to the United States agency, and the German agency of the Mixed Claims Commission.

The German agency, in offering to dispose of all the cases, proposed that the Commission enter an appropriate minute to indicate that, with the disposal of all the cases on the docket, the Commission should stand functus officio. The United States agency refused to concur in this proposal of the German Government and insisted that, inasmuch as the appropriation continued the life of the American agency to June 30 of this year, though they could have finished it at that time, in February, and entered in the minutes an order that they no longer existed, they wanted to continue their life until the 30th of June of this year.

I repeat, the United States agency refused to concur in this proposal of the German Government and insisted that, inasmuch as the appropriation continued the life of the American agency to June 30, 1933, the work of the Commission should not be regarded as closed prior to that date, the United States viewpoint being that any one of the 20,000 cases previously decided by the Commission might be reopened by petition for a review or rehearing at any time up to June 30, 1933. Under these circumstances the final disposition of the 16 cases on the docket of the Commission has been delayed, in order that the American officials might draw their salaries up until June 30, though they could have concluded their activities in February, at the time this proposal was made.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico informs me that this sum of money would last the Commission only for about 90 days, and then they will have to quit anyway. If that is the case, I will not take up the time talking about it any longer.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the objection I have to making any appropriation is because, first, it is unjust and unfair; second, because of misrepresentations of the Commission; third, because it is an effort to enable litigants who have been defeated time and time again, against whom a judgment has finally been entered by the arbiter selected by them, to wit, a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, to reopen the cases decided; because it is a scheme to go ahead and take ex parte evidence, and indeed to take an ex parte judgment. It would look as though, if we should make this appropriation, we would be conniving at what I conceive to be a very improper, unethical, and unjust procedure upon the part of this Commission and upon the part of some American claimants.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I think it would be proper to make it plain that none of this money should be spent except for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the Commission. I think it would be improper for the Congress to spend money to go out and get evidence.

Mr. KING. I wish the Senator would suggest an amendment. Would the Senator from New Mexico accept an amendment?

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, in view of the testimony that they expect to complete the work within 90 days, and in view of the limited sum, which obviously will expire along in September or October when Congress will not be in session, of course the Commission would have to stop then.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Can we be sure that there will not be an appropriation asked for in a deficiency bill next winter?

Mr. BRATTON. Of course, Mr. President, that will be for Congress to decide at that time. As I understand the situation, this appropriation is to enable the Commission to conclude its labors, to print and bind its report, and when that is done the Commission, of course, will cease to function.

On behalf of the committee, I send forward an amendment, which I ask to have agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I want to give notice to the Senator that I shall offer an amendment when he concludes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment offered by the Senator from New Mexico.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 22, after line 26, it is proposed to insert as a separate section the following:

SEC. 5. Section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of preferred stock and/or bonds and/or debentures of insurance companies", approved June —, 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The seventh sentence of paragraph (6) of section 201 (a) of such act, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows: 'The aggregate of loans made under clause (a) shall not exceed $8,000,000, and the aggregate of loans made under clause (b) shall not exceed $12,000,000.'"

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to have an explanation of the amendment by the Senator.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, this amendment was offered by the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. He is in the Chamber, and I should like to have him explain the amendment for the information of the Senate.

Mr. HALE obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think I shall raise a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not do that. Earlier in the session the Senator from California offered a resolution in the Senate providing for relief through loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the earthquake sufferers in California. I think $5,000,000 was provided in the bill. Later on that was extended to apply not only to sufferers from earthquake but to sufferers from tornadoes, cyclones, and fires.

Mr. KING. When and where?

Mr. HALE. Fires, I said. In my State there have been two very serious conflagrations which have practically wiped out one town and caused very great damage to another. Most of the $5,000,000 has been applied for by the different States. California has already had a million and a half out of the $5,000,000; Maine applied for $1,400,000, and received a million; Kansas has I believe asked for a million or more; Tennessee has a request in now for a certain amount, and I do not know what will be asked for by South Carolina.

Mr. KING. Are these gratuities or loans?

Mr. HALE. Oh, they are purely loans.

Mr. KING. I raise the point of order.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will not make the point of order. We need the money very much.

Mr. KING. There have been cyclones and tornadoes in other States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I send forward the following amendment, and call the attention of the Senate to the fact that it is intended to provide the funds with which to insure bank deposits under the act the conference report on which we adopted a few moments ago.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The amendment was, on page 13, after line 2, to insert as a new paragraph the following:

Payment for capital stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation: To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to make payment for capital stock of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (c) of Section 12B of the act entitled "Banking Act of 1933", approved June —, 1933, $150,000,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, this new amendment is just an added argument to the type of argument I want to make with reference to this bill.

The Democratic administration has now been in charge of the affairs of the Government for 3 months. Their record is involved in the deficiency report to the Congress, and I want to name several items out of this report:

National industrial recovery and Tennessee Valley Authority, $3,300,000,000.

Revolving fund, section 5, Farm Credit Act of 1933, $40,000,000.

Administrative expenses, establishment, and supervision of production credit association, $2,000,000.

Department of Labor, United States Employment Service, to carry out the act for the establishment of a national employment system, $1,500,000.

Treasury Department subscriptions to paid-in surplus Federal land banks under section 23 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, $50,000,000.

Payment to Federal land banks to meet reduction in interest rates on mortgages, 5 percent to 4½ percent under section 24 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, $15.000,000.

Subscription to preferred shares in Federal savings and loan associations under section 5 of the Home Owners Loan Act of 1933, $50,000,000.

Added to that are various items which are regular deficiency items, making a total in this bill, as reported to the House of Representatives, of $3,459,480,000. To that we are now to add $150,000,000 under the guaranty of bank deposits measure, which makes a total of $3,609,000,000. That is an average of $1,203,000,000 per month in the way of authorizations.

We have been fussing around here for several days on the adjustment of the compensation due to the soldiers. It is a difference of between $75,000,000 and $100,000,000 only; yet we are running along here at a rate of a $1,203,000,000 a month in the way of authorizations.

I want to suggest, further, that most of this authorization is not reimbursable, most of it is a delegation of power to the President to do with as he sees fit, as is shown by the language of this bill.

On page 3, line 13, are these words:

And for each and every object thereof, to be expended—

Get this—to be expended in the discretion and under the direction of the President, to be immediately available, and except as hereinafter provided to remain available until June 30, 1935, $3,300,000,000.

I want to suggest that no such sum of money was ever put into the hands of any one man by any government, at any time, to be expended under such conditions. That is the reason why I want to make a few remarks with reference to this bill at the present time.

In other words, here we are delegating additional authority, giving additional authorization, all of it being centralized in the President to do with as he pleases. What has been our experience? We delegated one authority, and that was in the matter of the veterans' compensation. What was the result? A reaction in both the House and the Senate that went beyond the control of the party leadership, and now no one knows just what the outcome is going to be.

The next delegation of authority was in the matter of the reforestation camps, and what has been our experience with the reforestation camps? Let me suggest the authority. In Public Document No. 5 we find this provision:

The President is further authorized, by regulation, to provide for housing the persons so employed and for furnishing them with such subsistence, clothing, medical attendance, and hospitalization, and cash allowance, as may be necessary, during the period they are so employed, and, in his discretion, to provide for the transportation of such persons to and from the places of employment.

What do we find? We immediately find that, instead of carrying out the provisions of the law, with no Executive order, certain bureaus of the Government are ordering toilet kits, without any authorization. We now find that they are proceeding to put in orders for radios, orders for libraries, orders for athletic equipment, furnishing this type of supplies:

Four sets of horseshoes.

I thought we were paying these fellows a dollar a day to help reforest the hills. We are undoubtedly going to pay them something for pitching horseshoes.

Two volley balls.

We are going to teach them how to play volley ball.

Two volley ball nets; two sets of boxing gloves.

We are not going to work them hard enough in the daytime so that they will have need of boxing exercises at night, in order, if you please, that their energies may be properly occupied. I can remember the time when the young fellows who went into the woods were able to get all the exercise they needed in the woods in the daytime and did not need any boxing gloves or volley balls or horseshoes at night; but this is a part of the new regime; it is a part of the "new deal."

One dozen baseballs, 1 dozen baseball bats, 1 catcher's mask, 2 basemen's mits, 14 fielder's gloves, 1 catcher's protector, 1 pair catcher's leg guards, 1 scorebook, 1 set of baseball bases.

That is part of the equipment we are going to furnish. We find also that they are going to furnish radios and they say they have already an authorization. I will ask any man who is a student of legislation wherein there is any authorization of law for those in charge to order and buy radios or any welfare equipment whatsoever? It is not provided in the Army regulations; it is not provided in the law which I just read, and yet they are going ahead under this program with an organization that, as I now understand, is going to expend approximately $700,000 along the lines I have just been suggesting. For toilet kits, $280,000; for books for the libraries, $240,000; for radios, $88,000; for athletic equipment $192,000; amounting in all to $700,000.

Not only that, but I understand in order to take proper care of these men when they are transported from one place to another they do not go in the regular ordinary coaches, as soldiers usually do; oh, no; they have Pullman berths furnished them, special trains, going all over the country in order to get these young men to the camps where it is desired to have them go.

We have made an investigation with reference to toilet kits. What did we find. We found, according to the report that there was no fraud in the matter; no, but the committee say:

We find that these negotiations resulted in large purchases without advertising for competitive bids and on representations of a single salesman. We call attention to the danger inherent in such a situation, and believe that steps should be taken to prevent its recurrence.

That is from the report of the Military Affairs Committee. What do we find? We find that instead of buying toilet kits at a cost of probably 50 or 60 cents they bought the best kits that were offered them by a supersalesman coming to the White House at 3:15 in the afternoon, presenting the matter to Secretary Howe, who immediately telephoned to the Budget Director, who in turn got in touch with Mr. Fechner, and at 5:30 this man had his order for over 200,000 kits at the highest price. They were only to cost $1.10, but the going was so easy that he just added on another 30 cents, and a contract was signed for them all. As a matter of fact, that shows the danger of the delegation of power, against which I have been protesting ever since the economy bill was passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. REED. I think the Senator forgets the great benefits the Government is receiving from these camps. I find in this afternoon's newspaper a schedule of the labors of the women who are in the women's forestry camps, and, with the Senator's permission, I should like to submit it to him as showing how valuable this form of activity is to the public and what an important service is rendered for the pay that comes out of the taxpayer's pocket.

Mr. DICKINSON. I will be glad to have the Senator read it.

Mr. REED. This schedule is as follows:

7:15 a.m., rising bell; 8:30 a.m., breakfast; 8:30 to 9:30 a.m., cabin cleaning; 9:30 to 10 a.m., dish washing; 10 to 10:30 a.m., tap dancing instruction—

[Laughter.]

10:30 to 11 a.m., rest; 11 to 12 a.m., waterfront instruction; 12:30 p.m., lunch; 1 to 2 p.m., rest; 2 to 2:30 p.m., calisthenics—

[Laughter.]

2:30 to 3:30 p.m., swimming instruction; 3:30 to 4 p.m., rest; 4 to 5 p.m., hike and nature study; 5 to 6 p.m., play hour—

[Laughter.]

6 p.m., dinner, followed by an evening of indoor recreation.

[Laughter.]

The Senator will readily see the good that the taxpayer is deriving from this disbursement of public funds.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, can the Senator from Pennsylvania suggest what funds we are depleting which we appropriated for other purposes in order that the program concerning which he has read such an illuminating statement may be carried on?

Mr. REED. We are depleting the fund for public buildings, I believe, for which the money had originally been appropriated.

Mr. DICKINSON. And money for river and harbor improvements and other types of public improvements?

Mr. REED. But the Senator will understand that this is not to be chargeable against the Budget. These items are extra and are not chargeable to the Budget. There are charged to the Budget all expenses that it is convenient so to charge, but when it comes to a big item like this we say that "does not count"; we put that into a separate column, and so the Budget is balanced. The Senator must understand that this $3,609,000,000 that we are about to appropriate this afternoon without even drawing a long breath goes into the other column; that does not count. If Mr. Hoover had spent it, that would have been a Republican deficit, but now that is put in the other column so that the Budget is balanced. The Senator must not forget that.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest one thing further——

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. May I ask the Senator from Pennsylvania a question?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I should like to ask the Senator in connection with the schedule of exercises he has read when the tree planting hour comes? [Laughter.]

Mr. REED. They have not come to that yet. I may say to the Senator that this same newspaper article suggests that the critical question there is whether visits from "boy friends" are to be permitted. [Laughter.]

Mr. METCALF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. METCALF. I hold in my hand some figures that I have gathered. I will not read them all and take the Senator's time, but I am going to ask to put them in the RECORD, if I may.

Mr. DICKINSON. I have more time than anything else, and I will be glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. METCALF. First I notice that 300 ambulances have been ordered, so that evidently they are afraid that some of the men are going to be sick. Then 300 passenger cars have been ordered. I shall not read the entire list, including pillows and sheets and many other things, but down a little below I find 5,000 stoves, 12,000 tents, 3,000 trucks, and 1,469 typewriters. Those are only a few of the items in the list. I feel sure that the members of the conservation army are going to be carried around very comfortably. I ask to have the list printed in the RECORD, with the permission of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

[1] Being verified.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I should merely like to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. Did not the Senator support the "sapling" bill. I think the Senator voted for the "sapling" bill, did he not?

Mr. METCALF. The "sapling" bill?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, in view of the strenuousness of the lives of the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, involving the necessity for radio, and for entertainment, and the necessity for athletic goods in order that they may entertain themselves, and in view of the further necessity that they must have magazines and libraries in every camp in the working out of the plan it is found that it is necessary to raise their pay; and so we find now an Executive order issued June 12, as follows:

As announced by Mr. Fechner the new regulations will provide that not more than 5 percent of the authorized strength of any civilian conservation corps company may be paid a cash allowance of $45 a month, while an additional 8 percent may be paid a cash allowance of $36 a month. The previous regulations provided for a flat cash allowance of $30 a month for each enrolled man. The new rate will go into effect on July 1 when 275,000 members of the corps will be at work in forest camps.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. REED. Does not the Senator think it is eminently just to pay these Civilian Conservation Corps recruits $45 a month when the enlisted men in the Army are now getting the enormous pay of $18.75 a month, minus laundry? Does not the Senator think that these recruits must be worth about two and a half times what the soldiers are to be paid—two and a half times as much?

Mr. DICKINSON. I want to reply by simply suggesting that it is another abuse of the delegation of power. If we wanted to have reforestation camps, Congress should have provided what the men should be paid, just as we provide what the soldiers in the Army and the sailors in the Navy shall be paid.

Mr. REED. Does the Senator realize that at the present time the widow of a brigadier general in the United States Army is paid a pension of $15 a month, under Executive order recently promulgated, while the widow of a Conservation Corps recruit is paid $45 a month if he is killed in one of these camps?

Mr. DICKINSON. The widow of the lowest-paid man would get $30 a month, under the compensation law.

Mr. REED. And that is twice as much as the widow of an Army officer who gave his life to his country's service would receive.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is correct, and yet the Congress passed a law authorizing that be done, although I did not vote for it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if it is quite accurate to say that we will pay pensions to the widows of those whom we are giving work in the conservation camps?

Mr. REED. When members of the Civilian Conservation Corps die their widows, if they leave widows, will receive pensions under the Employers' Liability Act as if the men were employed by the United States.

Mr. KING. Where is the authority for that?

Mr. DICKINSON. I will be glad to read it to the Senator.

Mr. REED. It is in the act itself, and is a part of the regulations that the Senator from Iowa has in his hand.

Mr. KING. I have received a number of letters from ex-service men containing such a statement, and I felt inclined to discount their statements and sent replies that that was not accurate. I am amazed to find that it is true, if it is true.

Mr. DICKINSON. Section 3 of the Public Act No. 5, Seventy-third Congress, provides as follows:

SEC. 3. Insofar as applicable, the benefits of the act entitled "An act to provide compensation for employees of the United States suffering injuries while in the performance of their duties, and for other purposes", approved September 7, 1916, as amended, shall extend to persons given employment under the provisions of this act.

So that absolutely covers, under the provisions of the Compensation Act, all these boys and their dependents.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that we may have the complete picture?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, one of the Infantry commanders in my own division was Gen. William J. Nicholson. He died a couple of years ago, and his widow has been receiving from a grateful country a monthly pension of $30, but she has received a notice that under a recently promulgated regulation of the President her pension is now cut to $15 a month.

There is the other side of the picture. That is what happens when we delegate vast powers to a single individual who cannot possibly give personal attention to carrying out the details of the scheme.

Mr. DICKINSON. And remember that in the pending bill we are delegating the power to expend $3,300,000,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. I read the list of articles submitted for the RECORD by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF]. They are 36 in number, none of which any of us when legislation of this character was being considered would think would be used. My question is this: In view of the inevitably reckless, extravagant, wasteful, and inefficient service which characterize its activities when the Government is turned into an agency to provide employment, whether in time of war or in time of peace, how long does the Senator think $3,300,000,000 will last in providing employment of the unemployed? When we think of the pressure to relieve unemployment, and the Government going into these activities for that purpose, and we see the wide range of expenditures as now indicated by the details which have been brought out, it is safe to predict that this money will probably be all expended before the year is out.

Then the question is what are we going to do for the next year? As I see it, the Government is going into this business and is not going to relieve the unemployment situation except possibly temporarily, because everybody must know that there is no substantial relief of unemployment until business employs. The Government cannot do it. It is only a drop in the bucket. Not only will the Government be unable to do it, but what the Government is doing is further to discourage and make it more impossible for business to do it.

Here we have $3,300,000,000 appropriated. We have obligated ourselves to an additional interest charge on $5,000,000,000 more, as the Senator knows. We have shoved up our annual charge in the form of interest alone since the 4th of March $360,000,000 annually, and we will be compelled to put this burden upon the taxpayers. When we do that we further incapacitate the business man to revive business, not only because we put the Government in rivalry with the business man but because we increase his burden. We will come to realize the necessity for business relieving unemployment under this situation. We will have an expenditure, wickedly wasteful, without any real substantial value, and the problem will have to be met when we have expended this money. This list of expenditures of the money reminds me of the man who said that in the war time we spent money like drunken sailors, and proved it with an illustration of saddles and bridles and halters, saying that we bought enough of them to saddle and bridle and halter every mule from Balaam's ass down to the present time. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is right. I think this approach to the present problem is absolutely wrong. In substantiation of my position I am going to quote the distinguished former Governor of Wisconsin, brother of the equally distinguished senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. Here is what he said in his radio speech:

What did these people do? They waited until hunger and want made it impossible to wait longer. Then they began to change their way of making a living. Unable to live as skilled workers or farmers, where one must trade with other people, they began to go back to the life where a person can live from his own labor alone.

Within the past 3 years some 750,000 people have moved out of Berlin. Several hundred thousand more have begun to move. Within a radius of 20 or 30 miles of Berlin hundreds of thousands of huts have been built on the land. These people are digging their livelihood out of the soil.

There is one of the things to which I think we are going to come. I appreciate the fact that no one wants to see our people compelled to live in huts. I am not advocating that, but I am citing it as an effort on the part of the people to take care of themselves. Our forefathers said, "Give me a piece of land. I will clear it. The Lord will give me sunshine and rain and I will support my family and help to support the Government." Now we have the land, we have the sunshine, we have the rain, we have the products of the land, and yet everyone is looking to the Government and saying, "Come and help me! Come and help me!" There is our difficulty. We have the wrong viewpoint now. We are expecting the Government to bring relief to everyone and whenever we do so much for the individual that we do more than the Government can afford to do or than the people can afford to maintain by way of taxes, then we not only destroy the Government that supports the individual, but we destroy the individual himself, because when the Government goes the individual goes with it.

This simply means that we are reaching out here now with an additional obligation of $3,300,000,000. I do not believe it will bring any material relief so far as the unemployment situation is concerned in this great country of ours. Washington is the best example I know of in that respect. We have had the same unemployment problem in the District of Columbia that we have had anywhere else in the United States, and yet everyone knows that we are putting on a building program here that cannot be equaled in any other city in the United States or in the world at the present time. But it has not materially affected conditions so far as unemployment in the city of Washington is concerned. Unemployment exists almost to the same extent as if there were no such building program. It seems to me that is absolutely an answer to the situation I am presenting this afternoon.

I want to go a little farther with reference to the increase in pay. Do Senators realize that that increase in pay amounts to $550,000 a month additional obligation for which we have to borrow the money? Think of it, $550,000 a month for that increase in pay alone!

Mr. FESS. And the interest charge is $1,000,000 a day, or $360,000,000 a year.

Mr. DICKINSON. That is right. Let me go a little further. I have a letter that comes to me from Mr. G. A. Harter, of Brooklyn, N.Y., under date of June 12, 1933, in which he says:

In connection with the enclosed clipping, this morning's Herald Tribune suggests that one of the purposes of this increase is to provide a cash incentive for good behavior and better work.

The academic mind on parade.

Yet the academic mind, in telling us how to raise better babies and well-behaved children, decried the habit of bribing children with promises of ice cream, candy, the movies, etc., to make them behave and do simple tasks.

Which reminds us of an installment firm that in an unwary moment committed itself to the policy of rebating a certain percentage of the purchase price where the buyer met each payment promptly and complied in every way with the sales contract. In other words, it was placing a premium on simple honesty.

Of course, the fallacy of the above scheme is self-evident. The company only penalized itself. It still had its dead-beat and collection problems as before.

Now, we find the C.C.C. man being further coddled with extra cash as the bribe.

And the trained soldier is still getting his $17.85 a month.

All of the above leads to but one conclusion, namely, that there exists in the administration a harsh and unreasonable personal feeling against the personnel of the uniformed services and the veterans of our wars. Reason does not suggest any other possible explanation.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I do not exactly understand the Senator. Is the Senator complaining that the soldiers get too little, or that the $45 a month salary is too much?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not passing on that at all. I am simply passing on the fact that there is an inequality here between the regular soldier and the man who is being put into these camps. I think we are spending this money uselessly for the pay of those who are going into these camps.

Mr. BLACK. I understood the Senator awhile ago, when the Senator from Pennsylvania suggested that we had raised the salary to $45 a month, that the effect of this raise is another instance of the abuse of delegated power. I am wondering if the Senator is willing to state here and now that that $45 a month is too much pay for these men to draw?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not going to be put in that position at all by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator think it is too much?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not answering the Senator's question.

Mr. BLACK. Why does the Senator complain?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am simply pointing out the inequality. I am not going to undertake to fix the salaries in the Army or the Navy or anybody else's salary. I am simply suggesting there is an inequality and that it is here because of the delegation of power.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Senator want to reduce the $45 or raise the $18?

Mr. DICKINSON. I am not going to do either one. I would cut off the whole $45 if I had my way.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator wants the inequality to continue if he does not want to do either one. Does the Senator think $45 a month is too much salary to be paying these men? If not, what is his complaint?

Mr. DICKINSON. It is too much to pay for the type of work these men are doing. It is money wasted, in my judgment.

Mr. BLACK. Since they are there working, does the Senator think the salary of $45 a month should be reduced?

Mr. DICKINSON. I would cut it all off and send them home.

Mr. BLACK. Would the Senator reduce below $45 a month those who are doing this work?

Mr. DICKINSON. They are not working. They are just playing.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. DICKINSON. Certainly.

Mr. REED. The Senator realizes that $45 per month is only part of it, because they are receiving housing, clothing, food, medical care, and a great many other things.

Mr. DICKINSON. Yes; including laundry and hospitalization.

Mr. BLACK. I have been reminded of this fact by the statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Does the Senator think under these circumstances $45 is too much to pay an American man working as these men are working?

Mr. DICKINSON. For the type of work authorized under this bill, they are not earning anything. They are not working. They are playing.

Mr. BLACK. They are laboring, but the Senator thinks they should be cut down to nothing.

Mr. DICKINSON. Oh, no; I would send them home.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LONG. What is the question we are discussing? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. LONG. But what bill is it? What has this discussion to do with it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A Senator has the right to discuss anything he desires.

Mr. LONG. But I should like to know what bill is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. LONG. I am glad to know what is really before the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DICKINSON. I decline to yield further to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, I wish to present and have considered an amendment, if the Senator from Iowa will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Arkansas let me offer first a committee amendment? We are under an agreement to consider committee amendments first.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Very well.

Mr. DICKINSON. I am glad to yield until the committee amendments are finished, if that is the Senator's desire.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, a short while ago I offered an amendment to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] urged an objection. I am led to hope that he will not renew the objection; and so, on behalf of the committee, I reoffer the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 22, after line 26, it is proposed to insert as a separate section the following:

SEC. 5. Section 8 of the act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation of preferred stock and/or bonds and/or debentures of insurance companies," approved June —, 1933, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. The seventh sentence of paragraph (6) of section 201 (a) of such act; as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows: 'The aggregate of loans made under clause (a) shall not exceed $8,000,000, and the aggregate of loans made under clause (d) shall not exceed $12,000,000.'"

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a moment ago, when the amendment was tendered, I raised the point of order which the Chair then sustained. Since that time a number of Senators, who are greatly interested in the amendment, have appealed to me not to insist upon the point of order.

May I say very frankly that I think this is improper legislation. We have passed so many measures that I considered improper, and have been so prodigal in expenditures for objects which I do not think are within the power and authority of the Federal Government, that it seems perhaps a little improper to object to a small item of $8,000,000. It will do some good. It will help some people who are in distress; but I want to say we are establishing precedents here that will affect not only our economic but our political life in the future. We are encouraging cities, counties, States, and individuals to cease relying upon themselves, and they come with hat in hand to beg the Federal Government to look after matters that belong to them. We are setting dangerous precedents that change the whole current of our political and economic life, and will work serious disaster to our political institutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] will offer the amendment that I had.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk in behalf of the able Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 11, line 24, it is proposed to insert the following:

NINTH PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCE

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the expenses of three delegates of the United States, to be appointed by the President, to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference, to be held in 1933 or 1934, at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at such time and place as may be determined hereafter. The expenses herein provided for shall include the compensation of employees, travel, subsistence, or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), and such miscellaneous and other expenses as the President shall deem proper, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will accept the amendment.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. No; it is not, if the Senator will pardon me. The Senate passed this resolution during the present session; so I think, under the rule which the Senator has in mind, the amendment is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BRATTON. Of course, if we have passed the resolution at this session of Congress, the amendment is in order——

Mr. HATFIELD. That is true.

Mr. BRATTON. And I am entirely willing to take it to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I send to the desk, and ask to have printed in the RECORD without reading, some data in support of the amendment to which the conferees may refer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IN RE SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 59, TO PROVIDE FOR THE EXPENSES OF DELEGATES OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE NINTH PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCE

Hon. Wilbur J. Carr, Assistant Secretary of State, advised over the telephone this morning, June 8, that the State Department is very much interested in the passage of this resolution. This matter was presented to the State Department yesterday for its attention, and there has been very little time in which to advise with the Foreign Relations Committee on this subject. Mr. Carr praised the excellent work accomplished at the preceding conferences in preventing the introduction of epidemic diseases from one American republic into another. Mr. Carr said that the amount of money required for expenses, namely, $3,000, is very small in comparison with the good that comes out of the conferences.

Dr. Boliver J. Lloyd, of the Pan American Union, visited the Foreign Relations Committee room today, June 8, and went into some detail to explain how these conferences had successfully obviated the necessity of placing costly quarantines against infected ports which would operate against vessels and other common carriers and against passengers and their effects; how they had stimulated health authorities in all the American republics to greater effort in the eradication of disease; and how they had been the means of promoting more cordial relations between our country and other American republics. Dr. Lloyd said he would be glad to reiterate these facts before the committee or to any of its members if they so desire. He stated that the American delegation, if the resolution is adopted, would be comprised of Dr. Hugh S. Cumming, Dr. John D. Long, of the Public Health Service, and himself.

Joint resolution to provide for the expenses of delegates of the United States to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference

Resolved, etc., That there is hereby authorized and appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated or allocated, the sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for expenses of three delegates of the United States to be appointed by the President to the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference to be held in 1933 or 1934 at Buenos Aires, Argentina, or at such time and place as may be determined hereafter. The expenses herein provided for shall include the compensation of employees, travel, subsistence, or per diem in lieu of subsistence (notwithstanding the provisions of any other act), and such miscellaneous and other expenses as the President shall deem proper, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State.

Approved.

BUENOS AIRES, AGRENTINA, May 19, 1933.

Dr. H. S. CUMMING,
Director Pan American Sanitary Bureau,
Washington, D.C.

MY EMINENT FRIEND AND COLLEAGUE: I received your kind letter by air mail, and it gives me much pleasure to tell you that I am taking steps to induce the Government to fix the date for the Ninth Pan American Sanitary Conference in order that the necessary invitations may be sent out.

Although the date of the Conference has not been fixed officially, I presume the Seventh International Conference of States will be held in Montevideo in December. This being the case it is our intention to fix the date for the Ninth Sanitary Conference about the middle of the month of November; thus, there will be 1 month before the Seventh Conference which will permit you and other colleagues to attend the meeting at Geneva and the Office International. I hope if you find this date is not convenient that you will send me a cable saying only "Such date (naming the date) seems preferable to me."

With regard to expenses for social entertainment, I am completely in accord with you; nor is my Government in a position to make such expenditures, and there will not be any "guests of the Government" at sumptuous banquets.

I am very desirious of seeing you here, and with my respects to Mrs. Cumming and to my friends in the office, permit me to reiterate.

Your affectionate friend and colleague,

GREGORIO ARÁOZ ALFARO.

EXCERPT FROM RESOLUTIONS AUTHORIZING THE CREATION OF THE PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCES, MEXICO CITY, OCTOBER 22, 1901, TO JANUARY 22, 1902

The Second International Conference of the American States recommends * * * that a general convention of representatives of the health organizations of the different American Republics shall be called * * * within 1 year from the date of the adoption of these resolutions by this Conference; that each Government represented at this Conference shall designate one or more delegates to attend such convention; that authority shall be conferred by each Government upon its delegates to enable them to join delegates from the other Republics in the conclusions of such sanitary agreements and regulations as, in the judgment of said Convention, may be in the best interests of all the Republics represented therein * * * that said Convention shall provide for the holding of subsequent sanitary conventions, etc.

ADDITIONAL INFORMATION CONCERNING THE ACTIVITIES OF THE PAN AMERICAN SANITARY CONFERENCES AND THEIR EXECUTIVE ORGAN, THE PAN AMERICAN SANITARY BUREAU

The principal objectives of the bodies mentioned in the title of this memorandum are as follows:

1. To prevent the introduction of epidemic diseases from one American republic into another.

2. To obviate the necessity for costly quarantines against infected ports which would operate against vessels and other common carriers and against passengers and their effects.

3. To stimulate health authorities in all the American republics to greater effort in the eradication of disease.

4. To secure the prompt reporting of quarantinable diseases in ports and places in all of the American republics, thereby enabling noninfected countries to take such precautions as will prevent the spread of such diseases with a minimum of restrictions on commercial relations.

5. To assist in bringing about more cordial relations between the American republics.

Commenting briefly on these objectives, it may be said that, in times past, no less than 90 epidemics of yellow fever have appeared in the United States, the disease always having been imported from ports and places in Latin America. Until recent years costly quarantines were necessary to keep yellow fever from being reimported, and it was not until the year 1925 that detention of vessels in quarantine during the summer season could be dispensed with. Since that time it has not been necessary to detain any steamer at any port in the United States on account of yellow fever. Prior to that time thousands, even hundreds of thousands, of dollars were lost from year to year in necessary quarantines on account of yellow fever.

This happy state of affairs has not been caused by chance, but is due in great measure to the lowered incidence of this disease in Latin America. The influence of the Pan American Sanitary Conferences and the Pan American Sanitary Bureau has been invaluable in stimulating health authorities, in inducing them to achieve these results with the aid, it should be said, of the International Health Board (Rockefeller Foundation).

Bubonic plague is prevalent in Argentina, Brazil, Ecuador, and Peru, and possibly in other Latin American countries. It may appear anywhere at any time. The combating of this disease is a problem that will occupy the attention of the United States and other countries for many years to come. The Pan American Sanitary Bureau is actively engaged in combating this disease today in two South American Republics, the object being to control the disease where it is rather than rely on quarantine measures by noninfected countries. To make quarantine alone effective in the control of contagious disease would paralyze commerce and industry.

The meetings of the Pan American Sanitary Conferences and of the Pan American conferences of the directing heads of the national departments of health of the American republics are held under the auspices of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau. The deliberations of this latter body at its meeting in Washington in April 1931 were of very material assistance in securing modifications of the proposed international sanitary regulations applying to aerial transportation, a matter in which the United States is vitally interested.

The following concrete examples of how the influence and activities of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau aid the people of the United States while helping other nations will further serve to illustrate its work.

Through its cooperation with the International Office of Public Hygiene of Paris the Sanitary Bureau receives cabled information almost daily, reporting outbreaks of plague, cholera, or yellow fever in countries of Europe, Asia, and Africa, which information is immediately reported to the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service.

The national director of health of a South American republic cabled the Director of the Bureau, stating that his people were greatly alarmed because of the alleged ill effects from the consumption of a nationally used foodstuff imported from the United States. He was advised that the product was not only harmless but a wholesome food in use throughout this country, and the fears of his people were dispelled.

Another director of health wrote in to know if he should allow the use of a certain substance in the manufacture of soft drinks, and was told that its use is not advisable.

Another cabled to the effect that a certain company was putting in a sewer system in the capital of his country, and wanted to know if it is safe to use a certain material in wiping the joints. After securing authoritative information the bureau cabled that it is.

Two American Republics quarantined against the Republic of Haiti on account of an outbreak of cerebrospinal meningitis. After investigation by the Bureau the authorities were advised that quarantine, in its judgment, was not necessary, and the quarantine was at once raised.

Cuban authorities were about to establish quarantine against Florida on account of an outbreak of smallpox. Through the good offices of the Sanitary Bureau the health authorities of Cuba were invited to visit the State and investigate conditions and measures being taken and judge for themselves of the necessity for quarantine. They accepted the invitation, made the investigation, returned home satisfied, and did not impose quarantine. On two occasions quarantine against the port of New York on account of cerebrospinal meningitis, and infantile paralysis has been obviated through confidence by other nations in the judgment of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau.

The International Office of Public Health, of Paris, at the request of a European government, cabled the Sanitary Bureau to know whether or not plague conditions in a South American country constituted a menace to trans-Atlantic ports. The Bureau cabled the office that plague existed in rats in two of the republic's ports; that the government of the infected country was believed to be taking reasonable precautions, but that if vessels arrived from these ports with evidence of living rats on board, any government would be within its rights to fumigate the ship for the destruction of rats. Three days later a cablegram was received from Liverpool stating that a vessel from one of the infected ports had been fumigated, and seven plague-infected rats had been found. Later, a vessel arriving at New Orleans from the same port was also found to be plague-infected on fumigation at quarantine.

In conclusion, it may be said that since its inception in 1902 the destinies of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau have been presided over by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service. It is, perhaps, not too much to say that the very existence of the Bureau is dependent almost entirely on the support given by the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, who is, by election, the Director of the Pan American Sanitary Bureau.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Mexico whether it is desired to pass this bill tonight so that it can go to conference?

Mr. BRATTON. That is the case.

Mr. DICKINSON. If so, I shall be glad to let the consideration of the bill proceed at this time and conclude my remarks after the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRATTON. I do desire very earnestly to have the bill passed as speedily as possible in order to get it to conference.

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield the floor with that understanding.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from Iowa has not concluded his remarks?

Mr. KING. He has not.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, after line 2, it is proposed to insert the following:

That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $250,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the completion of the memorial authorized by section 2 of the joint resolution approved May 23, 1928, as amended, to be erected at or near the site of Fort Sackville in the city of Vincennes, Ind., in commemoration of the winning of the Old Northwest and the achievements of George Rogers Clark and his associates in the War of the American Revolution, and for the acquisition and removal of all structures on the site of such memorial, and for the grading, filling, and landscaping of the grounds thereof. Such sum shall be expended by the George Rogers Clark Sesquicentennial Commission in the manner provided in section 2 of such joint resolution, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 22, it is proposed to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

The President is authorized to allocate not to exceed $20,000,000 of the amount made available by this section for the maintenance of existing scientific and research activities of the Government and experimental farms maintained by the Government on and in Federal reclamation projects.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on yesterday we passed a resolution here requiring the Department of the Interior, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Commerce to submit immediately reports with reference to the curtailment or cutting down of their personnel due to the present condition of the appropriations.

I have received copies of some reports. I beg leave to say that unless something is done through the medium of this bill, all of our research and all of our experimental bureaus will lose everything they have accomplished during the past 25 or 30 years. Those who have garnered the information essential under the Bureau of Standards, those who have accomplished results under the Bureau of Public Health, those who have accomplished results under the Reclamation Bureau where experimental farms are being and have been conducted by the Government—all of the results of this research will be lost unless something is done through the medium of this bill to save them.

It has required in the past approximately $40,000,000 to carry out this work. All we are asking for now is to save the results of scientists who have worked for years to accomplish these results for the benefit of the Nation. We are asking now for an allocation, out of the $3,300,000,000, of $20,000,000 to save the results and carry on the work under a minimized activity, if you please.

In that connection, Mr. President, and without desiring to take up the time of the Senate, I beg leave to submit, to be printed in the RECORD, certain reports coming from a recognized authority on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HEALTH WORK BY GOVERNMENT HAMPERED BY ECONOMY

By Science Service, Washington, D.C., June 12, 1933

If an epidemic of any serious disease should break out in the United States during the coming year it would find Uncle Sam's defenses drastically weakened by the economy program, unless present plans are revised.

It is proposed to clip the $333,650 appropriated by Congress for the prevention of epidemics to less than half that amount—about $157,000. Scientists of the United States Public Health Service, who are administering the funds, stated that the original plan was to distribute the cut equally among all the diseases being fought, but that since the alarming nature of the spread of Rocky Mountain spotted fever was claiming immediate attention, the battle against that malady would go on unabated.

The National Institute of Health, and the laboratory at Hamilton, Mont., where this and other little-understood diseases are being studied, will suffer a cut of about one tenth from the amount already appropriated by Congress. The men who there daily risk their lives in experimenting with strange germs and strange diseases will receive a salary cut of "less than 10 percent" in addition to the 15 percent reductions already made by previous economy measures. Some will be dismissed because the Government cannot afford their essential services.

The funds for field investigations of conditions menacing the health of the Nation—polluted rivers and so on—have been slashed to about $200,000 from the $353,564 appropriated by Congress for the coming fiscal year. That is just half the amount appropriated for the year now ending.

Scientists in charge of the health research are taking this blow to their service in a philosophical spirit and are bending every effort toward making each dollar do its utmost.

"The work will be curtailed, of course, but it will not be destroyed", they say.

RESEARCH AND EDUCATION SUFFER 25 PERCENT CUT IN FEDERAL AID

By Science Service, Washington, D.C., June 12, 1933

Federal grants for science and education made to the States are reduced by $3,917,000 through the reorganization order sent to Congress by President Roosevelt.

The payments for agricultural experiment stations, the cooperative agricultural extension work, and the endowment and maintenance of colleges for the benefit of agricultural and mechanic arts, all educational and research funds granted to the States and Territories by the Federal Government are reduced or "abolished" by 25 percent.

These payments as authorized for the fiscal year 1934 to begin July 1, total $13,119,096 from the Department of Agriculture, and $2,550,000 from the Department of the Interior; a grand total of $15,669,096. Under the curtailment ordered to be effective 60 days from the date of the order, June 10, the funds available will be $11,750,000 in round figures.

Under the Federal grants for experiment stations much of the scientific research for agriculture accomplished in the various States in the past 3 decades has been carried on. The appropriations lost to experiment stations under the order amount to $1,095,222.

The extension work done cooperatively with the States, supported in part by the Federal funds now chopped 25 percent, carried the results of the scientific research to the farmers. County agricultural agents are the embodiment of this educational service. The loss is $1,018,000.

The State universities that have carried higher education to thousands in the opening years of this century are supported in part by the Morrill and Smith-Lever Acts, the funds of which are now cut by a quarter of the appropriated amount. Loss to this educational work is $1,804,024.

Federal aid to land-grant colleges has flowed partly through the Department of Agriculture and partly through the Department of the Interior, the latter having been made the agency of a flat sum of $50,000 for the support of instruction in agriculture and the mechanic arts in each State.

It seems probable that the curtailment of these funds which are of long-standing authorization under the Morrill, Hatch, Smith-Lever, and other acts was made by Executive order rather than under other provisions of the Economy Act passed early in the Roosevelt legislative program because by making it a matter of reorganization the 25-percent cuts can be made effective for subsequent years rather than just for this year.

The fact that President Roosevelt has made reductions of equal percentage in all of the agricultural science and education grants to States, instead of singling out any one activity for more drastic cuts or abolition, will meet a favorable response in many quarters.

CONTINUE SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH

By Science Service, Washington, D.C., June 13, 1933

The progress of science is geared to the advance of our civilization. After food, shelter, clothing, freedom, and the pursuit of happiness, the advancement of knowledge should be man's major concern. In fact, without science and its fruits we would be still scratching the ground with a stick, still starving in offyears when nature is not bountiful, still at the mercy of the elements like mere animals.

America spends perhaps a hundred and fifty million dollars a year on scientific research in industries, in universities, and in Government departments. This is an insignificant sum in dollars, but its results will pay dividends through the ages to come. The cost of thus adding to knowledge is less than the cost of the transitory beautifying of America's pretty faces with cosmetics.

This investment in scientific research must be continued, just as the hungry must be fed and the unemployed must be given jobs.

It is more important to keep the wells of science flowing than to reforest the waste spaces of America. And the profits will be larger.

Uncle Sam in his opulent years expended a mere 30 cents on scientific research on behalf of each of his 122,000,000 children. Of similar magnitude are expenditures for science in universities and industry. These can be trimmed by a few cents, perhaps, but for the sake of posterity they must not be eliminated.

Universities, for the sake of future generations that they serve through research equally as they educate their present students, must be allowed to continue fundamental research in science. The great foundations through which rich men have repaid their profits to their civilization, must continue their wide and important research programs.

Industries that hope to rise again are continuing fundamental research to the best of their financial ability. Stocks of those organizations that are thus sowing seeds for the future should be worth more eventually than those of companies that are merely coasting on past momentum.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I desire to endorse what the Senator from Nevada has most eloquently said. The work to which he refers is of tremendous value, and ought by all means to be continued.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I feel constrained to make the point of order that the pending amendment constitutes legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I be heard on the point of order before the Chair makes his ruling?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will withhold the ruling if the Senator desires.

Mr. McCARRAN. It is my view—I may be in error in this, and I will take the ruling of the Chair on it—that the appropriation is already made, and that this is merely an allocation, as the amendment designates, out of an appropriation already established by act of this Congress.

Mr. BRATTON. And in that respect it constitutes legislation. I have made that point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment constitutes legislation, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, after line 20, it is proposed to insert the following:

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION

For an investigation of housing conditions and rentals in the District of Columbia by the Public Utilities Commission, including personal services and other necessary incidental expenses, fiscal year 1934, $2,500, and such sum shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States in the manner prescribed in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1934.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this has been approved by the Budget as a joint resolution, and is in support of a measure offered by the able Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and to carry into effect in part the very voluminous and excellent recommendations made by a committee that investigated rents within the District of Columbia. It is desired by the officials of the city.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, on Saturday I offered an amendment to the farm credit bill for an appropriation out of the balance left in the seed and feed loan fund of the Agricultural Department for the control and eradication of grasshoppers in North Dakota, Montana, Minnesota, and other States that may have them.

I received a telegram from Governor Langer of North Dakota stating the situation. Since that time, however, I have had a telegram from the president of the agricultural college. He does not seem to think that quite as many counties are affected as the Governor thought, and we have cut down the appropriation from $500,000 to $300,000.

With that statement of the matter, I submit the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 6, after line 20, after the amendment of Mr. KING heretofore agreed to, it is proposed to insert the following:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Loans for grasshopper eradication and control: For loans to counties for the purpose of aiding in grasshopper eradication and control during the calendar year 1933, to be made by the Secretary of Agriculture, subject to such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, $300,000, to be made immediately available to such Secretary, notwithstanding the provisions of section 5 (a) of the Farm Credit Act of 1933, out of the balances of funds authorized and directed to be made available to the Secretary of Agriculture for seed and feed loans pursuant to the act of February 4, 1933 (Public, No. 327, 72d Cong.), and not used for such loans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I regret to delay the Senate, but the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] a few moments ago stated that he desired to offer an amendment to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD] offered that amendment.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Arkansas gave it to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BRATTON. Very well.

So far as I know, Mr. President, that completes the amendments.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, just one moment.

A few days ago, led by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], some very beautiful sentiments were expressed in honor of the Senator who has just had charge of this bill. No one on this side of the aisle had an opportunity to say anything.

All that was said by the distinguished leader of the majority, and others who followed him, is shared fully by every Member of the Senate on this side of the aisle as well as on the other.

I have only one observation to make. After having watched rather closely the activities and the general demeanor of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BRATTON], I am reminded of the story about McKinley.

When President Hayes was in the White House, 2 or 3 weeks following the election of Mr. McKinley to the House of Representatives, he called at the White House to say something to the President. Justice Harlan, the famous jurist from Kentucky, then on the Supreme Bench as an Associate Justice, came into the White House just as McKinley was leaving. Justice Harlan said, "Mr. President, who is that young man?" The President replied, "That is a new Congressman from Ohio." The Justice said, "Watch him! You cannot tell how high that young man will climb."

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, it has been my privilege to serve in this body for more than 8 years. They were pleasant but strenuous years. They were years filled with memories which I shall treasure in the future.

Mr. President, I appreciate the many courtesies, the many acts of cooperation, and the many kindnesses extended to me by every Member of this body, as well as the several employees of the Senate, far more than any master of English could express in words.

Perhaps on the eve of my expected departure I may say a few words which could not have been said appropriately heretofore. Some people throughout the country, and some of the papers throughout the Nation, criticize the Senate from time to time. Permit me to embrace this opportunity, under these circumstances, to say that, in my opinion, the Senate of the United States is the one forum left which constitutes the bulwark of the safety of the American people. Let there be one tribunal left in this Commonwealth of 125,000,000 people, where the minority may be heard without restriction as to time or as to relevancy of the subject matter.

When we review history we recall that virtually every step of progress originated with the minority, but, due to their insistence and their repeated efforts and their consistent advocacy of it, it finally became the policy and program of the majority.

Mr. President, virtually every step of advancement made by society originated with the minority. Let there be one tribunal left in this Nation where the minority may speak freely and without proscription, either as to time or relevancy or pertinency of the subject matter.

I repeat, this is the one tribunal left in this country which constitutes the bulwark of the safety of its unorganized, inarticulate masses.

Mr. President, I shall leave the Senate soon with the confident assurance that every Member of this body serves unselfishly, diligently, unflaggingly, intelligently, and effectively. There is not a Member of this body who is unable to enter private life and earn for himself and those dependent upon him far more than the compensation received here. Members of this body, separately and collectively, render an invaluable service to the unorganized and inarticulate people throughout this country.

Mr. President, I cannot express adequately the fond recollections I shall carry with me of association with you. The ties of friendship which it has been my privilege and my good fortune to form here constitute a heritage more valuable to me than dollars and dimes. Although we may be separated, in a sense, I shall be with you in warm friendship, and I shall cherish throughout my allotted threescore years and ten every act of courtesy, every act of kindness, every act of cooperation you individually and collectively have shown me. You have been far more generous to me than I deserved.

Mr. President, I regret exceedingly my inability to tell you how much I am genuinely devoted to each and every one of you, how I shall miss you, how I shall carry as the choice possession of my life the remembrance of the daily association with you.

I may sum up my concept of the Senate of the United States in one sentence: It is the greatest body of men assembled together on the face of the earth. [Applause on the floor of the Senate.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BRATTON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, ask for a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. BRATTON, Mr. GLASS, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. HALE, and Mr. KEYES conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARTICLE BY ARTHUR KROCK

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, this afternoon in the course of my remarks I referred to an article which appeared on yesterday in the New York Times written by Mr. Arthur Krock. I have been informed by my friend the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] that Mr. Krock does not feel that the language in his article was subject fairly to the interpretation which I put upon it.

Personally I am unable to read the article in any other way than according to the interpretation in which I referred to it this afternoon; but in justice to Mr. Krock and myself I ask unanimous consent that the article referred to be inserted in the RECORD immediately following my remarks, so that readers may be able to determine for themselves whether or not the construction I put on the article was justified.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to say further just one word, that I had at no time any thought that any statement which I considered a misstatement in Mr. Krock's article was inserted either through malice or through deliberate intent. I have known Mr. Krock a great many years, have been on terms of most cordial friendship with him for almost 20 years, and I regard him as one of the best newspapermen of the country, and one of the ablest publicists in the country. I at no time had any thought that any misstatement he may have made was made through malice, or even intent.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY—ADMINISTRATION POLICIES AND EXPENDITURES

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I shall take just a few moments to conclude my remarks.

I find in the report of the Committee on Military Affairs this additional finding:

> However, we find that lower prices could have been obtained for articles of a quality sufficient to meet all requirements, and that fewer articles would have served all practical purposes of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

Mr. President, the following observation appeared in the Des Moines Tribune:

> New services are being placed in many cases in the hands of inexperienced officials, who will be called upon to purchase supplies in large quantities.
>
> The opportunities offered for dishonest conspirators are without parallel save in time of war.
>
> It would be possible for the entire Government program to be wrecked on the shoals of official dishonesty.
> If there was graft in the purchase of the Conservation Army kits, it is fortunate that it has been discovered thus early, and public confidence in administration of the Federal recovery program demands that such offenders be punished promptly and rigorously.

I am not contending that there was anything more than carelessness in the purchase, the inadvisable purchase, as far as these toilet kits were concerned. Again, it is shown that no one man can assume all the authority that is being imposed upon the President of the United States, I care not who he is or where he is or to what party he belongs, and he be expected to supervise in detail all these things, without the very thing to which I am referring this afternoon happening.

My reason for making no statement against the bill was the fact that I do not want to interfere with the President's program or be put in the attitude of interfering with it. It is his "new deal." It is the "new deal" of his party. I did not make a speech against the bill at all. I contented myself with voting against it, and I believe that in the end it will be shown that my judgment was correct.

I desire to go just a little bit farther, and comment upon this industrial recovery bill we have just passed.

I read an editorial from a weekly newspaper published in a town of not in excess of 4,000 people. It is as follows:

> In its largest sense the act is another distinct and startling departure from historic American individualism. Our forefathers came to this country to escape governmental shackles of one kind and another. Up to 30 years ago the ordinary citizen hardly ever came into direct contact with the Federal Government. How different today! Perhaps the change has been necessary, but the growing complexity of government, and the increasing tendency toward governmental regulation of everything, are not without aspects which give thinking observers pause.

Let me suggest this: I represent an agricultural State. We passed an agricultural bill, and it had some far-reaching authority granted in it, but there is no authority given that would insure that the farmer will be able to secure prices for his products sufficiently high to equal the cost of production. There is no way by which he can get an increase in price except by curtailing his acreage, reducing the amount of his produce, and in that way economically force up the price. That is the only relief there is for the farmer. But how different in the case of the industrial recovery measure. The whole machinery of this measure is based on the idea of prices equal to the cost of production. It is proposed to fix hours of labor, to have production allocated, to have the whole of industry put in a Government strait-jacket from top to bottom.

Everyone knows that most of our industries are overcapitalized now. If the trade associations are in the control of the biggest industries, controlling the working conditions and the amount of wages to be paid, we all know that they are going to try to cover into their capital costs every possible bit of capital they can, because their friends own this capital all along the line.

What does that mean? It means increased cost to the consumer; it means a high price level, the highest price level they can maintain. It means that the farming population have only a remedy that is equivalent to saying to them, "You can get an increased cost if you reduce your acreage and reduce the amount of your product. That is the only way you can get it. If, however, you buy the farm implements of the big trusts or buy the automobiles of the big concern, you will pay the cost agreed upon by the trade association belonging to these big organizations."

There has never been such an effort in this country to impose upon the consuming public a shackle from which they are not going to be able to liberate themselves as is imposed in this bill. We have just passed a bill carrying appropriations amounting to $3,300,000,000 and put into the hands of one man the power to carry it out. If anyone thinks we are going to get out from under this legislation easily, he is wrong. It is going to react. It will have the same effect the soldiers' legislation has had. It will have the same effect the delegation of authority for Federal reorganization of Government bureaus has had. Instead of a saving of $200,000,000, we will find a reorganization program coming here, when the highest estimate put on the saving was only $25,000,000, with most of the savings being taken out of items which should not have been reduced, including extension service, vocational education, experimental stations, and agricultural colleges scattered over this country.

Mr. President, let us get the reaction that comes from this legislation. I now quote from an editorial in the Des Moines Register:

> The industrial recovery bill is three things in one:
>
> It is a vast plan for putting over $3,000,000,000 into roads, bridges, railroad grade crossings, and such things. The idea is to provide employment and to stimulate business.
> It is a reform of our Federal tax system to some extent. That grows out of the necessity of voting new taxes to provide interest money and a growing fund for eventual retirement of the new $3,000,000,000 debt.

I want to suggest this. Heretofore we have been saying that we are going to have a bond issue for a public-works program. Is this a bond issue? Oh, no; this is a direct appropriation out of the Federal Treasury, which subjects every dollar of revenue that comes into the Treasury to this obligation. Yet it is said we are going to cut the soldiers' compensation 50 percent, 25 percent, 18 percent, or 15 percent in order to balance the Budget. What is balancing the Budget? This is a direct appropriation. This is not a bond issue. Heretofore we have been able to segregate these matters, we have been able to separate them, we put a bond issue on its own footing. Under this condition we may not be able to sell a bond. It makes no difference whether we sell a bond or not, this $3,300,000,000 is appropriated, and it has to come out of any revenue which comes into the Federal Treasury. I say it is not dependent on a bond issue at all. Next this editorial states:

It is a scheme for basic reorganization of all our industries, making them sustain wages, reduce working hours, and avoid overproduction of goods, and giving the President power to compel every unit of industry to abide by this program or quit operating.

Very well. What is the farmer going to do? I want to suggest this. Suppose he wants to buy a farm implement.

Who is going to regulate it? The board of directors—five of them. I understand that Alex Legge is being favorably considered as one of them; that Mr. Swope, of the General Electric, is another one; that Mr. Sloan, of General Motors, is another one; that Mr. Teagle, of the Standard Oil Co., is another; and that Mr. Richberg, attorney for one of the labor-union groups, is another.

Do you think, Mr. President, the fact that the farmer is not able to sell his crop at a fair price will have any effect on Mr. Legge's desire to reduce the cost of farm implements? No; all he will be thinking about is getting a return on the capital investment of the International Harvester Co. I have great admiration for Mr. Legge; I think he is a very successful and very efficient business man; but I want to say now that if these men are put in authority it will be centralizing the control of the business of this country in the hands of big business to such an extent that the little fellow will never have a chance to look in so long as this law shall remain in operation.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. FESS. One of the liabilities incident to this character of Government work is the pressure that is put upon those administering the law by business men to buy their products. As the Senator knows, during the World War a great number of splendid citizens offered their services at a dollar a year, some of them—I would not say all—thereby being given an opportunity to make contracts with the Government, and it was found that a number of these gentlemen were selling to the Government. As I ran over the list which was presented here, including trucks and various other articles, it occurred to me how readily those producing them could come to the Government representatives, set forth that the Government must use these things, and argue that if they could sell them to the Government labor would be employed. So, on the basis that this is an unemployment-relief measure, it is put up to the Government that the Government ought to buy this product or that product in order to employ labor. The result is that the Government is very likely to purchase a great number of things in large quantities that otherwise it could get along without, and do it on the basis of giving employment to those engaged in the manufacturing industry.

That is just as inevitable as it is that the sun will rise in the morning, and the first thing we know we will be indulging in the wildest waste of money, just as we were during the war; we will be spending it like drunken sailors; that is inevitable. Sufficient has already taken place to justify that statement.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me just say that on page 2, line 21, of the so-called "national industrial recovery bill" there is a provision reading:

To accept and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services.

There is the dollar-a-year man. He is not going to come here for any other purpose than to be able to promote and to further his own interest; and we all know it.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, it just came to my attention yesterday, and I verified it today, that the executive secretary of a great national fertilizer association has accepted employment as an assistant in the agricultural survey work while still retaining his high-salaried position. There is not anything that the farmer will demand more than fertilizer; and, of course, it is most advantageous to have a representative of the national fertilizer association as one of the assistants in the administration of the farm relief law. We ought to make such a thing impossible; and yet that is just what is going on at this hour.

Mr. DICKINSON. It was my intention, I will say to the Senator from Ohio, to move to strike out the words I have just read, but, in the hurly-burly here, I overlooked it. I do not think the Government ought to accept the services of any dollar-a-year man, regardless of who he is, because he has an ax to grind or he would not be here.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. May I ask my good friend from Iowa a question? This seems to be somewhat of a complaining ceremony on the part of my regular Republican friends. I was wondering if it lies within the mouth of the Republican regulars to complain of any mistakes that may have been made? My recollection is that the Republican regulars have prevented amendments wherein we would have liberalized the sections that are mentioned, more or less, and that they have been supporting the inclusion in the law of the things of which they complain. I do not know of any support that could be depended upon for that part of the program that I thought was being criticized as much as that of the regular Republicans. They have been the bulwark of support for things they are now complaining of, and every time we got up something good the Republicans were against it.

Mr. DICKINSON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Louisiana that I know nothing about what the other Republicans thought about this situation, but I know what my record is. I voted against it all along the line; I voted to strike out title I, which is the title I am criticizing now.

Mr. LONG. And the Senator was right.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, since the Senator from Louisiana made his interrogatory immediately following my observation, I should like to remind him that I did not vote for the agricultural relief bill, to say nothing about the revolutionary measure which we have passed today.

Mr. LONG. That time the Senator from Ohio was right. But it is impossible to get enough Republicans right at any one time to do any good. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. DICKINSON. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Iowa have both cast enough bad votes in the past to make up for any good ones they may have cast more recently. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, let me say, in view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Louisiana, that the situation which greets us is as broad as it is long. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, I think probably the safest way would be to follow the course of the Senator from Louisiana and vote on both sides. [Laughter.]

Mr. LONG. That is right; never make a mistake.

Mr. DICKINSON. Mr. President, I quote further from the Des Moines Register:

That, in brief, is the program.

It is extremely radical from several standpoints.

First, in the amazing speed with which it has been rushed to adoption and in the method of enforcement that it provides. It is not a case of Congress enacting detailed legislation prescribing the conduct of industry. It is a case of Congress agreeing swiftly to certain broad purposes and conferring upon the President almost unlimited powers for a fixed period to dictate. Congress largely abdicates. Instead of the President having merely a negative limited veto power over legislation enacted by Congress, Congress voluntarily puts itself for a period in the position of having only a negative, limited veto power over policies decided upon by the President.

That is another thing I have been complaining about—the transfer of dictatorial power and the centralization of dictatorial power in one man's hands.

Second, the program is radical in that it involves various departures from campaign pledges of the administration, including pledges imbedded in the party platform. The platform, for instance, included the pledge of strict enforcement of antitrust laws, and President Roosevelt went to much more than usual lengths in insisting that the platform must be considered a set of binding pledges. Yet this plank, among others, is unequivocally abandoned. That it may be quite right to abandon it is a proper subject for separate debate. That it has been abandoned is the only point here.

Third, the program is radical as a reversal of the long-fixed attitude of America on the relation of Government to our economic processes, and is especially a reversal of the long-fixed attitude of the Democratic Party.

President Roosevelt has referred to the program as one of "partnership" between business and Government. Others call it Government control. The distinction lacks a difference. There can be no Government partnership—since Government possesses the sovereign power—without Government control. There can be no reason for partnership except to assure control.

Here it might be interesting to note an article which I notice in this morning's Sun, which said that we had had control of the railroads for these many years and that the control has not resulted in anything but excessive expenses and bad management.

I quote from the Baltimore Evening Sun of yesterday as follows:

CAUSE AND EFFECT?

In the statement made by Russell C. Leffingwell, Morgan partner, at the close of the Morgan inquiry Saturday appears this interesting juxtaposition:

"Banks and railroads have been more the subject of legislation and supervision than any other American business activities. The losses of the public in banks and railroads have probably exceeded their losses in any other field."

Since the Washington administration is about to engage in control and supervision of industry on a scale hitherto unapproached, it would be well to give thought to the plight of the banks and the railroads. Mr. Leffingwell's statement may be more than historical; it may be prophetic.

So if it is thought that industries will be secured by having Government supervision, those who entertain that view are wrong. Continuing from the editorial with reference to the partnership of Government and industry:

Now, this kind of partnership is not unfamiliar in other parts of the globe. To some extent it is familiar in even the "democratic" countries. Military reasons are largely back of that fact. To a much greater extent it is familiar in the new type dictatorships that have sprung up since the war. The comparison usually has been made with the Communist dictatorships. It can rather more aptly be made within the Fascist dictatorships.

The fundamental theory in the Fascist countries is that a democratic government based on those principles of "individual liberty" that grew up in the nineteenth century and that are the foundation as yet of our political and economic system, is no longer workable. The theory in the Fascist countries is that, far from maintaining a separation between the functions of government and the functions of business, the greatest task of government is to control the economic processes.

While our experiment in Government control is explicitly declared to be for the period of the emergency and is limited as to time, it is nevertheless an acceptance in a considerable degree of the Fascist view. Nobody knows—nobody can know—how much or how little of the new attitude, the new philosophy of government, the new social doctrine, will remain after the emergency.

To recognize these facts is merely to look without blinkers.

History is on the gallop everywhere in the world, and nowhere more so than in the United States.

I want also to quote from the editorial in the Herald Tribune, of New York, which is as follows:

That peril is that, under the guise of emergency relief, the country will be saddled with a permanent dictatorship of industry from Washington. The most thoughtful minds in Washington view such a danger as too clear a possibility to be a pleasant prospect for anyone who prefers America to Russia.

Mr. President, let me suggest that when we find a lot of business men saying, "Oh, I do not know what we are going to do, but I am for this bill," let me ask why are they for the bill? They are for it because they think it is going to help them fix prices; because they think it is going to help them put their competitors out of business; it is because they think they are going to have their own way, and that all they have got to do is to get the approval of the Government and then they can go ahead and do as they please. We have had too much of that already. I believe we are putting into the hands of this group an authority to do that very thing. I am hopeful that the Supreme Court will still retain some of the fundamentals upon which our Government was founded and hold a great deal of the present bill unconstitutional.

Continuing:

Why else the extraordinary grant of authority in the act? The powers delegated to the President are universal and as complete as any central executive committee of the U.S.S.R. could desire. Under them the President could take charge of each and every industry and regiment it in every essential item of activity. It could allocate business among the going concerns, restricting the output of each; it could direct the prices at which the products could be sold; it could fix hours and wages.

No wonder that Benjamin M. Anderson, Jr., one of the leading economic experts of the country, views the project with dismay. No one mind has the wisdom to administer such a vast and intricate system of control. Not all the economic experts of the Nation possess either the statistical basis or the theoretical conclusions upon which to determine action. If the powers embodied in the act are really used upon the scale authorized, the result can only be disaster. We think Mr. Anderson's view will be endorsed by practical and experienced minds generally.

Such is the colossal and revolutionary change in American industrial life—for owner and worker alike—which Congress is authorizing the administration to make whenever it cares to do so. To be sure, the President now proposes to place at the head of it an able man of large business experience, Gen. Hugh Johnson. No Columbia professors need apply at present! But considering how the President stands between two groups of advisers—the steady men of experience on the right, the professorial radicals on the left—and how quickly he crossed from one to the other in the case of the embargo and inflation, who can be sure that he will uphold a limited, conservative administration of this act? How can anyone feel sure that if the radicals of the "brain trust" gain in influence they may not effect a gradual extension of the control authorized by the act and, under the glib title of a "planned society", fasten permanently upon the country an industrial dictatorship? It is no secret that precisely this is the goal desired by the more radical minds close to the President.

There is the dismaying, not to say terrifying, aspect of the industrial recovery bill. May such fears be disappointed! But it seems to us vitally important that the country should appreciate, even though Congress does not, the risks that are being invited. In the months to come there will be need for all the careful watching, sound criticism, and forthright protest that the wisdom of the country can muster.

Mr. President, the bill is going to become a law. The new organization is going to be set up. Industry is going to be put in a strait-jacket. I am wondering where the little independent fellow who happens to invent a potato digger is going to be able to get within the regulations provided in the bill? His only hope would be to go to a big concern like the International Harvester, or some similar large concern, and say to them, "I have something which I have invented. I have to sell it to you because I cannot manufacture it as cheaply as you can manufacture it. You provide the rules and regulations, under the provisions of this act, and, therefore, I must come to you and delegate to you the power to manufacture and sell the thing that my brain has invented."

The bill will do away with individual initiative. It will do away with the things that have made America great. It will do away with a great deal of the individual initiative that has been the making of the big industries and that has dictated the progress of this country for 150 years. I hope the Supreme Court will set aside most of the law that is involved.

Mr. President, I submit these remarks not as a protest against the passage of the bill but on account of the $3,300,000,000 we have just appropriated out of the general revenues of the Government for the support of this program which I have just described to the Senate.

FIFTEENTH ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE OF ARMENIA

Mr. KING. Mr. President, a few days ago in New York City there was a large gathering of American citizens of Armenian birth or descent for the purpose of celebrating the fifteenth anniversary of the independence of Armenia. At this gathering resolutions were adopted, and I have been requested by a number of those participating, as well as by the chairman of the meeting, to offer for the RECORD a copy of the same. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions so adopted be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Fifteen hundred or more American citizens of Armenian birth and Armenians at mass meeting in Webster Hall, New York City, on May 21, 1933, in celebration of the fifteenth anniversary of the independence of Armenia, held under the auspices of the Regional Council of the Armenian Revolutionary Federation, which set up the Armenian Republic on May 28, 1918, subsequently recognized by the war-time Central Powers, including Turkey, the former allied and associated nations, including the United States and Soviet Russia, after having heard the Honorable William H. King, United States Senator, and Vahan Cardashian, of New York, speak, unanimously adopted the following resolution:

"Whereas (a) in November 1917 Russia, having fallen under the control of the Bolsheviki, withdrew from the war and abandoned the Transcaucasus front, including the district then known as 'Russian Armenia', and thus left and exposed the Armenian people, numbering upward of 1,700,000, to the mercy and menace of the Turkish Army;

"(b) In the midst of chaos and many and overwhelming problems, caused by this Russian defection, the Armenian people summoned their supreme spiritual powers; they improvised a government and fighting units; proclaimed their independence on May 28, 1918, and in one of the decisive battles of the World War around Karakliss and Sardarabad, between May 29 and June 3, for 5 days 30 Armenian battalions withstood 50 Turkish battalions, and on June 4, 1918, compelled Turkey to recognize Armenia as an independent state.

"(c) Even as early as December 30, 1917, Lenin, by special decree, had recognized the right of Armenia to independence, and in August 1920 the then Soviet Foreign Commissar, by two long telegrams to the Armenian Premier, reaffirmed Russia's cordial acquiescence in the independence of Armenia.

"(d) Following the armistice the Allied Powers compelled the Turks to retire in favor of Armenia from those portions of former Russian Armenia which the Turks, in the agreements of June and July 1918 with the Armenian Republic, had retained for themselves, and in January and April 1920 the principal allied and associated nations, including the United States, extended a de jure recognition to the Armenian Republic.

"(e) In consideration of military services rendered by Armenians to the allied arms and in fulfillment of their solemn war pledges the principal allied nations allotted to the Armenian Republic, under article 89 of the Sevres Treaty of August 10, 1920, and subject to an arbitral decision by the President of the United States—thereafter duly rendered—about 45,000 square miles in the Provinces of Erzerum, Trebizond, Van, and Bitlis—a tiny corner of historic Armenia, now deserted and lying fallow and prostrate.

"(f) Soviet Russia, pursuant to its political and military conventions of April and June 1920 with the then Kemalist Turks, as also two of the allied nations furnished Kemal with gold and munitions to enable him to thwart the execution of the Sevres Treaty.

"(g) Soviet Russia, having accomplished the occupation and conquest of Azerbaidjan and Georgia in April and May 1920, and, as a means of establishing direct contact with Kemal by land, sought to bring the Armenian Republic under its control; to that end it fomented, in May and August 1920, abortive uprisings in many localities in that Republic and, in September 1920, instigated Kemal to attack it, and then actively cooperated with Kemal in his operations to subdue the Armenian Republic;

"(h) On October 14, 1920, Moscow, for the second time, by an ultimatum, demanded (1) that Armenia offer free passage to Russian troops to join the Kemalists, (2) that she sever relations with the Allies, and (3) that she denounce the Sevres Treaty; which ultimatum Armenia rejected;

"(i) Soviet Russia then sent a special envoy named "Le Grand" to Erivan, and through him solemnly committed itself to the preservation of the territorial integrity of the Armenian Republic, and also gave assurances with regard to Armenian rights against Turkey under the Sevres Treaty, conditioned, however, upon withdrawal by the Armenian Government in favor of a junta designated by Moscow;

"(j) Pressed by great odds, cut off from the rest of the world, and relying upon commitments and assurances by Moscow, the Armenian Government was induced and compelled to withdraw on December 2, 1920;

"(k) Thereafter, in contempt and violation of its commitments and assurances, Moscow, by a treaty with Kemalist Turkey dated March 16, 1921, and under subsequent arbitrary arrangements, decimated the Armenian Republic; alienated major portions thereof, or about 16,000 square miles out of 26,196 square miles, to Turkey, Azerbaidjan, and Georgia; gained absolute control over the remnant through a hand-picked and subservient junta; and, further, denounced the rights of Armenia against Turkey: Therefore be it

"Resolved—

"(1) We reaffirm our uncompromising adherence to the independent and united Armenia as recognized and defined by the former allied and associated nations;

"(2) We remind the Government of the Soviet Union that in the light of its direct and active responsibility for the plight of the Armenian people since 1917, as also for the overthrow of the Armenian Republic, considerations of honor and elementary equity impose upon it the plain duty of at least restoring the territorial limits of the Armenian Republic as they actually existed in September 1920, and to that end—

"(a) To invite or force Turkey to retire from the districts of Kars-Ardahan-Ararat; and

"(b) Reintegrate these, together with Nakh-Itchewan, Karabagh, and Akalkalak, in so-called 'Soviet Armenia.'"

ARAM T. PROUDIAN,
Chairman, Meeting.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. BYRNES submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 9, 14, 15, 25, 26, and 32.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 12, 22, 23, 24, 27, 28, 29, 31, 35, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, and 48, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, amended to read as follows: "and notwithstanding any provisions of law to the contrary, the Administrator is authorized to expend during the fiscal year 1934 not to exceed $2,000 for actuarial services by contract, without obtaining competition, at such rates of compensation as he may determine to be reasonable"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 20: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 20, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$13,950" and insert in lieu thereof "$13,110", and in the same line strike out "$1,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,530"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 36: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 36, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter inserted by said amendment and restore the matter stricken out amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 10. The President is authorized, in his discretion, to suspend the extra pay or reduce the rate of extra pay allowed to commissioned officers, warrant officers, and enlisted men of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard while on flying duty, and to distinguish between degrees of hazard in various types of flying duty and make different rates of extra pay applicable thereto."

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 7, 10, 11, 13, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 30, 34, 43, 44, 45, 46, and 47.

CARTER GLASS,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
FREDERICK HALE,
FREDERICK STEIWER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. WOODRUM,
JOHN J. BOYLAN,
W. W. HASTINGS,
J. P. BUCHANAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana suggests the absence of a quorum. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Costigan	Kean	Robinson, Ind.
Ashurst	Cutting	Kendrick	Russell
Austin	Davis	King	Schall
Bachman	Dickinson	La Follette	Sheppard
Bailey	Dieterich	Lewis	Shipstead
Bankhead	Dill	Lonergan	Smith
Barbour	Duffy	Long	Steiwer
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Thomas, Okla.
Black	Fess	McCarran	Thomas, Utah
Bone	Fletcher	McGill	Thompson
Borah	Frazier	McKellar	Townsend
Bratton	George	McNary	Trammell
Brown	Glass	Metcalf	Tydings
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Murphy	Vandenberg
Bulow	Gore	Neely	Van Nuys
Byrd	Hale	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Harrison	Nye	Walcott
Capper	Hastings	Overton	Walsh
Caraway	Hatfield	Pope	Wheeler
Carey	Hayden	Reed	White
Clark	Hebert	Reynolds
Connally	Johnson	Robinson, Ark.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, it is necessary to have a brief executive session. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCKELLAR in the chair). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

COMPTROLLER OF CUSTOMS—JOHN J. KENNEDY

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States nominating John J. Kennedy, of Biloxi, Miss., to be comptroller of customs in customs collection district no. 20, with headquarters at New Orleans, La., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I understand that the Committee on Finance has already approved Mr. Kennedy's nomination. I see the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in the Chamber, and I yield the floor to him.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to report that nomination favorably.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of John J. Kennedy, of Biloxi, Miss., to be comptroller of customs in customs collection district no. 20, with headquarters at New Orleans, La.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be considered and confirmed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The calendar is in order.

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Frederic H. Taber, of Massachusetts, to be a member of the board of directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the unexpired portion of the term of 2 years from January 22, 1932.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FEDERAL POWER COMMISSION

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Herbert J. Drane, of Florida, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission for the term expiring June 22, 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

IN THE MARINE CORPS

The legislative clerk proceeded to announce sundry nominations in the Marine Corps.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I ask that the nominations in the Marine Corps be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none; and, without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate return to legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas.

The motion was agreed to.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from South Carolina if the motion is to agree to the conference report which contains the report of the committee receding from Senate amendments numbered 14 and 15.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, those amendments are included in the agreement.

Mr. BLACK. I desire to explain very briefly what I understand the effect of the motion to be.

I take it that the Senate is overwhelmingly in favor of utilizing for American soldiers the Government hospital facilities that were built for American soldiers. That was so manifest a few days ago that we did not even have a record vote. I cannot believe that at least 90 percent of the Senators are not in favor of using American hospitals, built for soldiers, for the soldiers who are sick.

If we vote for this conference report, we vote against using the soldiers' hospitals for American soldiers.

I make that statement for this reason:

A few days ago I made the statement on the floor that there were approximately 15,000 empty beds in the hospitals for soldiers. That included both the hospitals under the Veterans' Administration and the other Government hospitals where veterans heretofore have been taken for sickness. I offered an amendment to the bill which would authorize the use of the Government hospitals for sick soldiers. It was agreed to. Our conferees have receded from that amendment. In other words, if we agree to this conference report, by that vote we approve leaving vacant 15,000 beds in United States hospitals that should be used for soldiers who are sick.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Is the Senator speaking of the amendment that was adopted at his instance when this bill was before us?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. JOHNSON. And that amendment is not in the conference report?

Mr. BLACK. As to that amendment, it has been reported back here by the conferees that they have receded from it.

Mr. WALSH. That is, the Senate has receded?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I wish to identify the particular amendment.

Mr. BLACK. I will make it perfectly plain.

Mr. JOHNSON. I recall the amendment. I am thoroughly familiar with it, and thoroughly in sympathy with it. That amendment is out of the bill now, as I understand.

Mr. BLACK. The Senate conferees have reported back that the Senate has receded from that amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON. I see.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, let me make it perfectly clear: There are about 15,000 empty beds in the Government hospitals in the United States. In the last 2 months a thousand employees have been discharged in those hospitals. About 9,000 of those beds are in regular veterans' hospitals. The beds are empty. They have been made empty by reason of the regulations adopted.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question there?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Government has not abandoned all hospitalization of disabled veterans, has it?

Mr. BLACK. The Government has not abandoned all hospitalization.

Mr. FLETCHER. How did this come about? A few years ago they did not have beds enough.

Mr. BLACK. They would not have beds enough now if they would take care of the soldiers who are sick. They did not have beds enough when these rules were promulgated. They had hundreds, and, I understand, thousands, of sick soldiers on the waiting list.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but I assume that the Senator desires to know the situation insofar as the conference was concerned.

Mr. BLACK. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator in order to permit him to state it.

Mr. BYRNES. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama was offered on page 50 to a section providing for hospital and domiciliary facilities. By his amendment he added $1,000,000 to the provision in the Senate bill of $1,000,000. The section to which this amendment was offered, and added, provides not for the hospitalization of veterans but for the construction of buildings. The Senate conferees were confronted with the situation that the Senate had added $1,000,000 to a section to carry out the purposes and provisions of an act providing for the construction of buildings when, as the Senator from Alabama says, we have more buildings than we now have use for, more facilities than we actually require.

The conferees on the part of the House called attention to this fact, stating that there was absolutely no necessity for adding $1,000,000 to the million dollars provided in the bill, which million is for the purpose of constructing additional buildings, when, as the Senator says, we now have buildings which are not used to full capacity. The appropriation for hospitalization is contained in amendment no. 7, which was increased by the Senate, and is increased by the bill as it now stands.

Mr. FLETCHER. How much?

Mr. BYRNES. From $85,273,000 to $85,773,000.

The conferees on the part of the House urged, too, that it was an entire departure from the principle of hospitalization that was now being followed. The Senate conferees were confronted with a fact which I know the Senator from Alabama was not aware of, and certainly the Senator from South Carolina was not aware of, at the time the amendment was offered. The conferees on the part of the Senate had to recede.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, the amendment not only provides an additional appropriation, but there would have been no difficulty whatever, if the conferees desired to utilize these hospitals, in changing the position of this amendment, because it uses this language:

That not less than one half of $2,000,000 so appropriated shall be used for supplying hospital treatment for veterans, without regard to whether their disability was service connected or not.

Mr. President, the Senator said at the end of his statement that the House conferees thought we were departing from the hospitalization policy. We are departing from the policy in the regulation, but we are not departing from the policy of the law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. In other words, the Senator's amendment changed and broadened the regulation of the President in dealing with hospitalization?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. So that the amendment not only included an appropriation but also included legislation extending hospitalization benefits to veterans?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is absolutely correct. In other words, the regulation has been written in such a restricted form that it emptied the beds.

I do not admit that we have more hospital facilities than we need. I do admit that we have more hospital facilities than we are using. There is a vast difference between having more hospital facilities than we need and having more hospital facilities than we are using. So the question simply comes down to this:

Here are these hospitals, all over the Nation, built with the people's money. They were built and dedicated for the use of the soldiers. They are not being used for soldiers. They are being used now, I understand, for those who are injured in the reforestation camps. I have no complaint against that if the soldiers are first taken care of; but I do insist that it is unjust, and it is little short of inhumanity, when there are thousands of sick soldiers all over the Nation, and there are thousands of empty hospital beds in hospitals for soldiers, to enforce regulations which deprive those sick soldiers of the use of the hospitals which were built for their benefit.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH. In what respect does the present regulation that the Senator is complaining of differ from the policies and regulations prior to this? Is it true that sick soldiers are denied hospitalization unless the sickness is service connected?

Mr. BLACK. Unless it is service connected, or they have followed one other provision in the bill and hospitalized certain permanent and incurable cases. That is correct.

I take the position that the hospitals have been built with Government money for soldiers. Whether we were right or wrong in building those hospitals, they were built. I think we were right.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. For the purpose of information I desire to ask the Senator whether there is any economy in keeping these beds vacant. I assume that the 15,000 veterans who have been discharged from the hospitals—and, as a result, we have 15,000 vacant beds—must be taken care of somewhere by somebody. If they are taken care of by the county, the county would be borrowing money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, or in some other way would have to raise the money to take care of them.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I am asking the Senator whether it would not be economy—in other words, whether it would not be cheaper—to take care of these 15,000 men in beds that are already provided and are idle than it would be to shove them onto the responsibility of somebody else, in some other way that would have to be provided elsewhere. If we were thinking only of economy and nothing else, would it not be cheaper to take them into these hospitals than it would be to put them out and let the beds be vacant and have them taken care of somewhere else?

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator fully. If all we are to consider is the dollar—if we think of nothing on earth but money, and forget that there is a human being involved, a sick man who served in the United States Army, and think only of the dollar—a sick soldier who is incapable of caring for himself will be treated somewhere. If he goes into a town where there is a charity hospital, certainly that town is not going to let him die for lack of treatment. The probability is that that town will be borrowing money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in order to take care of those who need charity.

Mr. REED. The provision of the law which permitted ex-service men suffering from non-service-connected disabilities to be taken into these veterans' hospitals was written in 1924 by the committee of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and myself were members, and we framed the law exactly on the theory that these men were charges upon the community in some fashion; that if the Veterans' Bureau did not take care of them, the counties or the cities or the States would have to; that it was absurd to have beds vacant in Veterans' Bureau hospitals, and turn these men away to be charges on the public in some other respect. The theory suggested by the Senator from Nebraska is just exactly what inspired the writing of that law at the time.

Mr. WALSH. And only those would be taken care of for whom there were facilities.

Mr. REED. Yes; of course.

Mr. WALSH. That is important.

Mr. REED. That privilege was available only when there were vacant beds in Veterans' Bureau hospitals over and above what were needed to care for those who were suffering from their war-time disabilities.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator in that viewpoint.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, we have heard a great deal, and we still hear a great deal, when a conference report is brought in and the Senate conferees recede from the attitude adopted by the Senate, about the arguments presented by the House conferees. I hope that some arguments were presented by the Senate conferees in this case.

I wonder whether anyone pointed out the fact that for a great many wears we have been granting a statutory award of $50 a month for arrested tubercular cases. That award has gone out in the Economy Act, and a very pitiful substitute arranged therefor. The opinion of everyone whom I know who has given this matter any thought is that those men who were drawing $50 statutory awards will all be charges on the community within a very few months, because they will have to go back to full-time work. They are unable to do that work, and they are going back to be taken care of by somebody. In other words, if the opinion of these men who have studied this matter is correct, there will be far more necessity for hospitalization from now on than there has been in the past. Does the Senator agree with me?

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator fully. Of all times to put men out of the hospitals this is the worst. It is at a time of depression, it is at a time of undernourishment, it is at a time when thousands of men have been deprived of allowances they have heretofore received from the Government. There can be no possible economy in depriving these men of this hospital treatment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have been told that an Executive order has been made quite recently which opens these vacant beds in these same hospitals to men from the Civilian Conservation Corps. Can the Senator tell us whether that is true or not?

Mr. BLACK. I think that is correct. I referred to that a few minutes ago.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have just asked the Assistant Sergeant at Arms to find for me a telegram which I had placed in the RECORD either yesterday or the day before from the commander of the American Legion at Oteen, N.C., in which he made a statement that a number of these reforestation employees had been admitted into the hospital there, which was denied to the soldiers.

Mr. BLACK. I think that is absolutely correct.

Mr. CUTTING. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the telegram which the Senator from Idaho introduced into the RECORD will be found on page 5754 of Monday's RECORD.

Mr. BLACK. Will not the Senator read it?

Mr. BORAH. The telegram reads as follows:

OTEEN, N.C., June 12, 1933.

United States Senator W. E. BORAH,
Senate Chamber:

One hundred beds have been ordered available for workers in reforestation camps at Oteen Hospital. Some patients already here, with transportation paid by Government to and from hospital. Men are not ex-service. Veterans of wars to get in hospital must be totally disabled, destitute, and can get in hospital only when Legion or friends pay their transportation. Please use your influence to defeat Presidential compromise passed by House.

D. D. SILVERMAN,
Commander American Legion, Oteen, N.C.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I should like to have the Senator from Alabama say what he thinks of the situation portrayed in that telegram. The hospital at Oteen, N.C., is intended for tubercular patients. These members of the Civilian Conservation Corps who have been enlisted in this corps within the last 2 or 3 weeks, if they are tubercular, and if they need the care of the hospital at Oteen, should never have been accepted in the first place; whereas the veterans who have been dismissed from that hospital, and sent out without even the carfare to get to their homes, at least have behind them a record of service to their country. It seems to me it is incredible that such an order could have been made.

Mr. BLACK. I said a few minutes ago that, so far as I was concerned, if there were vacant beds in soldiers' hospitals, I would have no objection whatever to those beds being used for the employees of the Civilian Conservation Corps; but I do think that the soldiers of this country should have a prior right in the hospitals which were built for them.

I am not going to discuss this amendment at length. I am going to ask, and hope I shall receive, a record vote. I am curious to know how many Senators there are who will put themselves on record as favoring depriving American soldiers of the use of beds which are now empty, in hospitals which were built to accommodate them when they might become sick. I will note with some interest the vote.

I hope that it will be decisive enough so that all will understand that the Senate intends that the hospitals built to be used for the benefit of the American soldier must and shall be used for his care.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, of course, any argument of economy is now obliterated. The question before the Senate is whether we shall choose these Civilian Conservation Corps enlisted men, or whether we shall stand with the veterans for the use of these hospitals.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. In addition, many of us have had appeals from veterans in our home States who have tried in vain to get into the Civilian Conservation Corps. It was impossible for all of them to get in. I wish it distinctly understood that I do not join in the criticism of this movement. As a matter of fact, I was and I am thoroughly in sympathy with it as a great progressive movement to put men to work; but as for choosing between the two—the American soldier and the members of the Civilian Conservation Corps—with reference to the use of hospitals built for the soldiers, I have no hesitation in making my choice.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, am I to understand that these hospitals are open to people who are in the reforestation service?

Mr. BLACK. That is a fact.

Mr. FESS. If that is true, how can there be any objection to opening them to the soldier who is sick? I have had some question as to whether we ought to open the hospitals for every person who once served the country, who might be sick, without any reference to his disability being connected with the service, but if we are opening the hospitals for civilians, there certainly is no ground whatever for closing them to the soldiers.

Mr. BLACK. I agree with the Senator. Of course, the Senator understands that, so far as I am concerned, I would have no hesitation in having the Government use the hospitals for any soldier who is sick. I do not question how he became sick. I have no hesitation in stating that I believe that the cities, the counties, the States, or the Nation, should supply hospital treatment to every indigent person in this country who is ill and unable to obtain treatment for himself, and I think the Government can well provide treatment to the men who served in the war.

I am going to ask for a record vote, and I want it understood that the issue is very sharp and very simple. If Senators vote for the conference report, they vote against utilizing the beds in the hospitals built for American soldiers by the very soldiers for whom the hospitals were built. When a Senator votes to approve the report, he votes in favor of the use of those beds for members of the Civilian Conservation Corps, or to let them remain vacant while sick soldiers seek for hospital treatment in vain.

I am going to ask for the yeas and nays on the conference report.

Mr. STEIWER. Mr. President, I do not intend to detain the Senate for a moment, but I think an explanation is in order from me.

As Senators know, my name was added to the list of conferees late yesterday afternoon. I attended the first conference last night. This particualr matter had already been considered, and I was under a misapprehension or misunderstanding as to the action taken. I make no complaint concerning it. I have no fault to find with anyone else, but I was mistaken. I accordingly signed the conference report.

I want it known that I signed the conference report under a misapprehension, because I propose to vote with the Senator from Alabama; and I do not want it thought that I am trifling with the Senate in signing a conference report and voting the other way.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I observe in the independent offices appropriation bill an item which was changed by the Senate, which increased the allowance of $5,000 for experimental purposes to determine the value of certain types of treatment to $15,000.

I may explain that in the State of Washington there is a lake known as "Soap Lake", and the waters of that lake were found to be of great benefit in the treatment of Berger's disease. I have just asked the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. HATFIELD], who is a physician, to give me some little explanation of the meaning of that term. It affects the arteries of the body; and it appears that a great many veterans, because of their service and the exposures and hardships incident thereto, have become afflicted with that peculiar and dreaded disease. The waters of this lake are apparently the only remedy that has been yet found that will do any good to those suffering from that disease. That was the reason for the inclusion of this item of $15,000 for experimental work, particularly in that field. But that has been stricken from the bill, and an appropriation of $5,000 substituted in place of one of $15,000.

I merely call attention to that as an example of seeming parsimony in dealing with veterans suffering as a result of their service.

THE LONDON ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay a vote on the conference report. Apparently we are heading straight toward final adjournment. No matter what happens, regardless of any possible injustice to the veterans, Congress must adjourn before Mr. Neville Chamberlain can make his speech in London. I understand that Mr. Chamberlain is now waiting breathlessly for the American Congress to adjourn in order that he may deliver an address to the House of Commons and tell them then what he and the President of the United States have decided on with reference to the war debts.

Of course, all authority for dealing with the debts is lodged in the Congress. Until the Congress alters its policy, if ever—and I hope it never will—there is nothing to discuss with reference to war debts, because Congress is on record as being opposed not only to cancelation but to any possible reduction.

Mr. President, I read in the headlines tonight, in the late edition of the Washington Star, the following:

UNITED STATES TO ACCEPT "TOKEN" PAYMENT ON DEBTS, CHAMBERLAIN SAYS—BRITISH CHANCELLOR INDICATES HE IS AWAITING ADJOURNMENT OF CONGRESS BEFORE ACTING—COMMONS BELIEVES AMERICA WILL AGREE TO SMALL AMOUNT—LONG-AWAITED STATEMENT MADE AS STATE DEPARTMENT RECEIVES NEW NOTE FROM LONDON

A note from Great Britain on the war debts was received at the State Department late today.

It is down there now.

This was announced while Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, was explaining his Government's position on the debts to the House of Commons.

Indications were that the text would be withheld until an American reply has been formulated, with both to be made public simultaneously.

This is the Associated Press story.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Not just now.

Mr. BLACK. I should like the Senator to let us have a vote on this motion. I know that he is interested in it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I will yield the floor in just a second. Quoting further from this Associated Press article:

LONDON, June 13.—A satisfactory Anglo-American settlement on the war-debt installment due Thursday was forecast tonight by Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a 3-minute speech before the House of Commons.

The Commons had waited the whole day for Mr. Chamberlain's pronouncement, while the World Economic Conference was torn with dissension over the war-debt issue.

"The British Ambassador today handed the American State Department a note setting out the British proposals concerning the June installment", the Chancellor said.

"We expect to receive President Roosevelt's reply tomorrow.

"We have no reason to suppose it will be other than satisfactory. But as it has not yet reached us, I am not in a position to state its terms."

AWAIT ADJOURNMENT

The American delegation made no comment, but the general opinion was that the Chancellor's announcement to the Commons is being held up and British public opinion is being kept in the dark regarding terms of the proposal until after the American Congress adjourns.

So, Mr. President, evidently the tender which will be made is a tender of 10 percent. They would like to have the debt settled on a 10-percent basis. Apparently they have assurances from the Chief Executive that that will be satisfactory. In the meantime, however, Mr. Chamberlain is breathlessly waiting for this Congress to adjourn so that he can give the glad tidings to Europe.

Mr. President, there is no use for me to take the Senate's time, but these matters should be brought to the attention of the Senate and to the attention of the country. No matter how much injustice we may do to the veterans of the Nation, orders have apparently been issued that Congress must adjourn tonight so that Mr. Chamberlain may make his speech and say to a Europe which is waiting expectantly that 10 percent will be accepted as satisfactory on the war debts.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Haltigan, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H.Con.Res. 23), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 5661) entitled "An act to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes", to make the following necessary changes in the language of the bill:

In the first sentence of the second paragraph of subsection "(y)" of section 12B (added by the bill to the Federal Reserve Act, as amended), insert after "State bank" and before the parenthesis the words ", which term shall also include all banking institutions located in the District of Columbia"; and in the same sentence strike out "State authority" and insert "authority."

In the seventh paragraph of subsection "(1)" of such section 12B, after "Corporation", insert a comma and "or a member of the fund provided for in subsection (y)."

In the last paragraph of such subsection "(y)" strike out the word "title" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words with reference to this amendment. The amendment which was adopted was offered to a section providing for the construction of buildings, which, as amended, reads:

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize an appropriation to provide additional hospital, domiciliary, and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons entitled to hospitalization under the World War Veterans' Act, 1924, as amended, and for other purposes", $2,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That not less than one half of $2,000,000 so appropriated shall be used for supplying hospital treatment for veterans, without regard to whether their disability was service connected or not.

The appropriation providing for the hospitalization of soldiers is in an entirely different section of the bill. Two million dollars would be a mere bagatelle compared to the amount that is appropriated for hospitalization. The amount appropriated in this bill for the hospitalization of ex-service men, instead of being $2,000,000, is $85,773,000. So the question is not whether by voting down this conference report and sending the bill back to conference, by agreeing to a million dollars additional we could provide hospitalization for any number of men suffering from disabilities not service connected and who desire hospitalization.

We might as well be frank with each other and be frank with the veterans. By the legislation heretofore adopted in the Economy Act that discretion was placed elsewhere. In exercising it the situation has arisen which has been described by the Senator from Alabama with 9,000 vacant beds in the veterans' hospitals and 6,000 in the Army and Navy hospitals. That cannot be remedied nor can we deceive ourselves or anybody else by contending that by providing a million dollars in the bill we can put 15,000 veterans back in the hospitals. That can only be done by the President of the United States changing the regulations.

The item in this bill for hospitalization carries $86,000,000. By putting a million dollars in a section providing for the construction of buildings we cannot hope to remedy the situation sought to be remedied. The responsibility must rest with the President in the exercise of the discretion vested in him by the Congress. We now have $85,773,000. If he wants to get the soldiers who are suffering from disability not service-connected back into the hospitals, it would take not $1,000,000 but $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 to do it. If we add $1,000,000 to the item for the construction of additional buildings we are not going to put the ex-service men back into the hospitals. We will accomplish nothing. If anyone should attempt to construe such action to mean that under it ex-service men should be put back in hospitals, rather than that buildings should be constructed, it would imply that $1,000,000 would make possible putting back into the hospitals all the men who now are not entitled to hospitalization because their disabilities are not service connected. That would not be reasonable. The thing must be done in a reasonable manner. It would take $25,000,000 or $30,000,000, and not merely $1,000,000 added to a provision designed for the purpose of constructing additional buildings and not to provide hospitalization.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BYRNES. I do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. As I interpret the Senator's remarks, the amendment of the Senator from Alabama merely added a million dollars which may be used in the construction of hospitals?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; to carry out the purposes of an act to authorize an appropriation to provide additional hospital, domiciliary, and out-patient dispensary facilities for persons entitled to hospitalization.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. Is it true that it could not be used to make available hospital facilities now existing for the class of patients referred to?

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Alabama, since it has been called to his attention, contends that under the language of his amendment it could be so used. I said that if that construction were given to it, there would then be $86,000,000 approximately for hospitalization, and but $1,000,000 appropriated for the hospitalization of ex-service men who are suffering from disabilities not service connected. If we are to give hospitalization to men suffering from disabilities not service connected, it has got to be done in an intelligent and proper way. We would have to provide millions of dollars. The President has authority to do it by changing the regulations, and if he should do that, and if $86,000,000 should not be sufficient, Congress, when it again meets, could provide for that. Certainly $1,000,000 is not going to provide hospitalization facilities for all the men suffering from non-service-connected disabilities. Because that is true, the Senate was forced to recede.

I know my friend from New Mexico is perfectly sincere in his statement as to the references made to the arguments of the House conferees. The conferees on the part of the House, of course, must present their arguments, and the conferees on the part of the Senate, as ambassadors of the Senate, must in conference make their arguments in behalf of the amendments agreed to by the Senate, and then we must recede or the House must recede, or there must be an effort, sincere and honest, to compromise the difference between the two Houses. The conferees can only do the best possible under the circumstances. The conferees on the part of the House insisted on their position in this matter.

The Senator from Oregon [Mr. STEIWER] says he was not present. That is true. The Senator from Maine was. I do not now see him on the floor, but he, too, would state what was argued by the conferees on the part of the Senate in an effort to retain this amendment in the bill. But, confronted with the argument that the Senate amendment was added to a section providing for the construction of additional facilities instead of providing for hospitalization by facilities now available, and confronted also with the argument that it provided only a million dollars for all the men suffering from non-service-connected disabilities, in the compromise that must result in the conference, the Senate conferees receded. I hope the conference report will not be rejected because of the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, when this amendment was previously under consideration I then stated that I was not much interested in the million dollars. The Senator from South Carolina said at that time on the floor that there was an ample appropriation in the bill to fill every veterans' hospital in the United States without adding the million dollars.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say so again. The President of the United States, by a change in the regulations, and using the $86,000,000, can put into the hospitals the non-service-connected men; and if there shall be a deficiency, it can be taken care of; but I say to my friend from Alabama in all sincerity—and I think he will agree with me—that a million dollars will not put the men suffering from non-service-connected disabilities into the beds of the hospitals, even if there are 9,000 beds instead of 15,000 in the Army and Navy hospitals. The Senator from Alabama will agree with me in that. It would take twenty-five, thirty, or forty million dollars to do it.

Mr. BLACK. I do not agree to that at all. As a matter of fact, Mr. President, all this is aside from the issue. As the Senator has just stated, there is a sufficient appropriation to put these men in the hospitals; so why talk about $1,000,000? What difference does it make whether this is $1,000,000 or $50,000,000? If they already have all the money, they would spend it; it shows the futility of arguing about a million dollars.

I said before that what I was interested in was the other feature of the bill; and I can suggest a very easy way in which the conferees on the part of the Senate could compromise with those of the House, and that would be to strike out the million dollars and leave in the remainder of the provision. That is what we are interested in. We are interested in having these men put into the hospitals. We are not even interested in the section of the bill to which the provision is attached; it is immaterial to which section of the bill it is attached. We are interested in whether or not these beds are to remain empty while soldiers who are sick cannot get in hospitals. We are interested also in the situation where we find the hospitals being filled with members of the Civilian Conservation Corps while their doors shut in the face of the American soldiers who have served honorably in the wars of this country. We are vitally interested in that.

No, Mr. President, there can be no side-stepping this issue on the part of the bill in which the amendment is found. There can be no evading the effect of the vote on the theory that the money is already there. What difference does it make whether the money is there or not if the men are being deprived of the right to go to the hospitals?

The amendment is not mandatory. I regret exceedingly that it is not. I regret exceedingly that I did not seek to bring about an amendment of the rule so it would have required in language that none could misunderstand that the facilities of the hospitals of the United States should be used for soldiers who are sick and for whom they were built.

Mr. President, this is the plain, simple issue on which the Senate is going to vote. I should like to ask a question of the Senator from South Carolina, because I want to get at this matter in the best way possible. Would a motion to recommit the bill to conference deprive the Senator of the vote which he later desires to get on the other proposals if the motion should prevail? If so, I should not want to make the motion, and should be perfectly willing to let the vote be taken on the conference report.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I think the inquiry should be addressed to the Chair; but certainly, in my opinion, if the report were recommitted that would be the end of it.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BLACK. If a motion should be made to recommit the bill, and the motion should prevail, would it deprive the Senate of passing upon the other amendments upon which no agreement has been reached?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would not, because the conferees have already reported an agreement.

Mr. BLACK. If I should move to recommit, the bill would be recommitted only as to the amendment I have been discussing if the motion should prevail?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. HATFIELD. How much of the $20,000,000 authorized for the building of hospitals was actually expended for that purpose? Does the Senator remember?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know. I am not familiar with that. At the present time, of course, what we are interested in is trying to get beds used that are not now being used.

Mr. HATFIELD. I understand. These beds were made available for the World War veterans or for any other soldiers, including the Spanish-American War veterans, were they not? The beds that are now available and the hospitals that were constructed were so provided because the Government of the United States wished to take care of our veterans?

Mr. BLACK. That is my understanding.

Mr. HATFIELD. There have been regulations adopted which deprive the soldiers of being cared for. Is not that true?

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. The overhead of these hospitals will go on just the same, whether the hospitals are half full or wholly full?

Mr. BLACK. It would not go on completely, because of the number of employees who have been dropped from the rolls; but that is a comparatively insignificant matter.

Mr. HATFIELD. With the exception of the discharge of a few nurses and a few orderlies, the overhead will go on just the same, regardless of the number of patients in the hospitals.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HATFIELD. If a public or charitable hospital of some city is to take care of these soldiers, they will not be taken care of as well as if they were afforded the opportunity to be cared for in our Government hospitals, which are properly manned with capable physicians and a capable staff of nurses.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct; but I might add that the probability is the county will borrow the money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to take care of them in the county almshouse.

Mr. HATFIELD. Even if the county borrowed the money, the World War veterans will be only half taken care of; and whoever is admitted to one of those improvised hospitals will not have the care that he would have in a well-regulated, well-conducted hospital.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. It is simply a waste and squandering of the opportunity to give these men medical and hospital treatment which has been provided for them, and which is there ready and waiting for them.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does he know whether the Civilian Conservation Corps is paying for the care in these hospitals of the men who are being sent there?

Mr. BLACK. I do not know, but I should imagine that probably they are being paid for by the Conservation Corps; but, after all, it is only a question of taking the money out of one pocket and putting it in the other.

Mr. CAREY. Would it not be taken away from the veterans if they are not paying for it?

Mr. BLACK. Of course, it would, but even then they would draw no pay for their care in the hospitals. Hospitals that were built for American soldiers are being utilized for people who are no less unfortunate than the soldiers, and who need hospital treatment.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] if he knows.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I did not hear the question of the Senator.

Mr. CAREY. I inquired if the Civilian Conservation Corps are paying for the care of their men in the veterans' hospitals, or is that being paid for out of the appropriation for the Veterans' Administration?

Mr. BYRNES. I know it is not being paid for out of the Veterans' Administration appropriation. There is no legal authority for doing so.

Mr. BLACK. With the statement as to the parliamentary situation made by the Presiding Officer that the effect of the adoption of a motion to recommit will be to leave the remainder of the report here and will simply send back to conference the disputed points, it is my intention——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Alabama will permit the Chair to interrupt, the opinion of the present occupant of the Chair is that if the motion to agree to the conference report is defeated it will carry every item back to conference, those already agreed to and those yet to be considered. If the motion to recommit were carried, it would likewise carry every item back.

Mr. BLACK. Does the Presiding Officer mean that with the parliamentary situation as it is, there is no way to get a separate vote on those items where the conferees have agreed separately and distinct from the items where they have not agreed?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no way to vote on the separate items. If the motion to agree to the conference report is defeated, it will carry back all the items—those upon which the conferees have agreed as well as those upon which they have not agreed.

Mr. BLACK. The Chair stated a few moments ago, in response to my inquiry, that a motion to recommit, if it prevails, would not carry back those amendments as to which no agreement had been reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Upon more mature reflection, the Chair is of the opinion that the motion to recommit, if it should prevail, would carry them all back.

Mr. BLACK. Then the Senate is compelled either to accept the report of the conferees, which deprives the soldiers of their beds, or to send the entire matter back to conference. As I understand the situation, the Senate is compelled to accept the conference report, which would strike out the amendment I have been discussing, or else send all of the bill back to conference, including the matters which have been disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands it, the Senate may pursue either of two courses: First, to vote down the conference report and send it all back, or, second, move to recommit; and if the latter motion prevails it will send back all of the items.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, they all go back either way?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I regret very much being placed in the attiude of having to do that, but it does not change the issue at all. The issue on which we are going to vote here is whether we want to vote in such way that the beds which are now unused in the hospitals of the country will continue to be unused while soldiers are sick and in need. Do we want to vote in such a way that the beds in those hospitals will be used for the benefit of the sick men in the Civilian Conservation Corps, many of whom never saw an army, and at the same time deprive the men who served in time of war of the use of the beds which were built for them?

Mr. President, I move that the conference report be recommitted; and on that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire simply to reiterate, notwithstanding the statement of opinion by the Senator from Alabama as to the issue, that the Senate should know that the issue is whether we will send the conference report back to conference because $1,000,000 was added to an amendment to provide for the construction of additional hospital facilities instead of being added to the hospitalization section, and that in the bill there is $86,000,000 for the hospitalization of ex-service men. We cannot put sick soldiers back in 15,000 beds with only $1,000,000, even if it should be construed as authorizing the use of the money for hospitalization instead of building the section to which it is attached.

Mr. BLACK. What difference does it make about $86,000,000 if the law is not written in such way as to compel the beds to be used?

Mr. BYRNES. It means that every man who can read knows that we cannot put soldiers back in 15,000 beds with $1,000,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I have stated a number of times, and every Senator ought to know, that the $1,000,000 is not what is in issue. I stated that before. I stated it when the bill was passed. It is not a question of the $1,000,000. We could go back and strike out the $1,000,000 so far as that is concerned. It is a question of whether we are going to vote to recede from an amendment which requires the hospitals built for the use of the American soldier to be used for the American soldier instead of being used for members of the Civilian Conservation Corps.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama to recommit the conference report.

Mr. FESS. Mr. President, several Senators wanted to be present when the vote came, and for that reason I think we had better have a quorum. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum is suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Davis	King	Russell
Ashurst	Dickinson	La Follette	Schall
Austin	Dieterich	Lewis	Sheppard
Bachman	Dill	Lonergan	Shipstead
Bailey	Duffy	Long	Smith
Barkley	Erickson	McAdoo	Steiwer
Black	Fess	McCarran	Thomas, Okla.
Borah	Frazier	McGill	Thomas, Utah
Bratton	George	McKellar	Thompson
Brown	Glass	McNary	Townsend
Bulkley	Goldsborough	Metcalf	Trammell
Bulow	Gore	Murphy	Tydings
Byrd	Hale	Neely	Vandenberg
Byrnes	Harrison	Norris	Van Nuys
Capper	Hastings	Nye	Wagner
Caraway	Hatfield	Overton	Walcott
Carey	Hayden	Pope	Walsh
Clark	Hebert	Reed	Wheeler
Connally	Johnson	Reynolds	White
Costigan	Kean	Robinson, Ark.
Cutting	Kendrick	Robinson, Ind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to recommit the bill to the committee of conference.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to make just a brief statement in connection with this amendment:

I was appointed on this conference committee late yesterday afternoon. When the committee met last evening, the statement was made that there were no material changes in the amendments that had been agreed to by a preliminary conference. I did not know at that time that this amendment had been adopted by the conference committee at a preliminary meeting. Nevertheless, I shall vote against recommitting the bill on this item, in view of the fact that the chairman of the conference committee advises me that $500,000 has been added to the appropriation for hospitalization that is contained in the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Where is that? This is the first time we have heard of that.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was so advised by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. On page 44 of the bill the amount of the House appropriation of $85,273,000 was increased to $85,773,000 by the conference report. It does not include the amendment of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator of course will vote as he thinks he should on the measure; but I desire to call his attention to the fact that it was not the amount in which I was interested. It was the question of providing an amendment whereby sick soldiers could be put back in these hospitals, whether their disabilities were service connected or not. That is what has emptied the hospitals. That is what has brought about 6,000 empty beds. The vote here is as to whether or not the Senate desires to approve the method of filling up the hospitals with members of the Civilian Conservation Corps instead of filling them up with American soldiers.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am entirely in sympathy with the position of the Senator from Alabama with reference to hospitalization. However, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama was appended to the portion of the bill which relates to the construction and equipment of hospital facilities, and not to the hospitalization of ex-service men.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. It does not make any difference about where the amendment is attached. The question is, What is in it? It can be put in one section as well as another. The amendment provides that these hospitals shall be used for the soldiers whether their disabilities are service connected or not. Those who vote against recommitment will vote against using these hospital beds for the soldiers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to recommit the bill to the committee of conference. On that question the yeas and nays have been demanded and ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FESS (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WAGNER (when his name was called). Upon this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. PATTERSON], who I am informed would, if present, vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BARBOUR] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. HEBERT. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] has a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. COOLIDGE]. I am not informed how either of those Senators would vote upon this question.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I rose to make the announcement which has been made by the able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT]; to which I add that the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. NORBECK] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]. I am advised that if those Senators were present the Senator from South Dakota would vote "yea", and the Senator from Florida would vote "nay."

I desire also to announce the general pair of the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO] with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. DALE].

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STEPHENS] are detained from the Senate on official business.

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I desire to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] is necessarily detained from the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

I desire also to announce that the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND], if present, would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 31, as follows:

YEAS—48

Adams	Costigan	La Follette	Reynolds
Ashurst	Cutting	Lonergan	Robinson, Ind.
Austin	Davis	Long	Schall
Bachman	Dickinson	McCarran	Shipstead
Black	Frazier	McKellar	Steiwer
Borah	Goldsborough	McNary	Thomas, Okla.
Brown	Hastings	Metcalf	Townsend
Bulow	Hatfield	Neely	Trammell
Capper	Hayden	Norris	Vandenberg
Caraway	Hebert	Nye	Walcott
Carey	Johnson	Overton	Wheeler
Clark	Kean	Reed	White

NAYS—31

Bailey	Byrd	Dill	Glass
Barkley	Byrnes	Duffy	Gore
Bratton	Connally	Erickson	Hale
Bulkley	Dieterich	George	Harrison
Kendrick	Murphy	Sheppard	Tydings
King	Pope	Smith	Van Nuys
Lewis	Robinson, Ark.	Thomas, Utah	Wagner
McGill	Russell	Thompson

NOT VOTING—17

Bankhead	Couzens	Logan	Stephens
Barbour	Dale	McAdoo	Walsh
Bone	Fess	Norbeck
Coolidge	Fletcher	Patterson
Copeland	Keyes	Pittman

So Mr. BLACK's motion to recommit the bill to the committee of conference was agreed to.

REGULATION OF BANKING

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives (H.Con. Res. 23), which was read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed, in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 5661) entitled "An act to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes", to make the following necessary changes in the language of the bill:

In the first sentence of the second paragraph of subsection (y) of section 12B (added by the bill to the Federal Reserve Act, as amended), insert after "State bank" and before the parenthesis the words ", which term shall also include all banking institutions located in the District of Columbia"; and in the same sentence strike out "State authority" and insert "authority."

In the seventh paragraph of subsection (1) of such section 12B, after "Corporation", insert a comma and "or a member of the fund provided for in subsection (y)."

In the last paragraph of such subsection (y), strike out the word "title" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask for an explanation before this is voted on.

Mr. BULKLEY. Mr. President, in the rush of work last night some errors were made in preparing the conference report on the Glass banking bill.

The first correction permits banks incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia to be eligible for insurance, which, of course, everyone intended.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understand that, but the one that struck my ear as it was read was that striking out the words "State authority" and inserting "authority."

Mr. BULKLEY. That is because the banks in the District of Columbia are directly under the Comptroller of the Currency, and he is not a State authority.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Does the Senator state that that applies exclusively to the District of Columbia?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes; the first correction applies exclusively to the District of Columbia.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. How about the second one?

Mr. BULKLEY. The language has been carefully checked by the counsel for the Federal Reserve Board and the Comptroller of the Currency.

The second correction relates to banks which have branches in foreign countries. It was not intended to apply the insurance feature to deposit accounts in those foreign branches. By an inadvertence the temporary part of the bill, that part being effective from January 1, 1934, to July 1, 1934, would have applied to those foreign branches except for this correction.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator means excepting for striking out the words "State authority"?

Mr. BULKLEY. No; that is a different correction.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is the one which excites my interest.

Mr. BULKLEY. I have undertaken to explain that. That relates to the banks in the District of Columbia, and they are not subject to any State authority.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It relates exclusively to them?

Mr. BULKLEY. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In other words, this change in the authority is not a change which applies in any wise, either directly or indirectly, to the State banks?

Mr. BULKLEY. It means State authority in the State where the State banks are located; because the rest of the context is "authority having supervisory power."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the thing we are trying to determine is that this would have no effect whatever upon the original provision in the bill respecting the application of State authority in the States themselves to the insurance section of the bill.

Mr. BULKLEY. Oh, no; the context is "authority having supervisory power." In the State it would be State authority, but the word "State" hade to be stricken out, so as to make it apply to the Comptroller of the Currency in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

INVESTIGATION OF BANKRUPTCY AND RECEIVERSHIP PROCEEDINGS IN COURTS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under authority of Senate Resolution 78 the Chair appoints the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], the Senator from California [Mr. MCADOO], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. HEBERT], and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] as the members of the Special Committee to Investigate the Administration of Bankruptcy and Receivership Proceedings in United States Courts.

RECESS

Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas. I move that the Senate take a recess until 11 o'clock tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 8 o'clock and 50 minutes p.m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 14, 1933, at 11 o'clock a.m.

NOMINATION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 13, 1933

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Reverend Clifford Jope, pastor of the Ninth Street Christian Church, Washington, D.C., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Father, with the coming upon the world of this glorious new day may there be in us a new birth of faith and hope and righteous aspirations and the love which thinketh no evil. Touch our minds to a gentler thought, our hearts to a wiser pity, and our hands to a more liberal devising in behalf of those who know the bitterness of want.

Do Thou grant us ministries from heaven today, so that we may know what is the good and acceptable way, so that we may have an increasing love for all that is true, beautiful, and divine, and so that our whole life may move upon an ascending line.

We commend one another to Thy care. For those who deliberately labor for the good of this land we love best and for those men who seek the peace and recovery of the world at the conferences across the sea we humbly ask the Savior's guidance. In His holy name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 5389) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1934, and for other purposes, numbered 1 to 46 and numbered 48; disagrees to House amendment to Senate amendment numbered 47, and insists upon its amendment numbered 47; agrees to the conference asked by the House, and appoints Mr. GLASS, Mr. BYRNES, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. HALE, and Mr. STEIWER to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1648. An act to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to provide for loans to closed building-and-loan associations; and

S. 1425. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933.

BANKING ACT, 1933

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama calls up a conference report on the bill H.R. 5661, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report see Senate proceedings of June 12, 1933, p. 5769.)

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, the conference report upon this bill embodies, without substantial change, the regulatory provisions of what was originally known as the Glass bill, which passed the Senate in a former session of Congress but failed of passage in the House, together with a provision for the insurance of bank deposits. The report accomplishes the greater portion of the things favored by the House, as expressed in the vote by which the House bill was passed. An amendment to the deposit-insurance provision of the bill has been agreed upon, which insures deposits not in excess of $2,500, effective on the 1st day of January 1934. The provision applies to member banks of the Federal System and nonmember banks, trust companies, and savings banks, and they come into the benefits of the insurance fund upon the same conditions and requirements that apply to banks that are members of the Federal Reserve System. Both classes of banks are required to submit to examination before participating in the benefits of the insurance fund.

Of course, no one could expect to have his way entirely in the passage of a measure of such magnitude as is this. I would insure deposits in full and without waiting over 60 days. There are reasons to support the plan to put the insurance provision into effect by gradual processes. The insurance of deposits up to $2,500 affords much greater protection than would be supposed without examining the figures. In this connection I desire to quote from a recent report of the Comptroller of the Currency covering 4,826 of the 4,836 active member national banks as of May 13:

96.76 percent of the depositors in these banks have 26.71 percent of the deposits and with an average deposit of $183.16 are in the class covered by the $2,500 insurance.

1.78 percent of the depositors have 8.88 percent of the deposits. The average deposit is $3,318.91.

80/100 of 1 percent of the depositors have 8.24 percent of the total deposits, the average deposit being $6,804.04.

53/100 of 1 percent of the depositors have 15.87 percent of the deposits. The average deposit is $19,714.90.

13/100 of 1 percent of the depositors have 40.3 percent of the deposits, the average being $211,846.07.

These figures cover a total of 22,466,060 depositors with total deposits of $14,905,315,000.

These figures indicate that insurance of individual deposits up to the amount of $2,500 leaves less than 4 percent of the number of depositors unprotected.

On the 1st of July 1934 the general provisions of the bill become effective. The general provisions insure all deposits in banks that participate in the insurance funds 100 percent up to the amount of $10,000. On amounts in excess of $10,000 and not above $50,000 the insurance covers 75 percent of the amount of deposits, and on amounts in excess of $50,000 the insurance covers 50 percent of deposits in excess of $50,000. The insurance of deposits in nonmember banks will extend down to the 1st of July 1936, a little over 3 years from this time.

All State banks, regardless of capitalization, whether members of the Federal Reserve System or not, will be permitted to share in the benefits of the insurance fund upon certificates of solvency by duly constituted State examining authorities and submission to examination by the corporation.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. When is that examination going to be made by the corporation?

Mr. STEAGALL. I shall try to make clear to the gentleman the matter he has in mind. The purpose of postponing the effectiveness of the insurance provisions of the bill until the 1st of July, 1934, to afford time for proper examination both as to member banks of the Federal Reserve System and to nonmember banks in order that no injurious results may follow from letting in one class of banks in advance of the other class. That provision of the bill is designed to accomplish exactly what the gentleman had in mind in the amendment which he offered to the bill which passed the House.

If the bill is administered in accordance with the legislative intent, as I have no doubt it will be, the purpose the gentleman had in mind will be fully accomplished.

The board to administer the insurance fund will consist of 3 members, 1 of whom will be the Comptroller of the Currency, and 2 members appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It will be remembered that the Senate bill provided for a board of 5 members, to be made up of the Comptroller of the Currency, 1 member of the Federal Reserve Board, and 3 members selected by the Federal Reserve banks. The original House bill provided for a board of 5, 1 of whom should be a member of the Federal Reserve Board, another the Comptroller of the Currency, and 3 members to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The House amended the bill so as to require a fourth member to be appointed by the President instead of a member to be selected from the Federal Reserve Board. There were those of us who did not think it wise to leave too much of the control of the insurance corporation under management connected with the Federal Reserve banks, and the conference report offers a better provision than either the original Senate bill or the original House bill in that respect.

It is in effect about the same as the provision that was adopted by the House.

There are to be 3 members, 1 to be the Comptroller of the Currency, 2 appointed by the President, and 1 of the appointive members to be chairman of the board.

I have no doubt that the administration and that the Comptroller of the Currency and members of the board who will be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate will administer this law in accordance with the purpose of the Congress and that they will deal fairly and justly with both member banks of the Federal Reserve System and nonmember banks that apply for membership in the insurance fund.

I wish to call the attention of the House to the provisions of this measure which provide relief for depositors in closed banks.

The fund of the insurance corporation is to be made up of $150,000,000 subscribed by the Treasury, in stock of the corporation. This fund, as has been previously stated, represents substantially the amount which has been paid into the Treasury by the Federal Reserve banks in lieu of a franchise tax. Another sum of $150,000,000 will be obtained by requiring Federal Reserve banks to subscribe for capital stock in the insurance corporation in an amount equal to one half the surplus funds of the Federal Reserve banks. A subscription to capital stock in the corporation by member banks and nonmember banks, trust companies, and savings banks participating in the insurance fund will be in the amount of one half of 1 percent of all deposits. This will be in subscription to capital stock in the corporation upon which dividends will be paid at the rate of 6 percent per annum.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEAGALL. In one moment, please.

Assessments both from surplus funds and other subscriptions to capital stock may be called by the Board in installments.

I yield now to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am sure it is with pleasure that the gentleman is able to bring in this conference report, and many of us share that pleasure. The provision which the gentleman is now touching upon is subscriptions required by the banks themselves at this time. Will that subscription be required to be made at once?

Mr. STEAGALL. No. The subscriptions for stock may be called for in installments. It should be remembered that the corporation starts with a fund of $300,000,000, which is a very substantial sum.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. The reason I ask that, the State of Nebraska at one time had a guaranty fund, and the provision which made the most embarrassment during those very hard times was the subscriptions which the banks were required to make to that fund.

Mr. STEAGALL. We have undertaken to safeguard the interests of the banks in that regard.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. I am glad to know that.

Mr. STEAGALL. We have permitted assessments to be made by the Board from time to time, based on deposits to replenish the fund in case it becomes necessary to meet the demands of the situation.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. In just one moment.

We provide that the capital stock of the corporation may be expanded three times by issuing obligations of the corporation. The Senate bill provided for expansion to twice the amount of capital. The provisions of the House bill were accepted. This would give a sum of approximately $2,000,000,000, all of which will be used either for protection of depositors in the banks participating in the fund or employed by the board in loans upon the assets of closed banks. This will furnish relief for thousands of depositors in this country who now have five or six billion dollars tied up in closed banks. This provision of the bill has not seemingly received the recognition which I think its value merits at this particular time.

Mr. MOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. MOTT. I do not find in the bill the provision with reference to insurance of deposits of $2,500 and less, which the gentleman mentioned some minutes ago. Can the gentleman tell me where that is in the bill?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH] or some other member of the committee will find it for the gentleman in a moment. I cannot take time to look up the provision now. The gentleman will find it at the end of the provision creating the deposit insurance corporation.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I understood the gentleman to say this corporation started out with a fund amounting to $350,000,000. Does that represent a direct appropriation from the Treasury?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman evidently did not hear my explanation. We start with an initial fund of approximately $300,000,000, one half subscribed by the Treasury and one half subscribed by the Federal Reserve banks out of their surplus. Next we require banks participating in the fund to subscribe for capital stock of the corporation in sums not to exceed one half of 1 percent upon deposits. These amounts are callable in installments, and will amount to something like $450,000,000. This amount of capital stock may be expanded three times. The amount will, of course, be increased as the number of participating banks increases.

Mr. HASTINGS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. HASTINGS. When is the assessment on the banks required to be paid in?

Mr. STEAGALL. One half at the outset and the other subject to call.

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, in the next few days?

Mr. STEAGALL. When the board is ready to begin business. Of course, they would not call for a subscription for stock on the part of banks until they are ready to put the insurance plan into operation. I take it for granted the board would call for the first installment on the 1st of January. Meantime they would begin immediately to employ their initial capital and its expansion in affording relief to depositors in closed banks.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then one half will be called perhaps about the 1st of next January?

Mr. STEAGALL. Probably one quarter, and a little later the other quarter.

Mr. HASTINGS. And then one half how much later? At the order of the board?

Mr. STEAGALL. Only one half is provided.

Mr. HASTINGS. Well, all of it might be called for at one time?

Mr. STEAGALL. It might be. But the board is authorized to call for it in installments, and that would be done in order to prevent any unnecessary hardships on the banks.

Mr. HEALEY. Will the gentleman continue to explain the provisions concerning closed banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. I think I have made that fairly clear. The bill does not carry a sufficient sum to grant the relief that ought to be extended to depositors in closed banks. Only a few nights ago, Saturday night, I think it was, the House passed a bill which removed the limitations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to loans that may be made for the purpose of aiding depositors in closed banks.

I may say in this connection I do not think we have gone as far as this Congress should go toward affording relief to people who suffer at this time because of the tying up of deposits in banks that are in liquidation or in the hands of conservators.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. If I understood the gentleman's opening statement, we begin the 1st of January next year to insure deposits of all member banks for 6 months up to $2,500.

Mr. STEAGALL. All member banks and all nonmember banks that can qualify.

Mr. SNELL. What happens to them after they qualify; are they examined subsequent to the original examination?

Mr. STEAGALL. The corporation is authorized to examine all banks participating in the fund from time to time to keep check on them.

Mr. SNELL. Then all banks receive the same examination as member banks?

Mr. STEAGALL. That is right; the same examination by the corporation applies to nonmember and member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. SNELL. Beginning the 1st of January?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; and from that time on so long as the nonmember banks participate in the fund. Of course, if they join the Federal Reserve System, they stand in the same category as other member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. SNELL. Do they have to join the System by July 1, 1936?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; but at that time they shall apply for membership and they stay in unless they are rejected.

Mr. SNELL. But between now and next January no insurance applies to bank deposits?

Mr. STEAGALL. There is no insurance between now and the 1st of January 1934.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. McFADDEN. What becomes of the bank that is rejected?

Mr. STEAGALL. The bank that is rejected receives no insurance, of course.

Mr. McFADDEN. Then it goes out of business.

Mr. STEAGALL. Not necessarily. I may say to the gentleman I have not the slightest doubt there will be a good many nonmember banks that will not desire to apply for insurance and that will continue to serve their communities happily and satisfactorily.

Mr. CELLER and Mr. BECK rose.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I yield.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman please tell the House what changes, if any, have been made from the Senate bill concerning the Postal Savings System?

Mr. STEAGALL. We leave that as the Senate amended it, but we continue the Postal Savings law. We do provide that deposits shall be drawn out at intervals of 60 days. That is not a provision of the insurance section of the bill, I may say to the gentleman.

Mr. CELLER. I understand. I am making this inquiry because a number of Members of the House are anxious about the Postal Savings System, want it preserved, and de not want too many attacks leveled against it.

Mr. STEAGALL. We have not abolished that at all. We maintain the Postal Savings System, I may say to the gentleman. So far as I am concerned, I am not disturbed about the Postal Savings System. I cannot see the wisdom of a law that contemplates putting a citizen in jail if he does not put his money in a bank to be employed in trade and commerce and then turns around and offers him an inducement to lock it up in a Postal Savings bank, where it is hoarded. But we are allowing that to continue.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman tell us what we do?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have just told the gentleman that we retained the Senate provision.

Mr. CELLER. That makes many changes. Will the gentleman tell us about that?

Mr. STEAGALL. I say we are retaining the Senate provision which I have just explained.

Now I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the gentleman a few questions in order to clear my mind. In the first place the gentleman speaks of the triple capitalization of this corporation. How is the amount between $300,000,000 and $2,000,000,000 to be raised?

Mr. STEAGALL. First, we increase the capital stock by subscriptions of banks that join the insurance corporation.

Then we provide that the capital may be expanded three times.

Mr. BECK. But how?

Mr. STEAGALL. By selling obligations.

Mr. BECK. That is what I mean, by bond issues.

Mr. STEAGALL. The same as the provision in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act.

Mr. BECK. That answers it.

Mr. STEAGALL. That gives us a fund of sufficient dignity to inspire confidence and to dispense with the necessity for assessments against banks imposing undue hardships; also a fund that will do some measure of the work that ought to be done in relieving depositors in closed banks.

Mr. BECK. Did I understand the gentleman to say that in addition to the power to issue bonds the capital stock of banks can also be assessed?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; the gentleman did not quite follow me. I used the word "assessed." We require them to subscribe for stock in the insurance corporation, and such subscriptions as are obtained in this manner added to the initial fund of approximately $300,000,000 constitute the corporation capital and that capital may be expanded to three times its amount.

Mr. BECK. Just one other question. Suppose a bank has been examined and found to be correct and qualified and is, therefore, a part of the insurance scheme and then suppose 6 months later a further examination shows that it is insolvent, what then becomes of it?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman is too good a lawyer to inquire what becomes of a bank that is found to be insolvent if officials do their duty. There are plenty of ways in which to proceed to liquidate such a bank, but, of course, the insurance corporation would be responsible for its deposits.

Mr. BECK. Has the corporation, then, the power to throw it out of the insurance benefits?

Mr. STEAGALL. No; they pay its depositors, but they can have a bank liquidated. The insurance corporation takes over the liquidation of a bank that is closed, and they maintain a deposit bank in the community for a period of 2 years, unless in the meantime sufficient capital is subscribed to open a new bank. This plan avoids the shock and demoralization incident to a bank failure and also affords protection for depositors.

Mr. BECK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. STEAGALL. This is what is contemplated. There cannot be a bank failure in the usual sense of the word under the provisions of this bill. When a bank closes the corporation goes in and sets up a depositing bank in its place and pays off every depositor in cash. No man can lose his deposits and no man is inconvenienced or harassed by delay in the discharge of the obligations of a bank for the payment of its deposits. [Applause.]

I want to say a word or two more and then I must conclude. I regret that I cannot discuss all the matters in conference and the changes agreed upon. I am trying to cover the matter of chief interest. This bill does not go as far as I would go. It does not accomplish all that I would accomplish. Maybe I am enthusiastic on this subject of bank-deposit insurance. I have worked at it for 15 years. I discussed it in a campaign in my district in 1920. I told my people then that if they kept me in Congress until I became the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee of the House I would promise them that sometime a bill would be passed or that sitting in a conference I would be able to secure the enactment of this legislation. The purpose of this bill and is to promote the public welfare protect the interests of depositors. It rests upon the theory that banking which is not safe for depositors ought to be prohibited by law. It is intended to require common honesty in the operation of the banks of this country and to make it possible for banks to employ bank credits in support of trade and commerce in the United States. [Applause.]

We have worked out this problem as best we can, to the end that there may be no discrimination between nonmember banks and member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

We lay down the proposition that banking is not the individual right of a citizen, but that when we charter an institution to engage in banking, to receive the deposits of the public, it is the duty of the law making power of the Government to see to it that the deposits of the public are protected. Common honesty requires this, the public welfare requires it, and the future welfare of the banks requires it. Bank checks constitute the currency with which 90 percent of the Nation's business is conducted. There is no substitute for it. We must revive the use of bank credit.

The United States Department of Commerce in a statement just issued shows that in April 1930 we had $4,518,000,000 in circulation. We had at that time $65,000,000,000 in bank deposits. In April 1933 we had $6,137,000,000 of money in circulation, or more than $1,619,000,000 in excess of what we had 3 years ago; and yet bank deposits had dwindled to the amount of $22,000,000,000 in April 1933. Public confidence has been destroyed. The public has lost confidence in the banks, and the banks have lost confidence in the public. Officers of the banks live in constant dread of mobs at their doors. Every banker in the country is studying only about how to keep liquid and be able to respond to the demands of depositors.

This bill requires all the banks of the United States to unify their resources for the protection and insurance of the deposits of the public. When this bill is enacted there will never be another bank failure with frantic depositors thronging the doors of a bank demanding their deposits. Under this bill every depositor in any bank belonging to the insurance corporation can go to his bank and get his money, so long as depositors in any other bank which is a stockholder in the corporation in any part of the country are able to withdraw their money. That is the result to be accomplished by this legislation. [Applause.]

Mr. HOWARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. This is a great step toward economic recovery and revival of business. It is the greatest measure for the elevation of banking to a place worthy of a great civilization that has ever been undertaken in the history of the United States. [Applause.] Under this bill and other measures of constructive aid the people of the United States will find their way out of the darkness and into the light of a brighter day. [Applause.]

I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HOWARD. Quite naturally, the gentleman will understand that many of those of us who have not had opportunity to make close study of this are confronted with many perplexing problems. I have just one. I should like to submit it to the gentleman and ask for his happiest definition of it. My question is this, predicated upon the fact that 1 year ago today the gentleman from Alabama, along with myself and other humble Members of the Congress here, were ridiculed because we dared to advocate guaranty of bank deposits. Today everybody applauds the gentleman from Alabama. [Applause.] What I should like to know is what magic is in the gentleman from Alabama that has created this remarkable change? [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman from Alabama has not accomplished it. The wisdom of this legislation has been demonstrated by the sorest and bitterest experience in all the history of the American people, and they have demanded this legislation until, under the new leadership that blesses the Nation, thank God, they have been able to make their voice heard in Congress. [Prolonged applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, first let me extend my own felicitations to the chairman of the committee upon the accomplishment of his laudable ambition in respect to the insurance feature of this bill. But for his unwavering enthusiasm, his complete confidence, and his remarkable tenacity, the insurance of deposits would not have won.

Secondly, let me put upon record my appreciation of as fine an exhibition of patriotism and sacrifice as I ever witnessed, that to be found in the action of another member of the conference committee, the gentleman from Maryland

[Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH]. [Applause.] He did an honorable, a loyal, and in view of his convictions a very difficult thing, in waiving his judgment as to one phase of this measure. Without his thus waiving judgment the conference report would not have now reached the floor of the House and the Senate. By putting the public welfare above individual opinion, he did a service to his country.

He has withdrawn the obstacle in the way by consenting to branch banking in States that explicitly permit it for banks chartered under their own laws, such States being now a dozen or so in number. In the controversy over the respective merits of what are known as "unit banking" and "branch banking systems", a controversy that has been alive and sharp for years, branch banking has been steadily gaining in favor. It is not, however, here proposed to give the advocates of branch banking any advantage. We do not go an inch beyond saying that the two ideas shall compete on equal terms and only where the States make the competition possible by letting their own institutions have branches. In short, we say only that if a State invites the race, let the better horse win. That system which proves itself the better able to serve the people will in the end prevail.

Of equal importance was our agreement as to State banks not now members of the Federal Reserve System. According to the latest figures at my command, those of June 30, 1932, there were then 10,455 commercial State banks, and of all the State banking institutions at the end of the year only 805 were in the Federal Reserve System. Taking into account the closings in the last 11 months and more, there may be 8,000, more or less, that as a result of the agreement of the conferees will by July 1, 1936, a little more than 3 years from now, have to decide whether they will stay out of the Federal Reserve System or by coming in will continue to enjoy the benefits of insured deposits. Confident as we are that very many of them will decide for insurance, this will add greatly to the possibility that presently we may have a unified banking system in the United States. [Applause.] Not necessarily the disappearance of State banks, but the union of all banks in the land in that magnificent fiscal structure, the Federal Reserve System.

There were but two points of serious controversy in the discussions of the conferees—those to which I have just referred, branch banking, the membership requirement together with other details of insurance of bank deposits.

In the second matter, I have been unable personally to bring myself to declare as to all particulars full and confident approval. Insurance of deposits is an experiment that where previously tried in some of the States has failed. Possibly failure came for reasons that will not exist when the National Government undertakes this great task. My doubts go to method rather than to principle. I have never understood why it is impossible or even unwise to extend the insurance principle to the insuring of deposits. That seems to me but a short step beyond the insurance of bank officers by surety bonds. I hope the result to be desired can be accomplished. Personally, I should have preferred that it be done by way of a mutual insurance system fostered by the Federal Government, but if the method here proposed can succeed, I shall rejoice.

In these few minutes I may not discuss the details of the bill. Suffice it to say that after many hours of earnest deliberation the conferees have worked out an agreement that we believe will, as a whole, advance the interests of the Government and meet the needs of the people.

Mr. Speaker, there is no great bill that ever comes before the House without regret on the part of each and every Member as to some particular detail. There are things in this bill I would have changed, there are things other Members would have changed, but compromise is of the essence of all legislation, compromise by all those who desire to accomplish the general purpose. Here that purpose is, by an extensive revision of our banking laws, to furnish more protection to depositors and investors, to distribute better the beneficial uses of capital, to discourage its unwise uses, to strengthen the financial structure of the Nation, to help us out of our present troubles, to lessen the likelihood of their return. There is nothing in the bill, no one thing, that should by itself cause any Member to vote against the conference report. There will be other Congresses.

There will be opportunity to change, as the test of these things may warrant the change. Immediate enactment of the bill will add to the restoring of confidence, and that should be the fundamental purpose in all our action in this session. Because I hope and believe this measure will contribute to restoring confidence among the people, I gladly give it my support. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, there is a misprint in the report on page 6 in subsection (b). About two thirds of the way down there is the language:

> No member of the Federal Reserve Board shall be an officer or director of any bank, banking institution, trust company, or Federal Reserve bank of hold stock in any bank.

That last word "of" should be "or." Then in the next line the word "duties" is incorrectly spelled. May I inquire how one would proceed at this stage of the proceedings to have that corrected?

Mr. STEAGALL. I suggest that the error is purely clerical.

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. STEAGALL. Senator GLASS and I had discussed the matter of errors of that kind, and I suggest that when the bill is passed if we find any errors that are in any sense important they can be corrected at that time.

Mr. LUCE. Very well.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN].

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I first want to congratulate the Committee on Banking and Currency, and especially the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], the chairman of the committee, for the services they have rendered the country in bringing this bill to its conclusion. We all know that the gentleman from Alabama has labored day in and day out, month in and month out, year in and year out to bring about some kind of law that would guarantee bank deposits throughout the land and restore confidence in our banking institutions.

Charles Darwin, the great scientist, in his Voyage of the Beagle, tells of being in South America in 1835, when that country was visited by a series of terrific earthquake shocks that lasted for many days and shook the Andes Mountains from Patagonia to Panama. He said that for days and months and possibly years after the visitation of that great catastrophe everyone in South America seemed doubtful even of the ground on which he stood. His confidence was so shaken in the stability of the universe that he even walked with fear and trembling. He did not regard the ground as that "sure and firm-set earth" to which another great writer once referred.

Mr. Speaker, we have passed through the greatest economic catastrophe in history. Never in the history of mankind has the confidence of the people been so disturbed as it has in the past 3½ years. Never have they had so little faith in our economic institutions. Nothing we can accomplish will do more to restore that confidence and stabilize conditions than the passage of this law to guarantee bank deposits. For that reason I say it would have been a crime—and I mean a crime—for this Congress to adjourn without passing some kind of a law to guarantee these deposits, restore the confidence of the American people, and help to stabilize our economic structure, in order to take advantage of and get the benefits of the legislation that has already been passed and the reforms that have already been brought about.

Yesterday 100 Members of this House, in the face of all the rush to adjourn Congress, signed a solemn agreement that we would oppose any adjournment until this legislation to guarantee bank deposits was brought out and passed. Others would have signed it, no doubt, if it had been presented to them. I inserted that agreement, together with the names signed to it, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD last night so that those men who were willing to manifest that much interest and go that far in attempting to bring about the passage of this legislation might have that fact known to the American people, or at least to all who read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Conditions are already improving. The prices of cotton, wheat, corn, and other agricultural commodities have doubled in the last few weeks. With the legislation we have passed, and especially the financial legislation, when this bill becomes a law, when the deposits in our banks have been guaranteed and the confidence of the American people in our economic institutions is restored, you will see America awaken as it were from her terrible nightmare and move forward into a new era of prosperity. [Applause.]

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. ARENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Maryland yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. ARENS. On page 25 of the report it states that in order to have any State bank entitled to the benefit of this insurance it would have to increase its capital to $25,000. Is that correct?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct; yes. In answering that question I want to answer it completely. It can go in on the 1st of January 1934 and stay in until the 1st of July 1936 without increasing its capital stock; but at that time it would have to increase its capital to $25,000 in order to get into the Federal Reserve System, and so continue insurance for its depositors.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Is it not true that the Senate amendment in this bill seeks to destroy the Postal Savings, and that this provision is taking from depositors in the Postal Savings Department their interest unless they give an advance notice of 60 days of withdrawal?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The provision in the Senate bill was adopted by the conferees. That provision is that a deposit has to stay in a Postal Savings bank for 60 days in order that interest may be received. The reason why that provision was adopted was this:

After this deposit guaranty bill goes into effect there is no necessity of having any Postal Savings System. The deliberate purpose of the conferees was not to do anything to encourage the Postal Savings banks.

Mr. HOEPPEL. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I am sorry, but I do not have the time.

Mr. Speaker, the differences between the House bill, which was passed by a record vote and by an overwhelming majority, and the conference report are briefly but substantially these: First, the members of the board, instead of being the Comptroller of the Currency and four members named by the President, are the Comptroller of the Currency and two members named by the President, one of which named members shall be chairman of the board, no more than two members of the board being of the same political party.

The next change is that although State banks can get the benefit of this fund beginning on January 1, 1934, they must come into the Federal Reserve System or make application for admission to the Federal Reserve System on or before July 1, 1936, but they do not have to come in on a $50,000 capital-stock basis. They can come in with a $25,000 capital stock.

I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. McGUGIN. In that respect, I admire the frankness of this report, in that it does openly what the bill did in the House by covering it up, but I want to ask the gentleman this question——

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. There is no attempt to mislead, I assure the gentleman.

Mr. McGUGIN. Does the gentleman really believe that it is for the ultimate good of this country that all State banks of the United States must be forced into the Federal Reserve System?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I absolutely do not. I absolutely do not. I am just as much opposed to that as I could possibly be, but I will say to the gentleman that even though it is necessary for State banks to prepare themselves to come into the Federal Reserve System by July 1, 1936, still this law constitutes the greatest advance in banking since the Federal Reserve Act was passed.

Mr. McGUGIN. The gentleman will concede that no State bank can remain in existence which does not come into this guaranty fund, over a period of time?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is what I have stated as plainly as I could.

Mr. McGUGIN. And, therefore, in order to come into this fund it must come into the Federal Reserve System, yet the gentleman agrees that is not a good thing, to force all State banks into the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course, the bill is not exactly as I would have it.

Mr. McGUGIN. To make it perfectly clear, we must surrender the State banks over to the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Now, I cannot yield further. I have stated the facts exactly as they are.

Another difference between the conference report and the House bill is that national banks and member banks may establish branches in any State which has passed or shall pass affirmative legislation permitting branch banking. This provision will immediately allow national banks State-wide branch-banking privileges in about eight States, but I am very frank to say that those who favor branch banking are of the opinion that it will cause a drive on the legislatures of the various States by the national and State banks, so that in a short time branch banking will very rapidly spread. That is their hope.

A question arose as to whether or not the conferees on the part of the House—that is, the conferees on the majority side—were justified in yielding on the question of branch banking, in order to get this bank-deposit insurance legislation. After a great deal of deliberation we were forced to the conclusion that we should yield, because we could not have gotten any sort of legislation if we had not yielded, and I will tell you why. A majority of the House conferees were forced to the conclusion that a majority of the Senate conferees did not want any bank-deposit insurance bill at all, and therefore they would be perfectly satisfied for the whole legislative program to be killed. So we were in the dilemma, that we either had to yield on branch banking or get no bill. We decided that if we had a bank-deposit insurance bill it would not only tend to restore the confidence of the American people in the banks and in the business integrity of the country, but if bank deposits were insured and all the people knew that a reservoir of the assets of every bank in the United States was supporting the deposits in their bank, it would tend to sustain the independent bank and tend to restrain the tendency to branch banking. Therefore, we felt we should yield to the Senate provision.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those are substantially the differences between the House bill and the conference report.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. ADAIR. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not this bill contains the provision which was in the House bill prohibiting people who are engaged in banking from engaging in the insurance business?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It does not. That was stricken out.

Mr. PARSONS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. PARSONS. The gentleman has some time remaining. I wonder if he would explain to the House subdivision (n) on page 16, with reference to the relief that this bill gives to receivers of liquidating banks that are now closed? There is no aid given to those that are under conservatorship, to try to save them to reopen, but there is some aid given to those that are now under liquidation. Will the gentleman be kind enough to explain that? I do not think it has been explained to the House.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. It is the same provision that was in the House bill, and that was all gone into at that time. I hope the gentleman will not interject that discussion at this time.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. Why was it necessary to postpone the operation of this guaranty system until the 1st of January 1934?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Because the administration insisted upon it and we could not have gotten any bill at all without it. That is the complete answer.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Certainly.

Mr. GILCHRIST. What was done with the provision in the House bill prohibiting officers of banks from writing insurance policies? Is it the same as it was in the House bill?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No. The provision prohibiting bank officers and banks from writing insurance was stricken out and is not in the conference report.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I cannot yield further. I am very sorry. I have but 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. Speaker, it is said that on one occasion the great Dr. Johnson was strolling in Westminister Abbey with a friend, and that as he gazed upon the tombs of the wise and the great, he used this Latin phrase: "Forsitan et noster nomen miscibitur istis"—"Perhaps our name also shall be inscribed with these."

We all hope and believe that it will be many years before the name of the chairman of this committee [Mr. STEAGALL] becomes a memory, but when that time comes this bill, a legacy from him not only to the people of America but to the people of the world, will serve to inscribe his name among the wise and the great who have performed unselfish public service.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the chairman of the committee yield for just one question before he moves the previous question?

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I withhold the motion and yield to the gentleman from Kentucky for a question.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I have not had an opportunity to read the conference report. Will the gentleman inform the House what provision of the bill insures against national banks' participating in the insurance fund before State banks may participate?

Mr. STEAGALL. They all come in at the same time. That is the purpose of delaying putting this provision into effect.

Mr. BROWN of Kentucky. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. McGUGIN) there were—ayes 191, noes 6.

Mr. McGUGIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and thirty-seven Members are present, a quorum.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. STEAGALL, a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REPORTING OF HOUSE COMMITTEES

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 190

Resolved, That the official committee reporters shall serve the Committee on the Judiciary at its meetings in the District of Columbia during its investigations authorized by House Resolution 132 and House Resolution 172.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer another privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 191

Resolved, That the official committee reporters shall serve the Committee on the Civil Service at its meetings in the District of Columbia during its investigation authorized by House Resolution 146.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 192

Resolved, That the official committee reporters shall serve the Committee on Ways and Means at its meetings in the District of Columbia during its investigation authorized by House Resolution 184.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to ask a question, as I understand, these reporters are paid by the year, are they not?

Mr. WARREN. That is correct.

Mr. SNELL. Then there will be no extra charge?

Mr. WARREN. No.

Mr. SNELL. There is no reason why they should not do this work during the recess?

Mr. WARREN. Not at all. In fact, these resolutions will save money.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resolution will be agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a further privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 189

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the investigation authorized by House Resolution 145, incurred by the Committee on the Judiciary, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $5,000, including expenditures for the employment of clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

SEC. 2. That the official committee reporters shall serve said committee at its meetings in the District of Columbia.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. SNELL. As I understood, there was a partial agreement that there would be no expense in connection with the investigation under the Celler resolution?

Mr. WARREN. I understood it was brought out during the debate in the House yesterday that the expense of the investigation would not exceed $5,000, and we were requested by the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary to make this appropriation. He feels quite sure all of it will not be needed. In the matter of past investigations conducted by the Judiciary Committee under the present chairman, part of the funds allotted have been turned back into the Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. I have no fault to find with the previous work of the committee, but I understood from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COCHRAN] that originally it was not intended there should be any expense in connection with this investigation. However, I shall not object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The statement was that there would be furnished to the committee by the local bar associations all the legal talent, without charge, that the committee needed. In fact, all the members of the Judiciary Committee are able lawyers themselves, and if they needed any other lawyer it would be furnished without charge. But, of course, they may need an accountant here and there to check up fees that have been paid to trustees, receivers, and their attorneys. I think the action taken by the Chairman of the Committee on Accounts in allowing this fund is reasonable, and when properly expended by the committee will result in saving millions of dollars for the people in the future.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES AND THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing I send to the Clerk's desk a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 2

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Constitution of the United States, as amended to April 1, 1933, together with the Declaration of Independence, be printed as a Senate document, with an index, in such form and style as may be directed by the Joint Committee on Printing, and that 3,500 additional copies be printed, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 2,500 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a question? Will the 2,500 copies that are to be distributed among the Members of the House go to the folding room to the credit of each Representative?

Mr. LAMBETH. Ten to each Senator and five to each Representative.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Speaker, would it not be well to amend the resolution so that the two defunct documents could be enclosed in black borders with a heading "In Memoriam"? [Laughter.]

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARKE of New York, for 3 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HOEPPEL, for 1 day, on account of official business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to extend my remarks on the legislative accomplishments of this session.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, would it not be a good idea to make a general request?

Mr. BYRNS. I shall do that later. I wanted to specify the purpose of the extension.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, this means the gentleman will put the remarks in the RECORD at this point?

Mr. BYRNS. Oh, no; I will have to prepare them. I could not do that now.

Mr. BLANTON. They ought to go in the main body of the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNS. All the legislation has not been passed, and the remarks will appear after we have adjourned.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GILCHRIST. For how long?

Mr. BYRNS. Until the closing of the RECORD. I do not think we ought to have any other limitation upon the request. This is usually 10 days after the Congress adjourns.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CONFEREES ON THE BANKING BILL

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object to my colleague's request, but after the gentleman speaks, if anyone else asks unanimous consent, I shall have to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, the magnificent and much deserved ovation which the House accorded my colleague from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], chairman of the conference committee on the banking bill, and the generous applause which the House gave the other members of the conference committee shows the appreciation of the House of its conferees on this measure. I have been so fortunate as to have a close insight into the work of my colleague Mr. STEAGALL, and the other members of the conference, and I wish to add my tribute to the words of praise that have been spoken of them here today. The banking bill is the most important piece of legislation enacted by the present Congress, and the only piece of major legislation to be enacted that was not on the President's program. I believe that the House should feel a deep sense of pride in the passage of the bill. The steadfast support and ardent encouragement which the House gave to its conferees enabled the conferees to wage the battle, to bring the bill back to the floor so much in accord with the wishes of the House and to hold inviolate the fundamentals of the bank-deposit insurance provision. This provision will do more than any other possible thing to restore the confidence of the people, to open the flow of credit, to quicken business and industry, and to strengthen the fabric of our financial life.

Surely we appreciate the tireless efforts and fine work of all the conferees. This House could not have been more faithfully or more ably represented than by my colleague from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE]. I believe that I voice the sentiments of each of you when I say that I feel that special tribute should be paid to the chairman of the conferees [Mr. STEAGALL]. The bank deposit insurance provision of the bill is his child. For over 10 years it has been his dream and for all this time he has labored unceasingly to make real the dream. Long ago he envisioned the benefits to the country from such a measure, and had it been on the statute books when the present depression came much of the disaster and suffering which have befallen us might have been avoided. Not a part of the President's program, bitterly fought by some of the most powerful interests in the land, beset by enemies in high places where it should have had only friends, the bill has been passed because of the fine patience, the splendid courage, and the masterful resource of the chairman of the conferees [Mr. STEAGALL].

The country has had nothing comparable to it since the passage of the Federal Reserve Act. It is one of the great pieces of legislation in the history of the Government. It is indeed "the shadow of a great rock in a weary land." [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 188, a privileged resolution, from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 188

Resolved, That during the remainder of the first session of the Seventy-third Congress it shall be in order for the Speaker at any time to entertain motions to suspend the rules, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 1, rule XXVII; and it shall also be in order at any time during the first session of the Seventy-third Congress for the majority leader to move that the House take a recess, and said motion is hereby made of the highest privilege.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania how much time he desires? I hope the gentleman will use as little time as possible.

Mr. RANSLEY. We have requests for about 20 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Then I shall yield the gentleman from Pennsylvania 20 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, this is the same resolution which was defeated yesterday by the narrow margin of a few votes when we called it up on the day it was reported back to the House and required a two-thirds vote. Today we call it up and only a majority vote is required.

The resolution provides for two methods to expedite the procedure of the House in these closing hours of this special session.

First, the resolution permits the Speaker to recognize Members to move to suspend the rules and pass bills. Our rules provide that such motions to suspend the rules are only in order on the first and third Mondays of each month and during the last 6 days of a session. Of course, the last 6 days of the session cannot be computed unless a joint resolution to adjourn has been adopted. Such a resolution not yet having been adopted, the Speaker is not authorized to recognize Members to suspend the rules and pass legislation which might be of a very important or emergent nature.

The rule also permits the majority leader to move at any time that the House stand in recess. Under our rules we cannot recess at any time except by unanimous consent, for the reason that on the convening of Congress we adopted a rule to meet at 12 o'clock noon on each day, and unless there is unanimous consent we cannot go out of session without adjourning to the next noon hour. That is all this rule does.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman any real assurance on when we are going to adjourn?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have no knowledge, information, or intuition about it. [Laughter.] What I have said is all the rule does. The leaders on the majority side felt that it was necessary to expedite business in the closing hours of this session.

So much has been said by the distinguished and enthusiastic gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] that the American Federation of Labor preferred his bill, the Connery 5-day week and 30-hour week bill, to the industrial recovery bill, I beg to call the attention of the House to the statement of that great American, Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, before the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives in the hearings last month on the national industrial recovery bill, pages 118, 119:

This proposed legislation marks a very definite step forward in industrial stabilization, rationalization, and economic planning. The bill is appropriately termed an "industrial recovery measure." It is, in the judgment of labor, the most outstanding, advanced, and forward-looking legislation designed to promote economic recovery that has thus far been proposed. In the opinion of labor it will, when passed and applied, prove to be a real, practical, constructive remedy for unemployment.

Labor is thoroughly convinced that if the real purpose of the Industrial Recovery Act is achieved, and all is done which can be done by authority of this legislation, 6,000,000 unemployed people, who otherwise would be forced to remain idle, can be given employment within a reasonable length of time.

In operation, industry will be permitted to function in a cooperative way, freed from the effects of evil practices destructive of both industrial ownership and labor, and labor will be accorded enlarged and increasing opportunities for employment along with the exercise of a constantly increasing purchasing power.

Based upon the stabilized, substantial foundation created in industry, standards with respect to hours, wages, and conditions of employment can be established, and this in turn will bring a revival of business in every community throughout the land.

The right to organize into bona fide labor organizations, to bargain collectively, to be represented by representatives of their own choosing, is as essential to the well-being of labor as the exercise of the right of capitalists to form corporations and to engage in organized industrial activities is to capital. A summation of the outstanding provisions of the bill clearly shows that industry may organize and through such organization develop cooperation, eliminate unfair competitive practices, prepare a code of fair competition which sets forth standards covering particular trades and competitive practices within industry. The antitrust laws applicable to industry are suspended so that industry may unite and cooperate for the achievement of the purposes set forth in the act.

The bill provides that the code to be prepared by an association or group of employers must stipulate that their employees may exercise the right to organize, to bargain collectively, and that the individual worker's right to join a labor organization shall not be interfered with.

Employers organized into associations, as provided for in the act, must undertake to reduce the number of hours worked per day and the number of days worked per week to the point where, in the judgment of the President of the United States, employment opportunities will be increased. Along with the reduction in the hours of labor must come the establishment and maintenance of decent wage standards.

I am firmly of the opinion that through the exercise of the authority vested in the association of employers and groups of employers, and the further exercise of the controlling power vested in the President of the United States, the 6-hour day and the 5-day work week can become established and operative in the principal industries of the Nation.

Obviously the bill confers upon the President of the United States most unusual, broad, extraordinary powers. Labor is thoroughly conscious of this fact. Justification for such a proposal is found in the existing emergency. Because it is emergency legislation it is quite proper that such extraordinary powers be vested in the President if economic recovery depends upon the exercise of such unusual power.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY].

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, there was a little confusion in the House yesterday with reference to what I was trying to do in my effort to get up the 5-day week, 6-hour day bill. Some questions were asked me as to how the American Federation of Labor stood on the proposition. Some Members said they understood that the American Federation of Labor was in favor of the industrial recovery bill and therefore were not in favor of the Connery bill at this time, and some Members asked why we did not get up the 5-day week bill before this after all the hearings of the Committee on Labor on the bill and the work that the committee had done during the 9 days of the hearings which had lasted all day long and sometimes late into the evenings. Now, I want to read something from the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee on the national industrial recovery bill to show the position of the President of the American Federation of Labor on these two bills. Mr. CROWTHER questioned Mr. Green as follows:

Mr. CROWTHER. Then you will feel satisfied while this Connery bill and the similar measure known as the "Black bill" may die a natural death, if favorable action is taken on this bill?

Mr. GREEN. I hope that the Connery bill will be passed, and the American Federation of Labor hopes that it will.

Then later on Mr. CROWTHER asked this question:

Mr. CROWTHER. You are satisfied with it in the Connery bill?
Mr. GREEN. Yes, sir.

This referred to the foreign import clause in the Connery bill, which provided that if a foreign manufacturer refused to go on a 5-day week, just as the American manufacturer would be obliged to do, he could not ship his products into the United States, as he would be refused a license for this purpose.

I will read some excerpts from the paper of the American Federation of Labor of May 20, 1933. This is the official newspaper organ of the American Federation of Labor:

Thirty-hour week bill would organize all production—"Labor is for this bill; it ought to pass."—Green.

The foregoing is the headline. Following is part of the article.

With the Black-Connery 30-hour week bill, officially designated "S. 158", under the wire well ahead of the Wagner bill, which is slated to bear administration approval, the greatest legislative conflict of the new-deal era is under way, with the fate of America's millions at stake.

The Black-Connery bill as amended covers much the same ground as is covered in the Wagner measure, which is being worked out by the administration "brain trust" and others who have been called into consultation.

Labor is for the Black-Connery bill. "It is a good bill, and it ought to pass", said William Green, of the American Federation of Labor.

President Green withheld all comment on the Wagner bill. "Its contents are too uncertain at this hour", he said. But for the Black-Connery bill he was definite, "it ought to pass."

Mr. Speaker, I have been asked what would be the legislative situation now that the recovery bill has passed both Houses if the Connery bill should be passed by the House today. Senate bill 158, the Black bill, has already passed the Senate and was amended by the Committee on Labor by the Connery bill.

My answer is very simple on that. All that need be done if this bill passed the House today would be to substitute the Connery bill, the 5-day week, 6-hour day bill, the Black-Connery bill, for title I in the industrial-recovery bill. This would not affect the public-works program; it would not affect the taxation measure; and then we would have a real bill for labor. I do not care what you are going to do on this matter so far as your own individual convictions are concerned, but I felt it my duty to bring before this House the difference between these two bills. Remember, strictly speaking, it is not my bill. I have no pride of authorship. The bill which the Committee on Labor reported out was written by labor, by men representing organized labor. I drafted it with those men; we worked long hours to draw up this bill. I am glad that we did. Since the bill was reported out labor throughout the country has said that the bill is the best bill for organized labor which has been reported to this House for 150 years. That is a pretty strong tribute from labor. Remember, I do not say it is the Connery bill; I say it is labor's bill.

The difference between the recovery bill which has passed the House and the Senate, and this 5-day week, 6-hour day bill is that this bill sets up a board of three to be appointed by the President, one of them the Secretary of Labor, the other a representative of the employers, and the third, which is not in the national recovery bill, a representative of organized labor—not a company union man, not a stool pigeon, not an automaton, not a robot, but a human being, representing organized labor, who would stand up and say, "This is what labor wants. We want a fair break."

I am not going to take the time of this House today except to say that if you want a chance under the parliamentary procedure of the House to vote for this 5-day week, 6-hour day bill, you will vote down this rule when it comes up. As I said yesterday, I try to fight fair, and I wanted this rule brought in immediately so that I would not have to keep objecting all afternoon to requests of my colleagues. You know the situation. If there are any questions that any Member desires to ask, I shall be very glad to answer them.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. DUNN. Does not the American Federation of Labor give support to the industrial recovery bill?

Mr. CONNERY. They said they gave it their support with reservations, and when asked if they preferred the recovery bill or the Connery bill they said that they preferred the Connery bill and that our bill ought to pass.

Mr. DUNN. I think the gentleman is right on that. I thing myself that the Connery bill is the better bill of the two.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman is on the Committee on Labor, and he knows both sides of the question.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman say definitely that organized labor is against the industrial recovery bill?

Mr. CONNERY. I did not say that.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman answer that question "yes" or "no"?

Mr. CONNERY. I shall be glad to answer the gentleman. Mr. Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor, appeared before the Committee on Ways and Means and supported the industrial recovery bill with reservations. I cannot make that any clearer. But when asked which bill he preferred, he said the Connery bill. When he appeared before the Committee on Labor he favored the Connery bill without any reservations. That is what I am telling the House today. Labor, just like the veterans, in many cases has to take what it can get.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is comparing two measures that are not in any way equal, because the industrial recovery bill is a complete program of public works and a taxation program. Nobody can say which bill he would prefer. What the gentleman means is to confine his remarks to the features of the bill pertaining to labor.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes, that is true, and that clarifies my answer to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SISSON]. My own personal opinion is that the only reason the Federation of Labor favored the recovery bill even with reservations was because it had $3,000,000,000 in it for public works.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman stated that "labor has to take what it can get." Since our able friend from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has been the Chairman of the Committee on Labor, labor has been pretty well taken care of in the House of Representatives. It takes just about what it wants. It is no stepchild here. The gentleman has been able to put labor's imprint upon practically every bill that has gone through this House. Is not that the fact?

Mr. CONNERY. I thank my good friend the gentleman from Texas. He is always generous to me. I hope that he is right in what he has just said as to my efforts for labor. That is what I have tried to do because I want to protect the exploited great masses of the people as much as I can.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I have been interested very much in the labor provisions of the bill. I have read some of the provisions of this bill and some of the other bill. Will the gentleman tell me what protection is given to unorganized labor in this bill, or are they entirely out in the cold?

Mr. CONNERY. Oh, no. We have three sections. The first applies to manufacturers who would get together in their groups where they agree with organized labor, which would be 50 percent organized in their industry, and, showing such an agreement, they would get a license without any red tape. The second is the group of manufacturers that is not 50 percent organized as to labor in their industry, and, if they would agree to pay the same wages as the first organized group referred to, they would get a license. In the third group, where a manufacturer says that he runs an open shop and he does not want to deal with organized labor, the board would say, "Very well; you refuse to pay decent wages and agree to shorter hours so we will fix a minimum wage and shorter hours and you must abide by our decision if you wish to get a license.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. And there is no effort in any way to force unorganized labor to be organized.

Mr. CONNERY. No. I have stated the difference between the two bills, so far as labor is concerned. I think that the manufacturers will be here next January, in any event, begging us to pass this Connery bill when they see the difference between dealing with their workers on an organized labor contract basis, as provided for in our bill, or being actually controlled by Federal authority without the saving clauses provided in the Connery bill.

Frankly, I would say to my friend from South Carolina [Mr. TAYLOR] in answer to his query as to unorganized labor, that I believe the Connery bill would practically force the manufacturer to deal with organized labor if he wished to get a license. And that I think would be the best thing that could happen to him, because when organized labor signs a contract for hours or wages in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred that contract is sacredly adhered to.

Mr. BLACK. What position does the Secretary of Labor take as between the Black-Connery bill and title I of the recovery bill?

Mr. CONNERY. The Secretary of Labor did not take any position as between those two bills. The Secretary came before the Committee on Labor and offered us suggestions, valuable suggestions. We embodied many of those suggestions in our bill.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has expired.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I will say to my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. BLACK] that I believe the only reason this House has not already taken up this 5-day week, 6-hour day bill is because we put a provision in there that if foreign manufacturers would not put their workers on a 5-day week, 6-hour day, while our workers were on a 5-day week, 6-hour day, their imports would be barred from the United States. They would have to be licensed just the same as our American manufacturers. The necessity, logic, and justice of this seemed very clear to me. The Secretary of Labor visited the President and asked him whether he wanted that provision in. The Secretary then called me up and said the President was against that. The committee saw fit to put it in by unanimous vote, and I think because that provision remained in the bill is the reason the bill was not allowed to come up for action in the House. Otherwise, I think the bill would have been before the House and passed long ago. I said that it seemed to me entirely logical and necessary to put foreigners on the same basis as our American workers by the foreign-import provision. That I was correct in my conclusions is borne out by the fact that the Senate inserted a provision in the industrial recovery bill permitting the President to place an embargo on foreign imports whenever they interfered with the successful administration of the recovery bill. I am expressing my views today. I feel it was my duty to get these facts before the House. If you want this bill before the House, you will have to vote down this rule. If we can get it before the House and pass it, it is a very simple matter in the industrial recovery bill to substitute this bill for title I, because this bill only refers to the labor part of the recovery bill, and you would be doing a great work for labor in the country. Not only that but you would be giving a much fairer deal to the manufacturers and to capital in the United States.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNERY. I yield.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. In other words, one of the advantages that your bill has is that organized labor is properly recognized in these boards?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. It has been the experience of labor that unless you have men representing organized labor, the manufacturers will put on a figurehead as the representative of labor, and it has always worked as a sell-out to the laboring man.

Mr. CONNERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEIDEMAN. No matter what anybody may say about organized labor it is only through the constant pounding of organized labor, year after year, that we have been able to reduce the working hours from 10 hours to 8 hours, and this simply reduces it down to 6 hours, to give everybody a chance to labor.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman has stated the situation exactly. I thank the House for its indulgence with me, and I hope the House will vote down this rule and give us a chance to get this bill considered. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] has again expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty Members are present, a quorum.

The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. All Members who favor taking this vote by the yeas and nays will stand and remain standing until counted.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CONNERY. This is a vote on the resolution, is it not?

The SPEAKER. It is.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CONNERY) there were—ayes 140, noes 49.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is not a quorum present, and challenge the vote on that ground.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on that, to have it settled. The Chair has just counted a quorum. The fact that the vote does not show a quorum does not necessarily prove that there is not a quorum in the House. The count of the quorum was so recent that I do not believe it is proper to demand another quorum at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is right about it. The Chair has just counted a quorum. The point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONNERY] is overruled.

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

BIMETALLISM BY INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, if the newspaperman who sent out the story that the House has nothing to do but mark time were to come down on the floor and try to get recognition for 3 minutes he might come to the conclusion that this House is a very busy corner.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate on May 8, by unanimous consent, and without a dissenting vote, adopted a resolution introduced by Senator WHEELER instructing the American delegation to the London Economic Conference to strive for an international agreement for the remonetization of silver at a ratio not exceeding 16 ounces of silver to 1 ounce of gold. Thereupon I introduced the same resolution in the House, which was referred to the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, which committee held extensive hearings thereon.

Thereafter the committee adopted a substitute resolution instructing the delegation to work for the remonetization of silver without fixing any ratio. I thereupon filed a minority report recommending that the resolution adopted be amended by adding the ratio thereto of not to exceed 16 to 1.

Mr. Speaker, when a Democratic controlled committee of this House votes down a resolution favoring the remonetization of silver by international agreement at a ratio not to exceed 16 to 1 and then votes up an indefinite resolution prepared by a minority Member, who is an adherent of the gold standard, I feel that my uselessness on that committee is at an end, and I have resigned my membership thereon. I take this step, Mr. Speaker, in no spirit of personal pique, because the committee very generously consented that I might report the resolution adopted.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I had to decline that very generous offer, and I resign with only the kindliest feelings for the very fine group of Members who make up the personnel of this important committee.

During the protracted hearings on this resolution there were no sharp words spoken and there was no high-pitched voice, save perhaps the voice of Hon. South Trimble, the Clerk of this House, and a former Member of the House, who made a most remarkable presentation to the committee, which is a complete history of the coinage and currency laws of the United States from the first session of the First Congress down to the present time, and which in the Senate was inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in the issue of June 10. Every Member of this House who wants to inform himself on the history of coinage and currency in the United States should read it.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I yield, if I have time.

Mr. MOTT. The Democratic House of Representatives, as well as the Democratic Senate, passed a bill sometime ago giving the President the authority to put into effect the free coinage of silver whenever he pleased. What more can the Democratic gentleman ask than that?

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado. I have just stated to the House that the United States Senate, regardless of politics, has seen fit unanimously to adopt this resolution seeking to secure international action on silver; and the Senate having expressed itself on this highly important matter, I feel it is the duty and the right of the House to do likewise.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert my minority report in the RECORD. It does not go into a discussion of the silver question, but briefly summarizes my reasons why, the United States Senate having taken action on this matter, the House should do likewise and in harmony with the action of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

[Report No. 195, part 2, Seventy-third Congress, first session]

INSTRUCTING THE AMERICAN DELEGATION TO THE INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE AT LONDON WITH RESPECT TO THE VIEWS OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES ON THE REMONETIZATION OF SILVER

Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following minority report to accompany House Resolution 167:

The minority of the Committee on Foreign Affairs dissent from the views of the majority on House Resolution 167, instructing the delegates appointed by the President of the United States to the International Economic Conference at London with respect to the views of the House of Representatives on the remonetization of silver.

House Resolution 167, favorably reported by a majority of the committee, declares it to be the sense of the House that the delegates to the International Conference shall strive to secure an international agreement for the coinage of gold and silver at a definite fixed ratio.

It is a substitute for House Resolution 141, introduced by Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, instructing the delegates to the Conference to work for the remonetization of silver on a basis of a definite fixed ratio of not to exceed 16 fine ounces of silver to 1 fine ounce of gold.

The difference, therefore, between the resolutions is that one fixes a maximum ratio, to wit, 16 to 1, while the other leaves the ratio to be determined by the Conference.

House Resolution 141, fixing the ratio at not to exceed 16 to 1, which is attached to the minority report, is identical with Senate Resolution 67, introduced in the Senate by Senator WHEELER, of Montana, and taken up in the Senate by unanimous consent and passed without a dissenting vote on May 8, 1933.

The majority of the committee having decided to substitute the indefinite for the definite instruction, generously offered to report the substitute in the name of Mr. MARTIN of Colorado, he being a member of the committee, but he felt constrained to decline the honor, for reasons hereinafter set forth.

The first question to be decided, much discussed in the committee, is whether the House should express itself at all on the matter. During the hearings one of the principal objections to any resolution touching the money question, or any question, was summed up by Will Rogers when he said "this country never lost a war or won a conference." Stated in another way, these objectors looked upon these international conferences as a game of strip poker, from which Uncle Sam comes home in a barrel. As they view it, the cards are stacked against us before the game starts, and, further, that we are only novices pitted against the masters of the game.

A sufficient and complete answer to all these objections is that the Conference has been called, our delegates have been selected and have gone to the Conference, and the Conference will consider as one of the methods to effect stabilization in international exchange and commodity prices the position of silver in the coinage of the world. On this proposition the die has been cast.

In addition, the delegates, as pointed out, have been instructed under the Wheeler resolution as to the views of one branch of the Congress, and that action, insofar as that body is concerned, is final. The question is, Shall they also be instructed by the other branch? If they ought to be instructed by the House, it is respectfully submitted that the instructions ought to be identical or harmonious, unless the House holds different views than the Senate. To instruct differently would be to throw the whole situation into confusion, subject the Congress to merited ridicule, and, in effect, cancel the action already taken by the other body.

It is the opinion of the minority that the House ought to act, and that it should act without fear as to which of these two propositions it will endorse. If the House is not in favor of the remonetization of silver at a ratio not to exceed 16 to 1 by international agreement, it ought to say so, and not leave the conferees to advance any such proposition in the belief that it will receive the sanction of the Congress. If, on the other hand, it does favor the historic ratio, it should throw the weight of the American Congress behind our delegates, who represent the only power among the nations able to dictate terms to the Conference.

No question has so rapidly forged to the front during the depression as the position of silver in the monetary systems of the world and no one will gainsay the great and rapid growth of sentiment for the rehabilitation of silver as a medium of exchange. It is not so much a question whether silver should be restored to coinage, as the ratio to gold at which it shall be restored. It is the view of the minority that it should be at the ratio of 16 to 1, or not lower than 16 to 1, and in support of this view they cite the following uncontroverted facts produced at the hearings:

1. This may be termed the historic ratio. At the time of its demonetization in 1873, and in all silver coinage since that time, and throughout the history of the country, the ratio has been substantially 16 to 1.

2. In all the testimony adduced before the committee no instance was cited in which the ratio fixed by any nation at any time was lower than 16 to 1. In fact, the testimony was uniform that any variance from this standard was in favor of silver, ranging to 15 to 1.

3. The natural ratio in the production of gold and silver in the world since the discovery of America has been 14 to 1. The ratio of production at the present time is only slightly over 12 to 1, and has only slightly exceeded 13 to 1 in the United States for the past 60 years. These figures were taken from the annual Treasury report for 1932 and may be therefore taken as not colored in favor of silver.

It will be seen, therefore, that both the natural and legal ratios indicate that both metals could be coined and stabilized at a ratio not exceeding 16 to 1.

4. Silver has been from time immemorial the sole currency or medium of exchange for three fourths of the population of the world. This is particularly true of China, India, and Central and South America. Witnesses before the committee agreed that the world demonetization of silver and the consequent appreciation of the gold dollar is a material factor both in cheap production and depression of raw commodity prices in silver-using countries and the shrinkage of international trade.

Both the great political parties are committed to an effort to improve the position of silver in the monetary systems of the world.

The Democratic platform of 1932 reads:

"We advocate an international monetary conference called on the invitation of the Government to consider the rehabilitation of silver and related questions."

The Republican platform of 1932 reads:

"We favor the participation of the United States in an international conference to consider matters relating to monetary questions, including the position of silver, exchange problems, and commodity prices, and possible cooperative action concerning them."

It is true these platform declarations do not mention the ratio, but there is nothing in the history of bimetallism to suggest or support a lower ratio than that mentioned in House Resolution 141. No suggestion came to the committee from any source of a lower ratio. House Resolution 141 does not fix a ratio, but merely a limit, and is only an expression of view and an assurance that if the Conference agrees on a ratio not in excess of 16 to 1, this Government is ready to act.

A commonly expressed fear during the hearings was that England, being primarily interested in the low commodity prices caused by the debased position of silver as a medium of exchange, and armed with superior resources in diplomacy, would be able to prevail in the Conference to the disadvantage of the United States and of silver and would never consent to the restoration of silver to its proper place in the monetary system of the world. If there is anything in this view, it is all the more reason why a definite limit should be set in the matter of the expression of the views of the Congress, and it is respectfully submitted that this safeguard will be provided by affirming the action of the Senate by adopting House Resolution 141.

The United States, being now the great creditor Nation of the world, and not a suppliant debtor, as was the case at the time of prior conferences concerning silver, is and of right ought to be the deciding factor at the International Conference, and a firm insistence upon the complete restoration of silver will settle this great question by giving the people an ample and natural metallic base for the currency of the world.

It is therefore recommended by the minority that the resolution as reported be amended by striking out the period after the word "ratio", the last word in the resolution, and adding the following: "of not to exceed 16 fine ounces of silver to 1 fine ounce of gold"; so that the majority resolution as amended will read as follows (amendment in italics):

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives of the United States that the delegates appointed by the President of the United States of America to the Conference shall use their every effort to bring about the stabilization of international exchanges, and with that end in view shall strive to secure an international agreement for the coinage of gold and silver at a definite fixed ratio of not to exceed 16 fine ounces of silver to 1 fine ounce of gold."

It is respectfully suggested that the Committee on Rules report a rule for the consideration of the resolution before the adjournment of the special session.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN A. MARTIN.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS AND ALIEN SMUGGLING FROM CUBA

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Resolution No. 50, to provide for a select committee to investigate practices used in deportation of aliens, and to study the extent of alien smuggling from Cuba, and in connection therewith I wish to make a statement.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has this resolution been considered by the committee?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It has.

Mr. MAPES. Has it been reported?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. No. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules, but they have not reported it. If the gentleman will bear with me a moment, I will explain the situation.

At the request of the Committee on Immigration, I laid this matter before the Committee on Rules, with the request that they report it out, but they did not have time enough to look into it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Then the gentleman is seeking to discharge the Committee on Rules from the consideration of the resolution by unanimous consent?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have a quorum here. I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Will the gentleman withhold that motion until I can make a statement dealing with the subject?

Mr. MAPES. No.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The gentleman might be very much interested to hear something about the purpose of the resolution.

Mr. MAPES. The Membership of the House ought to be here to hear the gentleman's statement.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I would be glad for them to hear it, because I do not think there will be any objection to it.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment?

Mr. MAPES. I withhold it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Are not the words "referred to the Committee on Rules" printed on the face of the resolution which the gentleman seeks to bring up?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That is right.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Has the Committee on Rules reported the resolution?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. It has not as yet; but under suspension of the rules the House has a right to consider this resolution at this time.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Under suspension of the rules; yes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I think it is the most vital proposition before the country today. If you gentlemen want to delay it, all right; but the purpose of the resolution is simply to try to stop smuggling. We would like to make some investigation upon which we can check on the steamship companies who are bringing these people in.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SEARS. I make the point of order that a point of no quorum has been raised.

The SPEAKER. That is being held in abeyance.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that one provision in this bill to which there has always been objection is the language "to employ necessary stenographic, clerical, and other assistants and investigators; to have necessary printing and binding done," and so forth. The gentleman should agree to have that language stricken from the resolution, and then there would not be so much objection to it.

This language would entail a tremendous expense, and the resolution contains no limitation whatever on expenditures. The provision that $2,000 is authorized to be appropriated is not a limitation.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is not a quorum present.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of no quorum which was withheld by the gentleman from Michigan at my request.

Mr. BYRNS. Will the gentleman withhold that so that I may move that the House stand in recess?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; gladly.

RECESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now stand in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p.m.) the House stood in recess to meet at the call of the Chair.

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 5:30 o'clock p.m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5091) to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5661) to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent the undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5755) to encourage industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes.

NATIONAL BANKING SYSTEM

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, when the conference report on the bank bill was under consideration this morning I made inquiry as to the possibility of corrections, if any occasion arose, and the chairman of the committee said at the time that if such need for correction developed in the course of the day, he and the Senate Chairman, Senator GLASS, had understood that a concurrent resolution to that effect would be introduced, and I have one here that corrects the bill in three particulars where the language does not carry our intent. These corrections have been submitted to the conferees and are approved by all, so far as I understand.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the concurrent resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 23

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House of Representatives is authorized and directed in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 5661) entitled "An act to provide for the safer and more effective use of the assets of banks, to regulate interbank control, to prevent undue diversion of funds into speculative operations, and for other purposes", to make the following necessary changes in the language of the bill:

In the first sentence of the second paragraph of subsection "(y)" of section 12B (added by the bill to the Federal Reserve Act, as amended), insert after "State bank" and before the parenthesis the words "which term shall also include all banking institutions located in the District of Columbia", and in the same sentence strike out "State authority" and insert "authority."

In the seventh paragraph of subsection "(l)" of such section 12B, after "Corporation", insert a comma and "or a member of the fund provided for in subsection (y)."

In the last paragraph of such subsection "(y)" strike out the word "title" and insert in lieu thereof the word "section."

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is agreeable to all the conferees.

Mr. LUCE. So I understand; yes.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LUCE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXPLANATION OF BILL H.R. 6097, FOR SUPERVISION OF MOTION PICTURES

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a copy of a bill which I introduced yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted me to extend my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD I make an explanation of the bill H.R. 6097, which I introduced on June 12, and excerpts in connection with same, and the bill.

EXPLANATION OF BILL H.R. 6097, FOR SUPERVISION OF MOTION PICTURES

H.R. 6097, which I introduced on June 12, provides for inspecting, classifying, and cataloging of motion pictures, both silent and talking, before they enter into interstate and foreign commerce. It provides for the Federal supervision of motion pictures by a Federal Motion Picture Commission of nine members, to be appointed by President Roosevelt, of whom four shall be women.

For the last 5 years a very careful study of the effect of motion pictures upon children and the general public has been undertaken by the Payne Fund at the instance of the Motion Picture Research Council, of which Dr. John Grier Hibben, former president of Princeton, was, until his recent death, chairman. This group of scientists, psychologists, sociologists, and educators has made the first comprehensive survey thus far attempted. Macmillan will publish the results of this survey in 10 volumes in June, July, August, and the rest of the year. The first volume, Our Movie-Made Children, by Henry James Forman, has just been issued, with an introduction by Dr. W. W. Charters, chairman of the committee on educational research of the Payne Fund, professor of educational research in Ohio State University. This volume of Mr. Forman's book gives a general outline of the facts which will be explained in greater detail by the nine volumes which are to follow.

The book was written by Mr. Forman after substantially a year's study of all the findings in the course of which the first draft of the manuscript was submitted to the research director (Dr. Charters) who sent copies to each of the research professors asking both for verification of the facts drawn from their several studies and for general criticism. These were obtained from all the research men and studied both by Dr. Charters and by Mr. Forman. Then Charters and Forman met for several days' conference during and after which the criticisms and suggestions were incorporated. The revised manuscript was then resubmitted to Dr. Charters and by him to all the research professors. Final revision was agreed upon by Charters and Forman. In his introduction to the Forman book, Charters says:

He (Forman) shows a thorough grasp of the facts in the complicated material presented in the nearly 3,000 pages which constitute the report of the 12 studies.

NEED FOR BILL INDICATED

The need of this bill is indicated by the fact that six States for many years have had State censorship of motion pictures to regulate the morality of motion pictures—Ohio, 1913; Pennsylvania, 1913; Kansas, 1913; Maryland, 1917; Illinois passed a censorship bill in 1915, but Governor Dunne vetoed it. New York passed a law in 1916, which was vetoed by Governor Whitman. The present New York State law was enacted in 1921, and the law in Virginia in 1922. The popularity and efficiency of the New York State law, which places the regulation of the motion pictures under the direction of the State board of education, was shown at the last session of the legislature, when a bill was introduced to secure its repeal. At the hearing upon the proposed repeal representatives from the State board of regents opposed the repeal bill, also the head of the New York State Congress of Parents and Teachers, Judge Brady, of the Children's Court of Albany, a representative of the State Knights of Columbus, other Roman Catholic organizations, and City Magistrate Brill, of New York City, who spoke of the need of the law as seen by her in her work among children. Without debate, the assembly committee on taxation and retrenchment at the close of the hearing voted unanimously to report against the passage of the bill. Last year the State law paid into the State treasury $161,000 above expenses.

In the 12 years that the law has been on the statute books the net receipts have been $1,356,396.37, or over $100,000 each year.

FILMS HERETOFORE REJECTED

The moral value of our movie regulation law is seen when it is realized that last year 13 films were rejected in toto and 2,580 eliminations were made in 326 films. Of these 2,580 eliminations, 1,116 were made because the scenes eliminated tended to incite to crime, 711 as tending to corrupt morals, 315 as indecent, and 266 as inhuman.

The purpose of this bill is to prevent the necessity of State censorship and to prevent having 48 different standards for the motion pictures. Censorship which provides for elimination after films have been made is expensive and, in the nature of the case, cannot be satisfactory.

BILL FAIR TO PRODUCERS

The bill deals with the proposed film before it has been filmed and before it has been allowed to enter interstate and foreign commerce.

Producers are allowed to submit their scenarios and to show their dramatization to agents of the Federal Commission, for their advice, before they photograph the various scenes in the picture.

This bill will save expense to the motion-picture industry and will raise the confidence of parents in the moral influence of films upon their children.

ENTERTAINMENT VALUE OF FILMS NOT LESSENED

It will not lessen the entertainment value of the films but will increase it. The appeal to the heroic and higher nature will increase, rather than diminish, the attractiveness of films and thus increase the financial receipts of the producers and exhibitors.

This bill will increase our friendly relations with other nations, promote international peace, and increase the respect of foreigners for our manners, customs, and morals; for at least 80 percent of the films shown in foreign nations come from America and give a false and highly distorted opinion of life and morals in these United States.

This bill will lessen the danger of graft possible in local, city, and State censorship boards and secure better moral supervision than merely through such boards alone. It will not abolish such local boards but render their work more effective.

This bill will help parents in protecting their children from movie exploiters of youth.

It will compel the motion-picture industry to conform to the laws and ideals of America.

ETHICAL CODE TO BE ENFORCED

The ethical code embodied in the bill was drawn up by the motion-picture industry and announced by it on April 1, 1930, by Mr. Will H. Hays, which promised in the future to be guided by it in the production of the films.

This code asserts the following general principles:

No picture shall be produced which shall lower the moral standards of those who see it. Hence the sympathy of the audience should never be thrown on the side of crime, wrongdoing, evil or sin.

Ten times the motion-picture industry has promised to reform itself without the assistance of any law, but each time the promises have been broken.

The great religious communions and educational organizations have for many years been petitioning Congress for such a law. The Committee on Education of the House of Representatives twice—in 1915, unanimously, and in 1916 by a vote of 11 to 5—recommended regulation of motion pictures by a Federal commission. (See report of 305 pp. on H.R. 456, Jan. 13–19, 1916.)

RELIGIOUS DENOMINATIONS DEMAND THIS BILL

Eleven years ago in Des Moines, Iowa, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America instructed its Board of Temperance and of Moral Welfare to—

Inaugurate a movement which will seek to unite all the moral agencies of America in a concerted request of Congress that such legislation be enacted as will make mandatory production of pictures in accordance with certain well-defined moral standards, this legislation to be applied at the point of production; that is, before the picture is made.

Both houses of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, at Denver, Colo., on September 28, 1931, addressed to Congress the following petition:

The General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States of America, in general convention assembled, respectfully petitions your honorable body to enact a law (not censorship) for the Federal supervision of motion pictures in interstate and foreign commerce establishing higher moral standards to be applied before pictures are filmed by means of a Federal commission similar to the method by which the radio, national banks, and railroads are regulated. It is believed that only such a centralized authority as the United States Government can wisely and effectively regulate the centralized motion-picture industry for the whole of the United States and other nations of the world in the interest of world peace and moral standards, because at least 80 percent of all films shown in the nations of the world are produced in our land.

Since then resolutions for Federal supervision of motion pictures requiring definite moral standards to be applied before production have been passed by the North American Congress of Home Missions (under the auspices of the Home Missions Council, the Council of Women for Home Missions, and the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America), by the Disciples of Christ, the Northern Baptists Convention, National Grange, Women's Missionary Council Methodist Episcopal Church South, Women's Foreign Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Beside these national organizations many State groups, synods, conferences, and conventions have taken action, including the New York, Iowa, Illinois, and Columbia River Synods of the United Presbyterian Church; the Philadelphia, New Jersey, and Oregon Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church; the Kentucky Parent-Teacher Association; Kentucky Division, Daughters of Confederacy; Southern California and Kentucky Epworth Leagues; Baptist Young Peoples Union of West Virginia; many yearly meetings of Friends; Commonwealth Club of Minnesota; and others. To these resolutions must be added resolutions passed and sent to Congress by over 2,000 smaller groups, some of them, however, representing over 10,000 individuals.

These resolutions came from 39 States and the District of Columbia. Business men's organizations, lodges, patriotic orders, forums, brotherhoods, Young Men's Christian Associations, ministerial associations joined with Federated Women's Clubs, Parent-Teacher Associations, Woman's Christian Temperance Unions, Young Women's Christian Associations, churches, and church societies in sending these resolutions. They came from both Catholic and Protestant groups.

As recently as May 27 the Northern Baptist Convention adopted the following resolutions at its meeting in Washington:

Whereas the motion-picture industry has become so completely commercialized as to seek profit at any price to morals, and persistently ignores their often-repeated promises for pictures of a higher moral tone, according to their own boasted code for "self-regulation"; and

Whereas their pictures become more extreme in overemphasizing sex, glorifying crime, encouraging banditry, and picturing drinking as a common and proper feature of American life; and

Whereas such pictures seriously impair the development of worthy ideals, habits, character, and conduct in the present and on-coming generations; and

Whereas such portrayal of American life in pictures exported gives America an unsavory reputation in other countries; and

Whereas the motion-picture industry has entrenched and fortified itself to such an extent that they have succeeded in preventing legislation aimed at any investigation or regulation of the industry: Therefore be it

Resolved, That as a convention we urge upon Congress a more determined effort for Federal regulation of the industry, and at the source of production, and over exportation, in order to eliminate the evil that now baffles the efforts of citizens and organizations for securing clean pictures; and, furthermore, be it

Resolved, That we commend the Federal Council of Churches, boards of censorship, and other agencies for their work in behalf of better pictures, and urge their earnest perseverance.

I am introducing this bill because I believe that our commercial, industrial, and political depression is due, among other things, in part to moral causes, and because the motion picture is one of the greatest educational influences in our land, which ought to help in the new era of moral and spiritual recovery.

The London Daily Telegraph of July 14, 1931, said "the screen is the great crime builder of today."

INDUSTRY WILL NOT REFORM ITSELF

Whether or not that is true I am not prepared to say, but I am convinced that the motion-picture screen, without lessening its entertainment attractiveness, can be made one of the greatest educators in morals in the rehabilitation of our economic and social life. The only human power that can bring this about I believe is the Federal Government. I see no hope that the industry will reform itself.

I agree with the Presbyterian General Assembly of May 1932, when it said that—

The conviction is growing that all promises and all activities of men of influence working within the producing organizations for clean pictures are ineffective.

SUSPENSION OF MOTION PICTURES

(H.R. 6097)

A bill to provide for inspecting, classifying, and cataloguing motion pictures, both silent and talking, before they enter interstate or foreign commerce, to create a Federal Motion Picture Commission, to define its powers, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc.—

DEFINITIONS

SECTION 1. "Dealer", as used herein, means any person or trade association engaged directly or indirectly in the production, exchange, or exhibition of motion pictures in interstate or foreign commerce.

"Commission", as used in this act, means Federal Motion Picture Commission; "in commerce" means in interstate or foreign commerce.

"Person" or "persons" shall be deemed to include individuals, partnerships, corporations, and trade associations existing under or authorized by the laws of either of the United States, the laws of the Territories, the laws of any State, or the laws of any foreign country.

"Trade associations" means any association composed of members who separately are engaged in some one or more lines or branches of the motion-picture business or cognate or contributory industries, whether the association is voluntary or incorporated, except those which are organized and conducted for purely social, charitable, or religious purposes.

"Producer" shall mean any person engaged in photographing scenes, plays, entertainment, events, or scenes of new interest, or historical or educational value, and the like on negative motion-picture film for the purpose of making positive prints therefrom or otherwise for exhibition in motion-picture theaters, whether or not such person also is engaged, directly or indirectly, in the distribution or exhibition of such film.

"Distributor" shall mean any person engaged in selling, leasing, or renting motion-picture films to exhibitors, whether or not such person also is engaged, directly or indirectly, in the production of such films.

"Exhibitor" shall include any person owning or operating a motion-picture theater or theaters or other place where motion pictures are regularly exhibited as all or part of a program of entertainment, whether or not such person also is engaged, directly or indirectly, in the production or distribution of films.

SEC. 2. That a Commission is hereby created and established, to be known as the "Federal Motion Picture Commission." This Commission is to be composed of nine members appointed by the President of the United States within 60 days after this act has been approved by the President. Three shall be appointed for a term of 6 years, three for 4 years, and three for 2 years; and thereafter at the expiration of their terms all appointments shall be made for a term of 6 years. The President of the United States shall designate one member as chairman.

QUALIFICATIONS OF MEMBERS

SEC. 3. The Commissioners shall be citizens of the United States, qualified by character, experience, and training for the duties of their office. Four of them shall be women. Not more than five shall be members of the same political party. They shall be appointed without party designation and free from party control. The appointment shall not be given to any person who has financial interest with any motion-picture producing, distributing, or exhibiting business or any cognate or related business; nor shall any member of the Commission during his term of office be permitted to have any pecuniary interest in the production, distribution, or exhibition of motion pictures. If any deputy commissioner or employee violates this provision he shall be summarily discharged by the Commission. If any Commissioner violates any provision of this act, he shall be removed after due hearing by the President. No vacancy in the Commission shall impair the right of the rest of the Commission to exercise all the powers of the Commission.

SALARIES; EXPENSES

SEC. 4. That each Commissioner shall receive an annual salary of $9,000, except that the annual salary of the chairman shall be $10,000. The salary shall not be diminished during continuance in office. The Commissioner shall have authority to employ and fix the compensation of deputy commissioners and such other employees as it may find necessary to the proper performance of its duties. Until otherwise provided by law, the Commission may hire suitable offices for its use and shall have authority to procure all necessary office supplies and equipment. All of the expenses of the Commission, including all necessary expenses for transportation incurred by the Commissioners, or by their employees under their orders, in making any investigation or upon official business and as provided in this act, shall be allowed and paid by the Treasurer of the United States on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor by the chairman of the Commission.

OFFICES

SEC. 5. That the principal office of the Commission shall be in Washington, D.C., but it may establish and maintain offices or bureaus wherever efficiency, economy, and the public interest require. Each bureau or office which is designated by the Commission as a place for the submission of films shall be in charge of a Commissioner or a Deputy Commissioner, who shall be vested by the Commission with authority to issue licenses and permits.

HARMFUL FILMS FORBIDDEN

SEC. 6. It shall be unlawful hereafter to export or to introduce into or to distribute in interstate or international commerce any motion-picture film or any advertisements thereof which, in treatment or subject matter, harmfully portrays the life, manners, or customs of this or any other nation, or which holds up to ridicule or contempt or disparagement any race, nationality, or religion, or which fosters ill will among or toward the people of this or any other nation, or tends to debase or corrupt morals or to incite to crime or to disrespect for law or religion, or which promotes or encourages war against the peace of the world, or which is harmful to the public or any part thereof in any respect.

No film shall be permitted to enter commerce which does not conform to the code of ethics for the production of motion pictures as adopted by the industry and published on April 1, 1930, by the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, as follows:

"PRINCIPLES UNDERLYING THE CODE

"PAR. A. 1. Motion-picture producers recognize the high trust and confidence which have been placed in them by the people of the world, and they recognize their responsibility to the public because of this trust.

"2. Theatrical motion pictures (that is, pictures intended for the theater as distinct from pictures intended for churches, schools, lecture halls, educational movements, social-reform movements, etc.) are primarily to be regarded as entertainment. Mankind has always regarded the importance of entertainment and its value in rebuilding the bodies and souls of human beings.

"3. It is recognized that there is entertainment which tends to improve the race (or at least to recreate and build human beings exhausted with the realities of life) and entertainment which tends to harm human beings, or to lower their standards of life and living.

"4. Motion pictures are an important form of art expression. Art enters immediately into the lives of human beings, the presentation of human thought, emotion, and experience, in terms of an appeal to the soul through the senses.

"5. In consequence of the foregoing facts the following general principles are adopted:

"No picture shall be produced which will lower the moral standards of those who see it. Hence, the sympathy of the audience should never be thrown to the side of crime, wrongdoing, evil, or sin.

"Correct standards of life shall be presented on the screen, subject only to necessary dramatic contrasts.

"Law, natural or human, should not be ridiculed, nor shall sympathy be created for its violation.

"CRIMES AGAINST THE LAW

"PAR. B. These shall never be presented in such a way as to throw sympathy with the crime, as against law and justice or to inspire others with a desire for imitation.

"1. Murder: (a) The technic of murder must be presented in a way that will not inspire imitation.

"(b) Brutal killings are not to be presented in detail.

"(c) Revenge in modern times shall not be justified.

"2. Methods of crime should not be explicitly presented.

"(a) Theft, robbery, safe-cracking, and dynamiting of trains, mines, buildings, and so forth, should not be detailed in methods.

"(b) Arson must be subject to the same safeguards.

"(c) The use of firearms should be restricted to essentials.

"(d) The methods of smuggling should not be presented.

"3. Illegal drug traffic must never be presented.

"4. The use of liquor in American life, when not required by the plot or for proper characterization, will not be shown.

"SEX

"PAR. C. The sanctity of the institution of marriage and the home shall be upheld. Pictures shall not infer that low forms of sex relationships are the accepted or common thing.

"1. Adultery, sometimes necessary plot material, must not be explicitly treated or justified, or presented attractively.

"2. Scenes of passion should not be introduced when not essential to the plot. In general, passion should be so treated that these scenes do not stimulate the lower and baser element.

"3. Seduction or rape: (a) They should never be more than suggested, and only when essential for the plot, and even then never shown by explicit method.

"(b) They are never the proper subject for comedy.

"4. Sex perversion or any inference of it is forbidden.

"5. White slavery shall not be treated.

"6. Miscegenation is forbidden.

"7. Sex hygiene and venereal diseases are not subjects for motion pictures.

"8. Scenes of actual childbirth, in fact or in silhouette, are never to be presented.

"9. Children's sex organs are never to be exposed.

"VULGARITY

"PAR. D. The treatment of low, disgusting, unpleasant, though not necessarily evil subjects, should be subject always to the dictates of good taste and regard for the sensibilities of the audience.

"Obscenity. Obscenity in word, gesture, reference, song, joke, or by suggestion, is forbidden.

"Dances. Dances which emphasize indecent movements are to be regarded as obscene.

"Profanity. Pointed profanity or vulgar expressions, however used, are forbidden.

"Costume. 1. Complete nudity is never permitted. This includes nudity in fact or in silhouette, or any lecherous or licentious notice thereof by other characters in the picture.

"2. Dancing costumes intended to permit undue exposure or indecent movements in the dance are forbidden.

"RELIGIOUS AND NATIONAL FEELINGS

"PAR. E. 1. No film or episode may throw ridicule on any religion or faith.

"2. Ministers of religion, in their character as such, should not be used as comic characters or as villains.

"3. Ceremonies of any definite religion should be carefully and respectfully handled.

"4. The use of the flag shall be consistently respected.

"5. The history, institutions, prominent people, and citizenry of other nations shall be represented fairly.

"TITLES AND REPELLENT SUBJECTS

"PAR. F. Salacious, indecent, or obscene titles shall not be used.

"The following subjects must be treated within the careful limits of good taste:

"1. Actual hangings or electrocutions as legal punishment for crime.

"2. Third-degree methods.

"3. Brutality and possible gruesomeness.

"4. Branding of people or animals.

"5. Apparent cruelty to children or animals.

"6. Surgical operations."

ALL FILMS MUST BE SUBMITTED FOR INSPECTION AND CATALOGING

SEC. 7. Hereafter no motion-picture films or any advertisement thereof shall be exported or introduced or distributed in interstate or international commerce until such film and all advertisements thereof have been presented to the Motion Picture Commission for inspection, classification, and cataloging.

DUTY AND POWER OF THE COMMISSION

SEC. 8. It shall be the duty of the Commission, through its designated assistants, forthwith to inspect, classify, and catalog all motion-picture films and advertisements thereof so submitted to the Commission and, as to any film or advertisement thereof deemed by the Commission to offend or violate any of the provisions of the foregoing law, the Commission shall, within 10 days from the completion of its inspection, notify the owner of the film or his agent that the export, introduction, and distribution thereof in interstate and foreign commerce are forbidden, with the privilege of appeal by the owner to the United States circuit court of appeals. The Commission shall make a factual analysis of each motion picture and shall catalog it according to its title, contents, and producer. The Commission shall have authority, if requested by the producer or his agent, to assist in applying the standards of production, fixed in accordance with this act, at the source of production before the pictures are filmed. It shall have power to give a special mark of approval of such films as are especially beneficial for children and young people, both in their amusement, educational and character-building values, and shall place upon the label as provided by the Commission the words "For family use." Any change or alteration in a film after its approval by the Commission, except the elimination of a part or except upon written direction of the Commission, shall be a violation of this act.

Any person financially interested who feels aggrieved by the refusal of the Commission to permit the transportation of a motion picture in interstate or foreign commerce may apply to the Circuit Court of Appeals in the District of Columbia for a mandatory injunction to restrain interference with the transportation and exhibition of such motion picture and to permit its entrance into commerce; and if upon the hearing it appears that such picture is not immoral or unwholesome and will not be detrimental in its influence upon character, particularly of youth, such injunctions may issue, but in any such proceeding the action of the Commission shall be prima-facie evidence of its lawfulness and propriety, and no injunction shall issue to compel the grant of a permit by the Commission unless the refusal thereof was clearly unreasonable and arbitrary and contrary to the intent of this act.

LABELS FOR FILMS

SEC. 9. The Commission shall furnish for each original film or copy a label of film which shall be a permanent title, portion of each picture of film which shall state whether it is for family use as provided in section 8. The forgery of any label or the use of any label with any film to which it does not belong shall be a violation of this act and, in addition to other penalties, shall forfeit the ownership of the film to the Commission.

The absence of such label from the film of any motion picture shall be prima-facie evidence that no permit for the transportation of the same in interstate or foreign commerce has been issued by the Commission. No motion picture transported in violation of any of the provisions of this act shall be exhibited anywhere in the United States.

FEES

SEC. 10. That the Commission shall collect from each person submitting a film for inspection, except as provided in this section, the fee of $10 for each 1,000 feet or fraction thereof of film, and $5 for each additional copy thereof inspected by the Commission: Provided, however, That upon the expiration of 1 year from the date of approval of this act, and from time to time thereafter as circumstances warrant, the Commission may revise and fix the fees at such sums as will produce no larger income than is necessary to support the work of the Commission, including salaries and all other expenses.

FILMS WITHOUT FEES, NEWS REELS AND ELECTION FILMS

SEC. 11. The Commission may, without any fee, issue permits for motion-picture films intended solely for scientific, educational, industrial, charitable, or religious purposes: Provided, That the owner thereof, either personally or by his duly authorized representative, shall file a sworn description of the film and a statement that the film is not to be exhibited at any private or public place of amusement.

The Commission shall formulate rules and regulations for the prompt showing without inspection of current events or news films by persons duly bonded not to violate any of the provisions of this act, and also regulations which shall govern films which aim to or do assist in the election or defeat of any political candidate, so that all candidates and political parties shall have equal opportunity for publicity.

REPORTS

SEC. 12. That the Commission shall, on or before the 1st day of December in each year, make a report, which shall be transmitted to Congress and copies of which shall be distributed as are the other reports transmitted to Congress.

PENALTIES AND FORFEITURES

SEC. 13. (a) Any dealer who violates any of the provisions of this act shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, or imprisonment for not less than 6 months nor more than 5 years, or both. Each day during which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense. All films produced, distributed, or exhibited or changed in violation of the provision of this act shall be confiscated by the Commission and held pending the motion of the Commission or of the court having jurisdiction.

(b) Whenever it appears that any film has been produced, distributed, or exhibited, or received from shipment in commerce, or changed in violation of the provisions of this act, the Commission may cause the immediate seizure of each film while it is in commerce, or held in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, and thereupon shall at once cause notice of the fact to be given to the United States district attorney for the district in which the film is seized. Such district attorney shall proceed without delay against such film in any court of the United States in such district for confiscation of process of libel for condemnation. If, in the opinion of the court, the film has been produced, shipped, or received from shipment in commerce, or exhibited in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, in violation of any of the provisions of this act, the film shall be immediately disposed of, in the discretion of the court, either by destruction or by delivery to the Commission for its confiscation. The United States shall be entitled to an immediate injunction, to be granted by the district court of the United States for the district in which the violation is threatened, against the further transportation or exhibition of any motion picture transported or exhibited in violation of this act. In any proceeding for an injunction there shall be a prima-facie presumption that any action of the Commission in refusing a permit was lawful, and the burden shall be upon any person resisting the action of the Commission to prove the contrary.

(c) The proceedings in each libel for condemnation shall conform as nearly as may be to proceedings in admiralty and shall be at the suit and in the name of the United States. It shall be the duty of the various district attorneys, under the direction of the Attorney General, to prosecute for the recovery of films and forfeitures. The cost and expense of each prosecution shall be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of the courts of the United States.

(d) Any dealer who knowingly fails to obey any order provided by the Commission under the provisions of this act shall forfeit to the United States the sum of $500 for each offense. Each distinct violation shall be a separate offense, and in case of a continuing violation each day shall be deemed a separate offense. Such forfeiture shall be recoverable in a civil suit in the name of the United States. The circuit court of appeals shall have exclusive jurisdiction to review and to affirm or modify such orders of the Commission, and the decree of such court shall be final except that it shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari, as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code, if such writ is duly applied for within 60 days after the entry of the decree.

CONSTITUTIONALITY

SEC. 14. If any provision of this act, or the application thereof to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 15. That the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and hereby is, authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this act. The amount shall be repaid out of fees collected under this act.

SEC. 16. That this act shall take effect 90 days after its approval by the President, except that the Commission may extend or modify the time for the enforcement of any of the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That the time shall not be extended beyond 1 year after this act becomes a law.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, let us have a definite understanding about extensions of remarks. I understand that every Member has been granted leave to extend his own remarks until the publication of the last RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands, but if any Member wishes to include remarks of anyone else or to include any extracts from documents, and so forth, he must have unanimous consent.

THE LONDON ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and insert the two speeches made at the Economic Conference in London yesterday.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, under the permission granted me to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I take pleasure in inserting the address of welcome by His Majesty King George V at the opening of the Economic Conference in London on yesterday and also the address of the Honorable Ramsay MacDonald, the British Prime Minister:

THE KING'S WELCOME

LONDON, June 12.—Following is the full text of the speech of King George today opening the World Economic Conference:

"Gentlemen, at this time of wide-spread economic stress, it is with a feeling of deep responsibility that I welcome you to this country.

"I believe this to be the first time in history that any sovereign has presided at the opening of a conference of all the nations of the world. I wish to express my satisfaction that such a gathering has been possible and my confidence that this common endeavor will lead to beneficial results.

"I welcome the representatives of the states, members of the League of Nations. I have always followed the work of the League with keenest appreciation and interest. The League has convened this Conference and has prepared the way for it through the valuable services of the expert committee.

"Without the League and without the ideals of the League, I doubt whether this great meeting could ever have taken place.

"I welcome no less cordially the representatives of those states who are not members of the League. I recognize the spirit of helpful cooperation which has brought them to join in these discussions. I further wish to add a special welcome to the representatives of my dominions and of my Indian Empire."

EXTENDS WELCOME IN FRENCH

At this point the King addressed the delegates in French. A translation of his words follows:

"It is with very profound emotion that I see around me this august assembly which seems so vast, but which represents an infinitely vaster conception—the hope and wishes of the entire world. The world is in an unquiet state, and for you gentlemen who from today begin the work of restoration, the task is heavy. It will not be achieved except through good will and sincere cooperation.

"Messieurs les délégués, I extend my hand to you and with all my heart I wish that your efforts will be brought to a happy result, which the peoples of the world await with impatience."

The King then returned to English.

"I fully recognize the magnitude of the tasks of this conference, but there is evidence of a real desire to reach agreement, which gives me hope. All nations are suffering from a common ill. This is shown only too clearly by the rise in the figures of unemployment. The meaning of these figures in terms of human suffering has been my constant concern in recent years, as it has been the concern of every one of you here today upon whom the responsibility of government has rested.

APPEALS FOR COOPERATION

"In the face of a crisis which all realize and acknowledge I appeal to you all to cooperate for the sake of the ultimate good of the whole world. It cannot be beyond the powers of man so to use the vast resources of the world as to insure the material progress of civilization.

"No diminution in those resources has taken place. On the contrary, discovery, invention, and organization have multiplied their possibilities to such an extent that abundance of production has itself created new problems. And together with this amazing material progress there has come a new recognition of the interdependence of nations and of the value of collaboration between them. Now is the opportunity to harness this new consciousness of common interests to the service of mankind.

"In the firm belief that mutual consultation is the first step toward right action I inaugurate this conference. I shall follow your deliberations with the closest interest and attention, and I pray that the results of your labors will set the world once more on the path of prosperity and ordered progress."

TEXT OF PREMIER MACDONALD'S ADDRESS

LONDON, June 12.—Following is the text of Prime Minister MacDonald's opening speech to the World Economic Conference:

"On behalf of His Majesty's Government in the United Kingdom, I offer you all a most hearty welcome to London. I hope your stay here will be pleasant, above everything else profitable in results, and that when you leave you will have carved the name of the London Economic Conference among those great international gatherings which have brought blessings to mankind.

"The purpose of our meeting is of the gravest importance. His Majesty himself has opened the Conference in a gracious speech which showed his keen appreciation of our work and his deep concern for our success, and I propose to offer him in your name an expression of our gratitude for the honor done to us and the interest he has taken in our objects.

"Sixty-seven governments have been invited, 10 who are not members of the League, and the importance attached to our purpose is recognized by the fact that practically every government invited has accepted the invitation.

"There is greater authority gathered in this hall today than has perhaps ever been brought under one roof in the world's history.

CONFERENCE FACES TREMENDOUS TASK

"The economic life of the world has for years been suffering from a decline which has closed factories, limited employment, reduced standards of living, brought some States to the verge of bankruptcy, and inflicted upon others recurring budgets that cannot be balanced. The machinery of international commerce, upon which the vigor of the human life of the world and the prosperity of the nations depend, has been steadily slowed up.

"The markets are there, the labor to supply them is there, but the labor is not employed and the markets are not filled. When we had less efficient equipment for the making of wealth our national incomes were greater. All the machinery of prosperity is there but it is slowing down. It is not working.

"The briefest reference to the astounding facts will show the magnitude of the problems before us and at the same time direct our thoughts to the points of attack.

"Since 1929 prices have fallen and have kept well below the levels at which production can be remunerative. They have fallen irregularly, moreover, and have distorted the normal relationships upon which economic activity is pivoted. The fall in prices has added oppressively to the burden of the world's indebtedness. In 1932, compared with 1929, production of raw materials had fallen 30 percent and exchange between town and country had been tragically limited.

"National income has fallen seriously everywhere—in some countries by 40 and 50 percent. The general crisis, accentuated by restrictions, by tariffs, quotas, and exchange control, has reduced international trade between 1929 and 1932 to less than three quarters in volume, exchanging at about half price.

"The gold standard has had to be deserted more generally than has been the case in time of peace since it was erected into the international measure of exchange and inevitably, irrespective of fiscal policies and of forms of governments, unemployment has mounted up until the world figure, issued by the International Labor Office, has reached 30,000,000.

"This cannot go on. The world is being driven into a state of things which may well bring it face to face once again—for it has happened on scales of varying extent before now—with a time in which life revolts against hardship, and the gains of the past are swept away by the forces of despair.

"In this drama of deterioration governments and state policy have played an important part.

WAR DEBT QUESTION MUST BE SETTLED

"Behind the subjects I have just mentioned is another in the front rank of importance. It cannot be dealt with here because obviously this Conference is not constituted in such a way as to enable it to consider and settle the matter. I refer to the question of the war debts, which must be dealt with before every obstacle to general recovery has been removed, and it must be taken up without delay by the nations concerned. Lausanne has to be completed and this vexed question settled once for all in the light of present world conditions.

"This Conference is a sequel to the work done at Lausanne last year when, by a conditional agreement on how to deal with war debts and reparations, Europe was saved from immediate financial collapse. It will be remembered that, having finished its own immediate work at Lausanne, the Conference reported that for the clearance of the world crisis a wider conference should be called and that the League of Nations should be invited to take that in hand without delay. Lausanne indicated the subjects which ought to be dealt with and the general steps which should be taken to prepare for the Conference.

"The Council of the League moved at once. In the intervening months of preparation and negotiation the work assigned to us has not been made lighter nor easier. Indeed, the problems which compose our agenda have in some respects been intensified on both the political and economic fields, and we have been advised from some quarters that we should postpone this meeting until circumstances more promising for its success have arisen.

"What prospect is there that these circumstances can arise if the situation is left to right itself or if all that can be done is that each nation independently should take measures to protect itself against catastrophe?

"Indeed, one cause of the later phases of the deterioration is the fact that the nations, left to pursue a policy of national protection, have been driven to resort to measures which, while offering some temporary relief from the pressure which threatens them, add to the general stagnation of world trade and so intensify the influences which increase our trouble.

"If the world is left to right itself without international effort and international agreement, how long is the process of recovery to be? How dark are the depths of misery and the unsettlements which have still to be gone through?

PERIL IN POLICY PURELY NATIONAL

"No one who has surveyed the facts and watched their progress can doubt for a moment that the experiences of the last few years have proved that a purely national economic policy in this modern world is one which, by impoverishing other nations, impoverishes those who pursue it. No nation can permanently enrich itself at the expense of others. Mutual enrichment is a condition of individual enrichment.

"Nationalism in the sphere of politics may be essential to human freedom. Self-sufficient nationalism in economics is the death knell of advancing prosperity.

"The nearer we can make the world an economic unit the better will it be for each nation. In any event international cooperation is our best way to national recovery, and the nation which looks after itself in an international frame of mind will not only lead the world in enlightenment but in well-being.

"We are here, therefore, to pursue the better course of international agreement.

"The Council of the League, on the advice of the Lausanne Conference, appointed a very able and most representative body of experts to report upon an agendum for our business, and it is before you and will be made the basis for your deliberations.

"The heartiest thanks of this Conference are due to those experts for the work and the ability they have embodied in this report.

"The agendum deals only with government policy in relation to recovery, and no one must think of it as being a complete program. We do not profess to touch upon internal machinery and the transactions of business; for instance, hours of labor and rates of wages in relation to production, the destructive effect of speculation and gambling on recovering national credit, or the part played by the middleman in his different activities upon the lowering of wholesale prices.

"We are concentrating on what primarily belongs to the responsibilities of governments as to common action. When we have done our part the various governments must face their own problems of internal industrial policy in cooperation, where that is possible or necessary, with the International Labor Office.

"My thanks are due to the League of Nations for the honor they have done me by inviting me to preside over the Conference. I have accepted the invitation knowing full well how formidable is the work, but relying upon the trust and cooperation of the whole body of delegates and upon the invaluable experience and help of Joseph Avenol, head of the League Secretariat, and his staff from Geneva.

"Mr. Avenol we greet for the first time since his appointment as Secretary General of the League. He will shortly be taking up his duties, and we wish him many years of high endeavor successfully accomplished.

FATE OF GENERATIONS MAY HANG ON RESULT

"I am sure that we are all aware of heavy responsibilities which are upon us and that we have met determined to make the Conference a success. The fate of generations may well depend upon the courage, sincerity, and width of view which we are to show during the next few weeks.

"As the experts have reminded us: 'It will not in our judgment be possible to make substantial progress by piecemeal measures; a policy of nibbling will not solve this crisis.'

"Have we come to deliberate and to decide as though our respective nations were isolated units in the world? Then we shall fail and the world which looks upon us today with expectations will have to drain a bitter cup of disappointment.

"Have we come knowing that the permanent good of each is dependent upon the permanent good of all, and determined to cooperate in coming to agreements which will make a renewal of prosperity possible? Then we shall succeed, and expectations of the world will be justified.

"We must not fail.

"The men who succeed must face their work in the spirit of conquerors.

"We give to the world as the note of our first meeting that we are determined to succeed.

"Nor can we delay. Rapidity of agreement is essential to success. Let the world know that we can show decision and give leadership.

"Our program is intricate and raises subjects upon which we hold views hitherto unreconciled. And yet the needs of the day are so pressing, the experiences of these years have been so illuminating and so tragic, that surely we must approach our work with fresh and flexible minds.

DOGMAS OF PAST ANSWERED BY FACTS

"The facts of our time have answered many of the stiffest theories and dogmas of the past. Statesmanship today will be judged by what it devises to dispel the stern realities of the present and to anticipate the requirements of the future.

"I think that I express the wishes of the great body of delegates when I say that we have not come to discuss mere economic theories and generalities but to make practical proposals to meet urgent necessities. I should therefore invite each delegation to submit its proposals in terms that are definite so that we may enter without loss of time into an examination of what can be translated into action, and begin deliberations on what each of us can do in cooperation with the others either for the emergency or for more permanent purposes.

"Let this London Conference put new heart and new confidence into the world, and let it mark the end of the years of uncertainties and of policies which have brought this distress upon us all.

"Let us see to it that before we disperse we shall have revived hope and energy and opportunity. For those the world waits, and it is in our power to provide them."

POLITICAL AND CIVIL RIGHTS OF CITIZENS OF PUERTO RICO

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein some documents from the Legislature of Puerto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, for the first time in the history of the country, a law passed by the Legislature of Puerto Rico, and vetoed by the Governor, is going to be considered and decided by the President of the United States whether it will finally become a law of the island or not.

The law involves matters of democratic principles and the guaranties of the civil and political rights of the citizens of Puerto Rico.

Intended to banish forever deplorable ills of the past, the Legislature of Puerto Rico passed an electoral law granting rights to the former parties that took part in the last election with equal rights of representation in the insular board, the registry boards, and at the polls. Governor Beverley vetoed the law, and the legislature passed again such law over the veto by two-thirds majority of the senate and house of the Legislature of Puerto Rico.

Now, in accordance with section 34 of our organic law of Puerto Rico, the matter has to be finally decided by the President. The report is going to be presented by the acting chief of the Bureau of Insular Affairs, General Parker, to the Secretary of War, who will place the matter before the President.

What the President may decide nobody knows, but one thing is certain, that if the President upholds the Legislature of Puerto Rico, it will serve the purpose of fomenting and fostering the civil rights and the American institutions of education, freedom, and democracy, and it will cause joy to the great majority of the people of Puerto Rico who are lovers of the American institutions in the island. On the contrary, should the President uphold the veto, it would cause a great disappointment and retard the advancement of the American institutions.

Since the people of Puerto Rico have enjoyed the rights of a civil government there has never been a more clean and honest election than that held last November—1932—because every party had the opportunity and guaranty of being represented.

I desire, now, for the information of the Members of Congress, to insert into the RECORD all the documents concerning the history of the case—the veto of the Governor and some reports of the Legislature and of the President of the Senate of Puerto Rico:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
San Juan, Puerto Rico, April 14, 1933.

The Honorable the SENATE OF PUERTO RICO,
San Juan, Puerto Rico.

GENTLEMEN: I am returning herewith without my approval senate bill no. 2, entitled "An act to amend sections 1, 13, 14, 47, 49, 62, and 80 of Act No. 79, entitled 'An act to establish the law of registrations and elections', approved June 25, 1919, as subsequently amended on June 18, 1924, and July 6, 1932, to insure permanent, equal, and just electoral representation to political parties, and for other purposes."

The general purpose of this bill is to increase the membership of the present insular board of elections and all local election boards from three to five members, giving full representation in each case, under the present circumstances, to every party which nominated general tickets in the last elections.

Under the present election law, as amended by Act No. 3, approved July 6, 1932, the insular board of elections is composed of the general supervisor of elections, appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, who serves an indeterminate term, and, in addition, of representatives of the two parties which in the last general elections secured the highest number and the second highest number of votes for their respective candidates for Resident Commissioner to the United States. In case of a fusion or combination of these two principal parties, then any party which received 10 percent of the total vote cast in the last general election, or any party by petition, becomes entitled to full representation on the insular and local election boards in order to protect itself against the combination of the two principal parties. Although the present law still permits two votes to a combination of parties, as happened in 1932, nevertheless, other parties in such circumstances are placed in a position to protect their interests. If the two principal parties do not combine, any party which secured 10 percent of the vote at the last general election and any party by petition is entitled to have observers present at all meetings of the insular and local election boards to take part in and observe all proceedings, and such observers are entitled to all the rights of the members of the board except the right to vote.

The basic theory of the present electoral law and, in fact, of our election law since 1906 has been the two-party system. Since 1919, when the insular board of elections was established to control the conduct of elections in place of the executive council, the law has contemplated that the two principal opposing parties should be equally represented in all electoral machinery, while the general supervisor of elections has held the balance between the opposing interests. The definition of principal parties has not been substantially changed since 1906. The general supervisor of elections, as the impartial and nonpartisan government member, can, under the present system, decide as he may consider just questions in which the two opposing parties are not in accord. This system, both in theory and in practice, seems to me the best that can be devised if we are to maintain the present idea of election boards. The system of full representation for the two opposing principal parties, with other parties of any importance having the right to name observers, is the healthiest method of conducting elections, and is more apt to insure fairness than a system of having large boards with possible combinations.

The change which the present bill proposes is much more far-reaching and fundamental than it appears to be on the surface, and does not seem to me to be wise for any party concerned, nor convenient to the public interests. Looking at the immediate situation that would result from the approval of this bill, we see that in the elections of 1932 four parties went to the polls with general candidates, the Socialist Party and the Union-Republican Party having nominated the same candidates and thus having combined. In the contest for Resident Commissioner the Union-Republican Party received 110,794 votes, the Socialist Party 97,438 votes, the combination of these parties thus receiving 208,232 votes. The Liberal Party received 170,168 votes and the Nationalist Party 5,257 votes.

At the present time, the insular board is composed of the general superintendent of elections, one representative from the Union-Republican Party, and one representative from the Liberal Party, while the Socialist Party has an observer. As a practical and common-sense matter, so long as the present combination between the Union-Republican and the Socialist Parties endure, the Union-Republican member on the insular board of elections may be said to represent the interests of the coalition of these two parties, which combined won the immense majority of the insular posts. Should the present bill be approved, a peculiar situation would result. The board would be composed of the general supervisor of elections and representatives from the Union-Republican Party, the Socialist Party, the Liberal Party, and the Nationalist Party. The present combination of the Socialist Party and the Union-Republican Party would thus have 2 votes, the Liberal Party 1 vote, and the Nationalist Party 1 vote. The Union-Republican Party would have 1 vote for its 110,794 electors, the Socialist Party 1 for its 97,438, the Liberal Party 1 for its 170,168 electors, and the Nationalist Party 1 for its 5,257 electors. The Nationalist Party, which received slightly less than 1.2 percent of the total vote cast, would have representation equal to that of the Liberal Party, which received somewhat over 37 percent of the total vote cast. A further peculiarity would be that in case, in the elections of 1936 a new party should register by petition it would be forced to secure petitions of over 45,000 electors and then would not have the representation which is given to the Nationalist Party, which in the actual elections secured only 5,257 votes.

Considering the ease with which combinations of parties are made and unmade in the island and considering the numerous changes in political alinements which take place, it is impossible to predict at this time what the actual situation will be on the eve of the elections of 1936, and any amendments at all to the election law at the present time seem to be precipitate and unnecessary.

A further objection to the present bill is the fact that the term of the general supervisor of elections is made 4 years. At present he serves for an indeterminate term, and, considering the delicate nature of his position and work, I am convinced that the indeterminate term is much superior to a specific term. Another point to be noted is that the second paragraph of section 1 as it is proposed to be amended removes all the employees and officers of the insular board of elections from the civil service. Furthermore, in section 47 the appointment of inspectors and poll clerks for the polling places is taken out of the hands of the superintendent of elections and placed in the hands of the political parties. All of these provisions are objectionable.

I believe that any amendments to the election law which may appear to be necessary before the elections of 1936 can most wisely be left to later sessions.

Respectfully,

JAMES R. BEVERLEY, Governor.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,
Washington, May 26, 1933.

Hon. SANTIAGO IGLESIAS,
Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico,
House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. COMMISSIONER: I have received your letter of May 24, enclosing documents relating to the recent veto by the Governor of Puerto Rico of senate bill no. 2 (act to amend certain sections of the present electoral law of Puerto Rico).

The enclosures to your letter—memorandum of the committee on insular and municipal government and elections of the Senate of Puerto Rico, and additional memorandum to the memorandum sent by the Senate of Puerto Rico to Governor James Beverley by the president of the senate, Hon. Rafael Martinez Nadal—will be given careful consideration in this Bureau in connection with the proposed amendments to the electoral law of Puerto Rico, and will be included in the papers to be submitted to the Secretary of War with a view to action by the President upon senate bill no. 2, pursuant to section 34 of the organic act of Puerto Rico.

Very sincerely yours,

F. LEJ. PARKER,
Acting Chief of Bureau.

MAY 24, 1933.

ADDITIONAL MEMORANDUM TO THE MEMORANDUM SENT BY THE SENATE OF PUERTO RICO TO GOV. JAMES BEVERLEY

In re: Governor's veto to senate bill no. 2, entitled "An act to amend sections 1, 13, 14, 47, 49, 62, and 80 of Act No. 79."

Essentially the Governor of Puerto Rico presents four objections as basis for his veto to the senate bill no. 2, to amend sections 1, 13, 14, 47, 49, 62, and 80 of the electoral law in force.

The first objection seems to be directed to the desire of avoiding the two political parties, having the right to be represented in the insular board of elections, from forming a coalition and combining their votes against another party.

The second objection refers to the fact that the new amendment to the electoral law in force provides that the general supervisor of elections will be appointed for a term of 4 years, while at the present time his appointment is of a permanent character.

The third objection is that the new amendment eliminates all the employees of the insular board of elections from the classified civil service.

And the last objection states that section 47 takes away from the hands of the general supervisor of elections the appointment of inspectors and clerks for the polling places and puts them in the hands of the political parties.

We will discuss in this order the objections made by the Governor to the approval of this law.

In the first instant the law vetoed does not increase the number of members of the insular board of elections to five, because it limits itself to the same number of members as the insular board of elections had in the elections of November 1932 by virtue of the proper effect of the law, according with the changes of the political situation and the natural evolution of the political parties.

And this was the natural result of Act No. 1 passed by the legislature and signed by the Governor himself, Mr. Beverley, on December 9, 1931.

The argumentation of the Governor tends, apparently, to avoid what he thinks would be an injustice; that is to say, that two parties would form a coalition and combine their votes against the other. Speaking specially, it refers to the coalition of the Union-Republican Party with the Socialist Party against the Liberal Party.

These parties obtained in the elections of November, 1932, the following votes:

	Votes
Union-Republican Party	110,794
Socialist Party	97,438
Liberal Party	170,168

The Governor, in vetoing this law, thinks in probable, or improbable, future events, and, trying to avoid an imaginary injustice, does a tremendous and positive injustice to the Socialist Party, depriving 100,000 voters the right to be represented, and judges the acts of the majority parties in open contradiction to his former opinions about the matter and his recommendations to the legislature.

In the law he has vetoed there exists no risks of assumed injustice that the Governor has pointed out, because in case the Socialist Party and the Union-Republican Party would repeat their coalition in the year 1936, and combine their votes to realize injustices against the Liberal Party, the vote of the representative of this party, added to the vote of the general supervisor of elections, would constitute 2 votes that would defeat, by tie, any unjust proposition of the coalition parties.

Let us think now that the coalition of the parties of the last elections does not take place, and that all parties would be adversaries at the elections.

What, then, would be the situation of the Socialist Party? Could not the two representatives of the principal parties have an understanding and approve unjust propositions against the Socialist Party? What could the vote of the supervisor of elections, with his sole vote, do against 2 votes of the principal parties to defend the Socialist Party of outrages, when the Socialist Party would not have a vote to add to the one of the supervisor and erect a barrier against the possible injustices of its adversaries?

If it is true that there exists the desire to protect the rights of all the parties, it is absolutely advisable to approve the vetoed law, because in it there exists only imaginary risks, based on fortuitous acts, and avoided by the same law; while, if it is not approved and the probable acts that the Governor suspects occur, according with the law in force, the Socialist Party would be exposed to all risks without representation with voice and vote in the registrations in local boards of elections, in the polling places, and in the insular board of elections. Indeed, this would be an abominable injustice to 100,000 voters, which compose the Socialist Party of Puerto Rico.

On the other hand, the action of the Governor in vetoing this law is in complete contradiction to the doctrines and recommendations which Governor Beverley himself made in favor of the right of representation of all the most important nucleuses of public opinion; still more, he suggested in his message to the Legislature of Puerto Rico, on June 21, 1932:

"In connection with the election and registration law, it has been suggested by independent voters that the Governor be authorized to appoint for the polling places watchers who are members of the poll boards, and whose duty shall be to represent the independent candidates and voters."

These votes to independent candidates came only to a total of 65, from a grand total of 383,722 votes cast in the elections of 1932.

All these events known, the rectification of the postulates of Governor Beverley is really inexplicable, who recommended the convenience of the representation for 65 votes, and who does not feel preoccupations for the right of representation to 100,000 Socialist voters, whom with his veto, leaves them without protection for next elections.

The objection of the fixing of a term of 4 years we believe is trivial and of little importance. It is in conformity with the terms of 4 years fixed by our organic act and with the changes that every 4 years the body of the senate has.

It does not offer risk, because the nominating power is vested in the Governor, and it is presumed that the executive will try always to make the best election of the most proper men for the post.

Never in Puerto Rico were the employees of the insular board of elections embodied in the classified civil service. This year they were included by a drastic and erroneous interpretation, in our judgment, rendered by the president of the civil-service commission.

Section 4 of article 88, regulating the civil service in Puerto Rico, approved May 11, 1931, provides that "all the officials and employees whose annual compensation does not exceed $300", will not be under the classified civil service but under the "not classified."

Now, the subordinate employees of the insular board of elections, during election year, excepting the secretary and chief clerk, do not appear in the budget, nor do they have any annual appropriation, their work being temporary and with small salary. They work on and off, and consequently there is no basis to assert the fixed annual salary that they receive and to establish this action clearly as a basis to the application of the civil service law.

Never in the former 30 years were they on the civil service, neither are they now. They were put into the law by the arbitrary interpretation of the civil-service commission, and, precisely, it was the intention of the legislature to throw down that arbitrariness and maintain the status quo existing from immemorial time.

The last objection of the Governor is based on the fact that the general supervisor of elections is deprived of the faculty to appoint the inspectors and clerks of the polling places in the precincts.

This is not true, the supervisor has never made in Puerto Rico these appointments; in all the history of our electoral laws he has never had that faculty. The political parties select their own representatives and send their names to the supervisor, who automatically appoints them, because the law has put that function in a manner solely ministerial in the hands of a representative of the Government.

Study all our electoral law and you will see that in this matter the political parties are sovereign, and they can appoint and dismiss from office any persons, according with their supreme will and political conveniences.

This objection has more nature of pretext than an argument to justify the veto of the law.

In conclusion, we want to say that the last elections of November 1932 have been the most honest, clean, and just that have ever been held in the island with an insular board of five members; the same form provided in the law vetoed by the Governor, James R. Beverley. Of his own conviction, the general supervisor of elections, a man of many years' experience, favorably recommended the approval of senate bill no. 2.

In spite of this fact the law was vetoed by the executive and we now request you to uphold the legislature of the island by approving the law for the good of the people's rights.

Respectfully yours,

RAFAEL MARTÍNEZ NADAL,
President Senate of Puerto Rico.

MAY 26, 1933.

SENATE OF PUERTO RICO,
COMMITTEE ON INSULAR AND MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT AND ELECTIONS.

Your committee on insular and municipal government and elections has carefully considered the document sent by the honorable Governor of Puerto Rico to this senate, returning with his veto senate bill no. 2, entitled "An act to amend sections 1, 13, 14, 47, 49, 62, and 80 of act no. 79, entitled 'An act to establish the law of registrations and elections', approved June 25, 1919, as subsequently amended on June 18, 1924, and July 6, 1932, to insure permanent, equal, and just electoral representation to political parties, and for other purposes."

Giving the reasons for his veto, the Governor of Puerto Rico bases his executive action on the following argument: (1) That the bill has increased to five the number of members representing each party on the insular board of elections and on the local boards of elections, giving complete representation to each party; (2) that the vetoed bill on becoming law would destroy what the executive calls the basic theory of the present election law, which since 1906 has established a biparty system, assuring representation only to two opposed principal parties; (3) that the bill is not convenient to public interest, because, according to the Governor, there would be the possibility that in the next elections two parties might be combined, which would give double representation on the electoral bodies, while the said Liberal Party would have only single representation; (4) that it would not give good results to fix a term of 4 years to the appointment of the general supervisor of elections; (5) that it eliminates the employees of the insular board of elections from the classified civil service; and (6) that it would take away from the general supervisor of elections the power to appoint inspectors and clerks for the polling places.

In our purpose of demonstrating the lack of wisdom of the vetoing the bill passed by the legislative branch of our Government, we are going to consider in their indicated order the six objections made by the executive:

(1) The first basis for the veto imparted to said legislation lacks foundation if it is remembered that the electoral law in force, on being applied at the last elections of 1932 in accord with the political situation and the evolution of the parties that participated in the elections, already raised to five, the members on the insular board of elections and on the local boards of elections, giving complete representation to each party, so that the vetoed bill does nothing more than give permanently to all political parties the same representation which they had in the past elections of 1932, in which elections four political parties of Puerto Rico, voted, to wit: The Republican-Union, the Socialist, the Liberal, and the Nationalist, and each one of them had in the last elections the same complete representation on the electoral bodies, five being precisely the number of representatives on said insular board of elections and on the local boards, so that the bill alters in absolutely no respect the representations already had by the same parties as now exist in Puerto Rico. This equal representation of the four parties was granted to them by the provisions of Act No. 1, passed by the Legislature of Puerto Rico and signed by the Governor himself, Hon. James R. Beverley, on December 9, 1931.

(2) The reason that the vetoed bill, on becoming law, would destroy the supposed basic theory of the electoral law also lacks foundation, because that basic theory of biparty representation to which the Governor refers was already destroyed in Puerto Rico, when the electoral law was amended precisely on recommendations made to the Legislature of Puerto Rico by the Governor himself, Hon. James R. Beverley, in his message to the twelfth legislature, fourth regular session, on February 8, 1932, which message inspired the legislative branch of our Government to approve the electoral law mentioned in the preceding paragraph.

We deem it opportune to make certain observations on the theory of electoral representation which has prevailed for many years in Puerto Rico, in order to make it clear that in Puerto Rico, at present, the biparty representation is not the best means to insure to the people of the island a fair and honest election, due to the peculiar tendencies of insular public opinion and to the existence of diverse sectors of opinion which aspire to win public power and to carry out their programs and ideals, it is true that since the American civil regime took effect in Puerto Rico in 1900, until recently, the theory of a biparty representation on the electoral bodies followed the same principle as that maintained in some States of our Nation. The establishment in Puerto Rico of such a theory of electoral representation from 1900 up to 1915, was founded on the fact that, up to that time there existed in Puerto Rico only two big parties, which divided public opinion between them, and which were the only parties organized to participate in the elections and to file their tickets and submit the same to the public will. But in 1915, the labor organizations of Puerto Rico encouraged by the maintenance in the island of the democratic and just institutions of the American people, and, aspiring to better the condition of the laboring masses, within the policy of the American Federation of Labor, created their own political organization by forming a third party, which could not be denied representation in the electoral organizations, for such denial would have implied an attack on democracy and an act of tyranny. In 1917 this third party obtained a considerable number of votes, it having carried some municipalities of the island, electing two representatives to the lower house and one senator to our upper house, who happens to be precisely the same person now elected by the popular vote of Puerto Rico to represent the island officially as Resident Commissioner of Puerto Rico in Washington. The idea that it is not reasonable or fair to talk about biparty representation in a country that pretends to be governed by democratic institutions, when in said country there are more than two parties contending for public opinion, appeals to the most rudimentary human mind.

To maintain the principle of a biparty representation—that is, the exclusive and privileged representation of only two parties, when there are more than two parties contending for public opinion—would be unjust and undemocratic, repugnant to the minds of those persons who desire to insure to all sectors of opinion the necessary guaranties for a free and honest expression of the public will. Despite the foregoing facts, it was in 1924, when it represented a very considerable force in Puerto Rico, that the Socialist Party was for the first time given any representation on the electoral organizations; and this was done in 1924, when the two principal parties combined under the same ticket, one of which principal parties was the same which the present Liberal Party claims to have succeeded. Although the two principal parties combined in 1924, the legislature of that time, then almost wholly controlled by the very party now called the Liberal Party, passed an election law to govern the elections for that year, in which a double representation was insured to the two combined parties which nominated the same ticket, and the Socialist Party was given certain illusory representation consisting only of an observer having no vote in the electoral organizations. In the year 1924 four parties took part in the elections, the fourth of which parties did not have any effective representation.

The injustice of that law in 1924, which was the first to unsettle the tradition of the biparty representation, was partly remedied at the 1928 elections, when the Socialist Party had full representation, due to the fact that it had become a principal party by reason of the number of votes cast at the elections of 1924.

We do not deem it necessary to tell of the evolution of the political parties since 1924. In 1932 four different parties took part in the elections, with equal representations, in the same form and to the same extent as this vetoed bill proposed to insure to them in the future. It is true that two of these parties combined or formed a coalition by nominating the same general ticket for both. It is true these two parties assumed a double electoral representation, but it was in accordance with the same election law as is now in force, which was approved by the Governor himself, Hon. James R. Beverley. But it is very venturesome to speak with certainty of the possible combinations of the future. Considering the present electoral situation and thinking precisely of the parties existing in Puerto Rico and of their respective programs and aspirations, the vetoed bill appears to be very equitable and just. There are four parties in Puerto Rico; two of them, the Republican-Union and the Socialist, have many points of contact, especially in their sentiment of appreciation toward the democratic and just institutions of the American people and toward the fundamental rights of the citizen which guarantee their magnificent Constitution, and in their expressed wish that the people of Puerto Rico shall permanently unite their destiny with that of the American people, with the aspiration that our people may in future be a State of the National Federation. In the other two parties, the Liberal and the Nationalist, the sentiment of independence prevails with the aspiration for the future separation of the people of Puerto Rico from the United States, the island to form a separate nation. This ideology of the Liberal and Nationalist Parties makes us logically presume that the future electoral coalition of these two parties is also possible in the future, and, both having the same representation, the honorable Governor could venture to think, with the same logic, that said parties might combine, thus having double representation, equal to that of the other two parties mentioned, and in such possible and natural eventuality the electoral bodies would always be balanced, the government having the fifth vote in the insular and local board of election. The unduly vetoed bill, besides permanently establishing the representation which was a reality in law and in fact, at the last elections of 1932, insures a just and adequate representation to all sections of opinion now existing in Puerto Rico.

Although the Nationalist Party represents a small contingent of only 5,257 votes out of a total of 303,722 votes cast in the elections of 1932, the truth is that the Nationalist Party represents an idea and a legitimate and noble aspiration of a number of Puerto Ricans, and it is just that said trend of opinion should have its adequate vehicle of expression through electoral representation and guaranties.

(3) The Governor objects to the bill because, in his opinion, it is not convenient to public interest inasmuch as there would be a possibility of two parties combining for the next elections, which parties would have double representation on the electoral bodies while the Liberal Party would have only one representation. We have previously argued against this unfounded and unreasonable fear of the Governor of Puerto Rico. For the reasons stated in this connection, we do not believe there is any basis for thinking conclusively that in the future the Liberal Party may have one representation against double representation of two combined parties; but we also wish to state that this idea of the Governor is contrary to the same idea implied by the act of the Governor himself, Hon. James R. Beverley, when he approved, at the close of the year 1932, the election law enacted by the Legislature of Puerto Rico at the second special session of the twelfth legislature.

(4) The fourth objection of the Governor is based on the fact that the bill fixes at 4 years the term of office of the general supervisor of election. We believe this part of the bill to be a detail of no fundamental transcendency and that it is trivial to object to it for that reason. We think that when the Legislature of Puerto Rico fixed at 4 years the term of office of the general supervisor of elections, it did so inspired by the spirit of the organic act of Puerto Rico which provides that the appointments of officers of the government of Puerto Rico shall be made with the advice and consent of the insular senate. We state that the legislature acted in this case inspired by principles of the organic act granted to Puerto Rico by the Congress of the United States because undoubtedly, when the Senate of Puerto Rico was invested with such powers it was the idea of Congress that the popular representation of Puerto Rico embodied by the insular senate should intervene in the appointments of the executive, and it is reasonable to think that the senate could not exercise such prerogative if the officers were appointed for life or for indefinite terms.

Whereas the Senate of Puerto Rico, pursuant to the organic act, is elected every 4 years, it is natural that the Congress wished that the popular will expressed in the senate should intervene in all executive appointments every 4 years, and this principle of the organic act would be violated if it were provided by law that the appointment of an official, especially of the administrative importance of the insular supervisor of elections, should not be submitted to the Senate of Puerto Rico for confirmation by it every 4 years when, pursuant to the organic act, the people of Puerto Rico elect their senate.

(5) The Governor is also opposed to the elimination of the classified civil service as regards the appointment of the employees of the insular board of election. In our judgment, the Governor is mistaken in this matter. Within the principles of a sane democracy it is reasonable and just that the parties should be at liberty to choose their political representatives on the electoral bodies. The employees of the insular board of elections are none other than delegates and agents who do the administrative work prescribed by the board. Such employees must necessarily be men in the confidence of the parties legally represented on the insular board of elections, and from all points of view it would be completely ineffectual and improper that the material and ministerial labor done by the employees of the insular board of elections should be performed by persons who are not in the confidence of the parties represented thereon, and such a thing would practically be equivalent to depriving the parties of their representation.

(6) The Governor also objects to the principle maintained by the election law vetoed by him which empowers the political parties to appoint their representatives on the poll boards or in the polling places. The Governor is mistaken when he says that the act deprives the general supervisor of elections of such power. That act cannot deprive the general supervisor of elections of such power, because in reality said power is not vested in the general supervisor of elections. That power is vested, pursuant to the law in force, in the same political parties to which the law in force reserves the right to present such candidates, who are then approved by a mere formality, not by the general supervisor of elections but by the same party representatives of the insular board of elections. It would be absurd that the political parties should have their representatives at the polling places appointed by an entity foreign to the parties themselves. That would be to deny representation and guaranties to said parties, and the natural and just wish in all countries desiring that the electoral law be a guaranty for the representation of the sectors of public opinion, and in order that such officials who perform the difficult task of watching over the balloting and preparing the election returns may lawfully represent the parties contesting for public power in the democratic elections.

Finally, we wish to state that the election law (S.B. 2) which has been vetoed by the Governor is inspired by the same recommendations made to the legislature precisely by the Governor, Hon. James R. Beverley, himself, in order to offer adequate and just electoral representation to all sectors of opinion. Furthermore, the Governor himself, the Honorable James R. Beverley, who vetoes the bill in question, recommended to the Legislature of Puerto Rico in his official message delivered to it on June 21, 1932, that electoral representation be given not only to the principal and organized political parties but also to any sector of public opinion, and even to independent voters having no affinity, no ideology, no government program, and no common public aspiration.

The Governor of Puerto Rico, the Honorable James R. Beverley, expressed himself as follows on addressing himself to the Legislature of Puerto Rico at the joint session of both legislative houses, held on February 9, 1932:

"There are certain important changes to the election and registration law of Puerto Rico which must be made without delay. There is no higher policy for the government of the state than the way in which the election laws are made and the elections carried out. We must do all that may be necessary in order to insure the fullest and freest expression of public opinion in November. This is not a question of personal antagonisms or of party struggles but a question of principle."

In connection with the thoughts expressed in this report, the Governor himself, Hon. James R. Beverley, also stated as follows on addressing himself to the Legislature of Puerto Rico at the joint session of both houses held on June 21, 1932:

"In connection with the election and registration law, it has been suggested by independent voters that the Governor be authorized to appoint for the polling places watchers who are members of the poll boards, and whose duty shall be to represent the independent candidates and voters."

There were only 65 votes cast for independent candidates at the last elections from a total of 383,722 votes cast in said 1932 elections.

It is seen that if the Governor himself, Hon. James R. Beverley, went to the improper extreme of recommending electoral representation over such a small indefinite number of independent voters, we do not see how he could reasonably veto a bill for an election law insuring representation to the four different organized parties which now arouse the public conscience in the island.

In view of the reasons set forth, and due to the power vested in the Legislature of Puerto Rico by section 34 of the organic act, we recommended to the Senate of Puerto Rico that it pass the bill over the Governor's veto so that, after action by the House of Representatives, in case said bill is again disapproved by the Governor, it may, pursuant to said organic act, be sent for consideration by the President of the United States.

Done in the assembly room of the Senate of Puerto Rico, on the 14th day of April 1933.

BOLIVAR PAGÁN,
Chairman Committee on Insular and Municipal Government and on Elections.
SIXTO A. PACHECO,
Secretary.

MULTIMETALLISM IN LIEU OF MONOMETALLISM, OR THE SINGLE GOLD STANDARD, A RELIEF FROM OUR PRESENT ECONOMIC DEPRESSION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include some extracts from a speech by Frank E. Johnesse, on Multimetalism in Lieu of Monometalism, or The Single Gold Standard, a Relief from Our Present Economic Depression.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech by Frank E. Johnesse, M.E., of Boise, Idaho, March 1, 1933, on Multimetallism in Lieu of Monometallism, or the Single Gold Standard, a Relief from Our Present Economic Depression.

The destiny of all nations as well as that of the world in general is under the influence of fundamental laws. As these laws are discovered and their workings better understood, they bring about the adoption of new methods, which in turn alter and improve the results of our efforts. Without following this process of evolution in governmental affairs the system becomes stagnant with deteriorating results. The fact is plainly exemplified by the present status of the existing monetary system of the world which has remained practically the same since the dawn of civilization. We have ignored the very important fact that relativity is a fundamental law.

Monometalism, the single gold standard, should long ago have been thrown into the discard. It is the greatest menace to peace, prosperity, and progress of the world at the present time. There is not enough gold in the entire world to provide a substantial metal backing for the monetary system of our own Nation, to say nothing of the rest of the world. Some 25 nations have technically suspended the gold standard in order to avoid the impossible, but they are in reality carrying on under the same system.

It would require at least 20 times as much available gold to provide anything like a sound backing for the world's gold standard monetary system, and as we cannot hope for an annual increase of more than a few percent of the present supply for some years to come, it should be evident to even the least informed that a broader metal basis must be provided in order to restore the credit of the world.

The principle of our monetary system, which provides for a metal backing thereto, is sound and practical, but our big mistake has been in confining the backing to the one metal of which there is an insufficient supply and not essential to industrial progress, instead of providing the protection of the fundamental law of relativity by including other metals which are indispensable and which together will provide an adequate supply.

Gold is not a necessary metal. Were it not used as a medium of exchange, it would have no intrinsic value. As a metal it has no part in industry, while silver, lead, zinc, copper, and iron are vitally essential to the progress of this scientific and mechanized age. Then why should we not include these other metals along with gold to provide an adequate quantity for a stable backing to our monetary system?

Gold at its present fixed value should be used merely as a unit from which to fix the relative value of the other metals based on the cost of production. The price could be changed gradually from time to time to meet the difference in cost of production of any one or more of the other metals included without making but the slightest difference in the total average value of the several metals included or the purchasing power thereof.

For instance, suppose we were to adopt this proposed sixfold multimetal system and fix the relative price as follows:

That of gold at its present price	per ounce	$20.67
Silver, 16 to 1	do	1.29
Copper, 165½ pounds to 1 ounce of gold	per pound	.12½
Lead, 413½ pounds to 1 ounce of gold	do	.05
Zinc, 459 pounds to 1 ounce of gold	do	.04½
Iron, 13,340 pounds, or 5.17 tons, to 1 ounce of gold	per ton	4.00

Then suppose it was found to the best interest of the system and in justice to the producer to increase the price of copper 2½ cents per pound. It would result in a deflation of less than one quarter of 1 percent of the fixed relative value. Or to reduce the price of lead 1 cent per pound, the relative fixed value would be inflated just one quarter of 1 percent, which would not make the slightest difference in commodity prices.

Under our present system the mere fact that we are exporting or importing a few million ounces of gold, or a report to the effect that a crop shortage is indicated because of drouths, or a rise or fall in stock-market prices would have a decidedly greater effect one way or the other on the purchasing power of gold and interest rates.

There is no way by which we can estimate anything like a fair average of the production cost of gold, but with the industrial metals it is different, and by fixing the price according to the cost of production with a fair profit to the producer, a fair relative price of labor, and all other commodities would very soon be automatically adjusted thereto. Then there would never be but the slightest variation in commodity prices or the purchasing price of the fixed standard.

To put this sixfold multimetalism plan into force and effect, there should be enacted an act to amend the act of March 14, 1900, to read something like the following:

To define and fix the standard of values, to maintain the parity of all forms of money issued or coined by the United States, to refund the public debt, and for other purposes. It is hereby provided that gold at $20.67 per ounce, together with silver at $1.29 per ounce, and copper, lead, zinc, and iron at a relative price to be fixed by a commission with power to readjust the ratio from time to time, to be appointed by the President, shall together provide our standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity of value with this standard, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity; and all United States notes, Treasury notes and bonds now outstanding, and those hereafter issued, except those now held by foreigners or foreign nations which were made redeemable in gold, as well as all other debts, both public and private, shall be redeemable in any one or more of the said six metals at the fixed relative value, except that wherein the sum is not in excess of, or is less than $100, in which case the redemption must be made in gold or silver if demanded. All metals so used, except gold, must be a product of the United States or nations having the same monetary system, and of a fineness of not less than 99½ percent chemically pure.

It does not require a very close analysis of the world's monetary systems to convince the unbiased mind that to undertake to maintain a stable measure of values under the single gold standard is absolutely impossible.

The fact that we have not broadened and enlarged upon the metal basis backing our monetary system when it has so long been apparent that the world's gold supply is wholly inadequate has been the chief factor in bringing on and prolonging the present world-wide business depression.

Until our own and other leading nations of the world can agree upon a monetary system, founded upon a fixed relative value of essential indestructible commodities such as herein suggested, there can be but slight relief.

Fiat or paper money is out of the question. Therefore, it is a foregone conclusion that there must be provided a broader metal backing for our monetary system to prevent a reoccurrence of extreme credit fluctuation which has proven so disastrous.

We have reached the metal age in our industrial and scientific progress, and without the industrial metals we would very soon become engulfed in industrial stagnation, for they are vitally essential to the progress of this mechanized age. On the other hand, were we to withdraw all gold from circulation and discontinue its production, it would not interfere in the least therewith.

This system would provide a stable and nonfluctuating standard of values on medium of exchange that would prove a safeguard against serious business depressions in the future.

Under existing various national monetary systems the relative price of all metals, as well as all other commodities, is practically the same the world over, no matter how much they may vary from time to time. This is evidence of the fact that relativity is a fundamental law and will obtain under multimetalism.

Under such a system the price of labor, farm products, and all other commodities would very soon become adjusted on a comparative cost ratio from which there would never be but the slightest variation. Very naturally, the local price of different commodities, as well as that of the metals included in multimetalism, would vary to a slight degree in accordance with the difference in the cost of transportation between the points of production and consumption, but on the whole they would at all times strike a near balance that would never vary more than a few percent at most.

Under this system the hoarding of gold by nations or capitalistic combines would in no way interfere with credit or business conditions, so long as there was available in different localities or nations a reasonable supply of one or more of the metals included therein; a certificate of ownership of any quantity of any one of which would be as good security as a gold note under the gold standard.

For a nation or the entire world to endeavor to carry on commercially under a monetary system that has for its metal backing and standard of values a metal of which the world's supply is so limited that it can be controlled by capitalistic interests and its purchasing power made to vary as much as several hundred percent there can be but one result, and that is broad variation in commodity prices at all times and periodical, national, and world-wide panicky depressions with their disastrous results.

The adoption of this proposed plan would at once enhance credit, restore the billions lost in property-value depreciation, stabilize banking, and restore business conditions to normalcy.

Very naturally the remonetization of silver would result in a stride in the right direction, but at any fair ratio with gold, the two alone would not provide the stability that the inclusion of the other four mentioned industrial metals would. So why stop half way? The situation demands radical and immediate action.

Our President-elect, Governor Roosevelt, has recently said, "The country needs, and unless I mistake its temper, the country demands, bold persistent experimentation. It is common sense to take a method and try it; if it fails, admit it frankly and try another; but, above all, try something. The millions who are in want will not stand by silently forever while the things to satisfy their needs are within easy reach."

There would very naturally be severe criticism of price fixing by the Government, but do we not fix the redemption value of gold, and would it not be far better to have prices fixed by a commission in the interest of the public or all the people than by trusts and combines in their own selfish interest as under the existing system?

It makes no difference to the producer what the price of products are in dollars and cents, so long as the price of labor and all other commodities is on a relative basis.

Adherents of the single gold standard, or monometallism, are strongly opposed to the use of fiat or irredeemable paper money as a legal tender; and yet while functioning under the single gold standard, we are in reality doing that very thing, because there is not available enough gold to redeem as much as 5 percent of the outstanding Federal paper promises, to say nothing of that of the States, counties, municipalities, and individuals.

With a more stable monetary system which can be made to restore the debtor's losses to a large extent at least, by providing a fair value to the collateral backing of their paper promises, we can soon emerge from the existing deplorable conditions.

Nothing we could do would go farther toward farm relief and arresting centralization of wealth.

Right now we are suffering from a ghastly failure of political and industrial leadership and an utter inability on the part of "the powers that be" to comprehend what honest stabilized metallic currency really means, and what will result from a continuation of our present system.

It is quite a difficult problem to induce the general public to enlighten themselves on economic subjects, but it does seem that in times like the present our better judgment would obtain and that some such logical plan would be adopted to pave the way for a return to normal conditions without having to resort to extreme measures.

Ex-President Hoover is quoted as having recently said: "We, the United States, have saved the gold standard." Which he evidently thinks is much to our credit, but which is no doubt the greatest obstacle to the restoration of peace, happiness, and prosperity throughout the world.

Were it not for the fact that we designate gold at $20.67 an ounce as our standard of value, it would have no intrinsic value, because it is not indispensable to our metal age and the progress of science and industry, while practically all other metals are. Therefore, they have an intrinsic value, but being mere commodities the price varies the same as with all other commodities in conformity with the inflation and deflation of the purchasing power of the fictitious value of gold.

Unfortunately, humanity is born of tradition and naturally resents substituting or improving upon established customs, even though they are known to be antiquated, crude, and inefficient. Few, if any, such progressive strides have ever been made by any nation except as a result of revolution. Very naturally, the mere suggestion of the adoption of such a change in our monetary system will meet with strong opposition. Not because it could, without trial, be proved to be impractical or illogical, but merely because it would disrupt an established custom and few will give it the consideration it deserves.

The economic, monetary, or currency systems of the leading nations of the world have been devised by and are instituted and maintained under the domination of plutocracy or the money lenders, without due consideration of the great majority who are of necessity the borrowers. As a result we have the present situation which need not be enlarged upon at this time. It is not a result of overproduction or underconsumption. It is the dearth of real money, the lack of more of those indestructible commodities on which the Government has established a fixed relative price, which would prevent credit from expanding to the breaking point.

Our economic system has varied but slightly since the birth of the Nation, while we have made wonderful progress in industrial, commercial, and scientific methods, and it no longer functions satisfactorily. It must be modernized by adopting a monetary system that will harmonize and react in the interest of all by yielding the greatest good to the greatest number, and not under the absolute control of the predatory interests.

With this proposed change in our monetary system other advantageous changes in our economic system will follow as a natural result.

Unfortunately, we cannot rely upon the moral attitude of humanity and expect the trend thereof to result in an equitable distribution of wealth derived from our natural resources and from labor applied thereto.

As much as we may dislike to admit it, wealth is the main objective in human endeavor, and it therefore follows that a fair, sound, and equitable monetary system is the first essential. In justice to our fellow citizens we must institute laws that will regulate, to some extent at least, the supreme law of nature—that of self-preservation of the survival of the fittest—insofar as it applies to humanity.

Should it not be possible to induce one or more of the other leading nations of the world to join with us in the adoption of such a system, we should act independently, for the civilized world would not be long in realizing the practicability, stability, and many other advantages to be derived therefrom.

The money dealers of all time and all ages have fought for a monetary system they could control. Consistently and persistently they have battled every attempt by the people to maintain control of money. There is one memorable occasion in American history.

During the War between the States President Lincoln succeeded in putting out an issue of "greenbacks" or paper money based upon a reserve of gold and the taxing power of the Federal Government. The money dealers ridiculed and scoffed, and by manipulating the gold drove down the value of the paper money to the point where it required $2.85 of greenbacks to buy one standard dollar.

"I have two enemies to fight", said Lincoln, "the rebel in the front and the banker in the rear, and of the two the rebel is the more honorable."

Mr. Lincoln did not refer to the banker in your town or the small town but the money dealers and manipulators in New York, which even then was the money center of the continent. And the same criticism applies today. In the war with depression the international banker and gold monopolist is the least honorable of the enemies which which society has to deal.

The professional money dealers of Lincoln's day did not care whether the United States remained a union or not. Human misery and suffering meant nothing to them. Nor do the want and poverty that stalk through fair America today, "with the children homeless on the continent, their fathers conquered", mean anything to them.

Within the very recent past the lawmakers of this and other countries have had it pointed out to them in no uncertain terms that a change of system is imperatively demanded and that capitalism is doomed. The politicians and would-be statesmen with the one-track minds are still prone to hold back and fight progression. They seem to be of the opinion that the prevailing upheaval is nothing more than a passing cloud; that it will soon be over and we will return to the old system. Well, they are due for a rude awakening, for unless all signs fail we will within the coming year become adherents of a new system. We must have relief from this sorely depressing condition. Either radical legislation that will harmonize our economic and industrial system, or it will be brought about by revolution. We are nearing a crisis, the dawn of a new epoch. Prompt legislative action along these lines will save an overthrow of the existing governmental system with its attending untold suffering. Tradition and conventionalism must for once be ignored.

THE 3-PERCENT TAX ON ELECTRICITY AND THE EARNINGS OF UTILITY COMPANIES

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein some remarks of my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following article written by Congressman HENRY ELLENBOGEN, of Pennsylvania:

Congress has recently passed and President Roosevelt has signed an act which has made a most wholesome and equitable change in the 3-percent tax on the consumption of electricity.

In the spring of 1932, when the need for additional revenues arose, it was suggested in Congress to levy a tax upon electrical energy sold for domestic or commercial consumption equivalent to 3 percent of the price for which the electricity was sold. It was then proposed that this tax should be paid by the electric utility companies and not by the consumers of electric power. Indeed, it was so voted.

Due to pressure brought by the utility companies this was changed. The 3-percent tax was shifted from the electric companies and placed on the consumers. In that form the act was signed by President Hoover on June 6, 1932.

The situation was most unjust. Electric companies were then charging exorbitant prices for electricity and were making excessive and illegal profits. The burden of this tax should have been placed upon the electric companies, who were well able to bear it, and not upon the consumers.

This injustice has now been remedied. The Act of Congress passed in June 1933 provides that after September 1, 1933, the 3-percent tax must be paid by the utility companies producing the electricity, and not by the consumer.

This will mean a saving for every consumer of electricity. The tax of 3 percent, heretofore borne by the consumer and paid out of his pocket, will hereafter be paid by the utility companies out of their swollen profits.

The utility companies have lobbied against this change, claiming that it will necessitate increasing the rates for electricity. This is not true. There will be no need to revise the rates charged for electricity. Even after paying the 3-percent tax on electricity sold by them, the utility companies will still make grossly excessive and illegal profits.

Electricity is a vital necessity. A utility company engaged in the sale of electricity is engaged in a public and not in a private business. It has a monopoly.

If we desire to purchase other commodities, such as clothing, for instance, we can go to any number of stores which compete with each other. It is this competition which fixes the price of commodities at a reasonable level. But when we need electricity we have no choice. We can buy it from one company only, from the company which has been chartered by an agency of the State to furnish electricity in a given territory. In Pittsburgh, for instance, we must buy it from the Duquesne Light Co. To carry this example further, let us remember that when we buy other commodities we can select those which suit our purse, but when we buy electricity we must pay the price charged by the company or else be denied an essential and vital necessity of life.

Utility companies render a service which is not a luxury but a necessity. They have no competition. The consumer has no choice in the matter. For these and other reasons it was early recognized in the law that utilities are engaged in a public and not in a private business, and that therefore they must be regulated in the interest of the public. About 300 years ago, long before our Government was created, in the reign of King James of England, the law relating to utilities was stated by Lord Hale in a few simple lines:

"Every ferry", said Lord Hale, "ought to be under public regulation, to wit, that it give attendance at due time, keep a boat in due order, and take but reasonable toll."

In more modern language, this means that every utility company furnishing light, heat, gas, transportation, or telephone service should be subject to public regulation, so that the public may be assured of adequate and proper service at reasonable and just rates.

The United States Supreme Court, in the case of Milheim v. Moffat Tunnel, etc. (262 U.S. 710), in strong terms and unequivocal language, laid down the rule that utilities, whether owned privately or publicly, are engaged in a public business.

The Court there said that—

"Whether the use of the railroad is a public or a private one depends in no measure upon the question of who constructed it and owned it. No matter who is the agent, the function performed is that of the state. Though the ownership is private, the use is public."

For a long time public utilities were regulated by the legislature. But with the number of utilities increasing, a more scientific, a more direct, and convenient method had to be adopted, and in most States the legislatures delegated their functions to public-service or public-utility commissions. In Pennsylvania this was done in 1913 by the creation of the public-service commission.

The legislature is the representative and the agent of the people. When it delegated its power to regulate and control the utilities to a commission, it was decreed, in effect, that the public-service commission should act as the agent and representative of the people in supervising utilities. The Public Service Commission of Pennsylvania was thus charged with the regulation and control of utilities and it was its duty to see that utility companies should—

1. Give reasonable and adequate service.
2. At reasonable and fair rates.

Instead of doing so, the Public Service Commission of Pennsylvania has permitted utility companies to charge exorbitant rates and to make excessive and illegal profits.

Under the law utilities are only allowed a reasonable profit or rate of return on the fair value of the property owned by them. This rate has been fixed at 7 percent in Pennsylvania. Thus utilities in Pennsylvania are legally allowed to earn 7 percent on their investment, or, to put it more accurately, they are allowed a profit of 7 percent on the fair value of the property used by them.

If the Pennsylvania Public Service Commission had represented the people, it would have forced every utility company which earned more than 7 percent on the fair value of its property to reduce its rates until the income of the utility company was 7 percent. But instead of representing the people the Public Service Commission of Pennsylvania was under the domination and control of the utility companies. Had there been no regulation at all, the profits and earnings of these utility companies could not have been any higher. They charged as much as the traffic would bear.

In 1929 the bureau of accounts examined certain reports rendered by electric companies of Pennsylvania and placed before the Public Service Commission of Pennsylvania figures which showed that these electric companies in that year had earned 9.2 percent instead of 7 percent, and had made an illegal profit in 1 year alone of $21,124,674.

The valuation of the electric companies in Pennsylvania in that year, as shown by their own reports, was $937,928,906.

As already stated, the law allows to utility companies a fair return, which in Pennsylvania has been fixed at 7 percent. In that 1 year we find the following earnings:

Earnings derived from operating income	$86,779,697
Compare this with a 7-percent return on the valuation of $937,928,906, shown above, which would be	65,655,023
This shows an excessive or illegal profit made by electric companies of Pennsylvania in that one year of	21,124,674

We must keep in mind that these valuation and earning figures were taken from the reports of the utility companies themselves and were not rendered by impartial experts. These figures included known "write-ups" amounting to $80,273,136.

A "write-up" is an amazing thing. It can best be explained by an example. Suppose a utility company builds a plant for the generation of electric power at an expenditure of $10,000,000. Ten years later the utility company changes its books so that the value of that plant is raised from $10,000,000 to $15,000,000. This is what is known as a "write-up" of $5,000,000.

The practice of "write-ups" is frequently used by utility companies to hide excessive earnings. It is also known as "watered stock."

These write-ups were never justified and are certainly not justified today, in view of the tremendous decrease in the prices of raw materials and real-estate values.

When these write-ups of $80,273,136 are deducted the rate of return in that year for electric companies in Pennsylvania amounts to 10.11 percent instead of 7 percent, and the illegal profit is $26,743,793.

Thus in that 1 year alone electric utility companies in Pennsylvania made illegal profits of at least $26,743,793, which is equivalent to a 7-percent return on an investment of $382,054,186. This, in turn, represents 45 percent of the valuation fixed by the electric companies themselves less known write-ups. In plain language, it means that in that one year the electric companies of Pennsylvania, by their own admission, overcharged the people of Pennsylvania $26,743,793, and thereby reaped a 7-percent return on a nonexistent, fictitious investment of $382,000,000.

If the true valuation of the utilities would be considered, instead of the figures given by the companies themselves, the excessive or illegal return would be even much higher.

Let us consider just one more example—the Duquesne Light Co., of Pittsburgh. During the years for which I have collected the figures the Duquesne Light Co. made the following profit in excess of a fair return of 7 percent:

	Excess
1925	$3,219,381.57
1926	3,687,225.54
1927	3,327,032.22
1928	5,250,000.00
1929	5,810,159.00
1930	5,678,397.00
1931	6,103,559.00
Total excessive profit for 7 years	33,075,754.83

For the years 1928 to 1931 I have excluded a write-up made in 1928 by the Duquesne Light Co. of $14,500,000.

If this write-up is disallowed, the Duquesne Light Co. in a 7-year period from 1925 to 1931 made excessive profits of about $33,000,000.

If the write-up of $14,500,000 is allowed (which should not be done), the excessive profits amount to—

	Excess
1925	$3,219,381.57
1926	3,687,225.54
1927	3,327,032.22
1928	4,000,000.00
1929	4,667,884.00
1930	4,532,214.00
1931	4,945,278.00
Total excessive profit	28,379,015.33

This is an astounding revelation.

If we consider the years of 1930 and 1931 alone, 2 years of adversity and depression, 2 years of misery and starvation for millions of our people, we find that in those 2 years the Duquesne Light Co. made excessive profits of nearly $12,000,000.

It is now known that the Duquesne Light Co. keeps two sets of books containing the valuation of its property. One for rate-making purposes, which shows a valuation of $152,000,000 for its property, and another set of books for tax-paying purposes, wherein its property is valued at only $112,000,000. This is a difference of $40,000,000 on which a legal return of 7 percent amounts to nearly $3,000,000 every year.

It is stated by competent authorities that the excessive or illegal profits in the United States of electric companies alone—not considering gas, transportation, and other utility companies—are at least $500,000,000 every year.

It has been justly said that the overcharges by utility companies constitute the greatest racket in America. Incomplete investigations, conducted by the Federal Trade Commission, show "write-ups" or "water" far in excess of $520,000,000.

On this amount the people of Pennsylvania and of the United States must pay a profit not for a day, not for a year, but, unless some change is made, we and our descendants must pay a profit forever.

When we consider these figures of excessive and exorbitant profits, it becomes quite clear that the 3-percent tax now placed on the utility companies instead of on the consumers will not affect the fair earnings to which utilities are entitled, but will only slightly reduce the illegal earnings which these electric companies have been making.

The shifting of the 3-percent tax from the back of the consumer to the utilities was an act of justice and equity.

This Act of Congress marks only a beginning. The rates for electricity, gas, water, transportation, and telephone must be lowered. The swollen profits of the utility companies must be reduced to a fair figure. The time has come when the consumer must be given a new deal, a square deal.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on what are known as "the four Mapes bills", prepared by our colleague from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], and the fiscal affairs relating to the District and the Government and to incorporate some excerpts therein.

Mr. HOLMES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, of course, has permission to extend his own remarks, but not the extracts referred to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have a report that goes back to the time of the Ben Johnson report, which is very enlightening on the affairs of the District, and it backs up the hard work that was done by our colleague from Michigan [Mr. MAPES]. I was asked to make this report, and does anyone object to my putting in these extracts?

The regular order was demanded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMES. I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Then I will later on print my report without the excerpts, to which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES] objects. But at this time I will avail myself of the privilege granted Members to extend, by calling attention to the nature of my report on fiscal affairs that I will print in the RECORD within the next few days, and earnestly request my colleagues to watch for this report and read it.

In the Seventy-first Congress there was passed House Resolution 285 which directed the Speaker to appoint a select committee, designated as "The Select Committee on Fiscal Relations between the United States and the District of Columbia." The Speaker appointed on this committee our colleagues and former colleagues, Carl E. Mapes, of Michigan, chairman; William P. Holiday, of Illinois; E. M. Beers, of Pennsylvania; Edwin L. Davis, of Tennessee; Ross A. Collins, of Mississippi; and Wright Patman, of Texas, and James A. Frear, of Wisconsin.

This committee was directed by said Resolution 285 to investigate the various elements, factors, and conditions which were deemed pertinent and essential to the accumulation of data and information bearing upon the question of said fiscal relations and to recommend what amount the United States should contribute annually toward the development and maintenance of the municipality of the District of Columbia. This committee was also directed to investigate fully the various forms of municipal taxation and sources of revenue and to recommend to Congress new forms and sources, as were just and fair, and was given specific authority to report bills, carrying out the purposes of such resolution.

This special select committee, presided over by our able and dependable friend from Michigan [Mr. MAPES], began holding public hearings on December 3, 1930, and its printed hearings show that it went into the subject carefully, scientifically, fairly, exhaustively, and justly to all concerned. More than a year was consumed by said committee in its careful and deliberate study of the problems before it. Never before in the history of Congress had there been such a far-reaching, exhaustive investigation of the subject. On December 15, 1931, this select committee, through its said chairman [Mr. MAPES], filed its report, unanimously agreed to and signed by all members of the committee, except that Mr. FREAR filed a separate report far more drastic than that of the others, which is report no. 1, first session Seventy-second Congress; and it would be worth his while for our friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOLMES], who objected to my filing valuable excerpts with the report I am going to make, to read this Mapes report of 55 printed pages in its entirety, because he has prevented me from quoting any excerpts from it. It is quite an interesting fact to be remembered that Boston is the only city in the United States that receives any contribution from the State because of State property used for State public institutions, Boston receiving from the State of Massachusetts the sum of $32,950 annually.

This Mapes committee showed that there is no inheritance tax or estate tax imposed in the District of Columbia, and it introduced and passed in the House a bill to levy a small estate tax here, but the bill has died in the Senate.

This Mapes committee showed that there is no income tax imposed in the District of Columbia, so it introduced and passed in the House a bill imposing a small income tax here, but this bill also died in the Senate.

The Mapes committee showed that for the past 10 years the tax on gasoline in the District of Columbia was only 2 cents per gallon, while in Virginia the tax is 5 cents on the gallon and in Tennessee the tax is 7 cents on the gallon, so it introduced and passed in the House a bill to impose an additional 1 cent per gallon tax on gasoline, and this bill died in the Senate.

The Mapes committee showed that in the District of Columbia there is a flat rate of $1 registration fee on all automobiles, whether Fords or Pierce Arrows, while in the States citizens have to pay a registration fee of many times the $1 paid in Washington, hence the committee introduced and passed in the House a bill to impose a registration fee on automobiles here in Washington comparable to the lowest fee charged in any of the 48 States, but this bill also died in the Senate.

The Mapes committee showed that the tax rate in the District of Columbia was only $1.70 on the $100, on real and personal property, with an exemption of $1,000 allowed on household furniture, and a rate on intangible property of only 50 cents on the $1,000. While in the city of Boston, Mass., the tax rate was $2.92 on the $100 and that the citizens of Milwaukee, a city comparable in size to Washington, pay 70 percent more taxes than do the people of Washington.

And this next year the tax rate in the city of Washington, D.C. will be only $1.50 on the $100.

The finest water in the world, largely paid for originally by the United States, is furnished here to the people of Washington at a cost of only $8.75 per year to the average family.

At a great cost to the United States Government, Washington enjoys over 1,200 fine parks, counting large and small.

Half of the cost of the Million Dollar Bridge on Connecticut Avenue, the Tiger Bridge, and the many other fine bridges in Washington was paid for by the United States Government. And all of the expense of the $2,500,000 Francis Scott Key Bridge and the $14,000,000 Memorial Bridge spanning the Potomac was paid for by the United States Government.

The United States pays all of the expense of maintaining Howard University, St. Elizabeths and several other fine hospitals here, the Deaf and Dumb Institution, Zoo Park, the United States Park Police force, the White House Police force, the Capitol Police force, the Senate and House Office Police force, and many other civic forces in the District of Columbia.

Yet this Mapes committee showed in its report that the District of Columbia was receiving annually from the Government of the United States a contribution of $9,500,000 in cash toward paying its yearly civic expenses.

In the bill we succeeded in getting passed by Congress the other day we have cut this contribution down for the coming fiscal year to $5,700,000.

The above are just a few of the many, many subjects that I will discuss in detail in the report that I will print in the RECORD shortly. I will show what the District of Columbia received from the Federal Government before the time of Ben Johnson. I will show what it received during the time Ben Johnson was Chairman of the District Committee. I will show what it has received during the many years that have followed the days of Ben Johnson's service. I will show that the citizens of Washington, D.C., have been blessed by living in the Nation's Capital, close to the hearts of Congressmen and Senators, as no other people have ever been blessed before in the entire history of the world. Just why the gentleman from Massachusetts should deny me the privilege of incorporating in my report valuable excerpts from many historical authentic documents that throw great light on the subject I cannot understand. Possibly, when he reflects, he will want this report of mine to be full and complete, and he will withdraw his objection in time for me to incorporate such excerpts in my report. I hope that all of my colleagues will take the time to read it, when it is printed in the RECORD.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, many Members of this House, like myself, have introduced bills which I believe, if enacted into law, would go far toward solving the economic problems of the citizens of the United States.

I introduced a banking bill guaranteeing all deposits placed in banks. In today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD there are about 100 names of Congressmen who maintained they would not agree to an adjournment of Congress unless a banking bill would be passed which would guarantee the safety of money placed in the banks by the citizens. I notice my name was not on that list. I would have willingly signed a petition had my attention been called to it. Congressmen MULDOWNEY, KELLY, and BROOKS, all from Pittsburgh, Pa., would have willingly signed the petition. In fact, I would be willing to stay here until St. Patrick's Day in 1940, if necessary, to have enacted into law bills which would benefit the people of our Government. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and insert some extracts from the hearings before the Judiciary Committee on the abuses in exchange manipulation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRITTEN. Reserving the right to object, how many pages of the hearings?

Mr. SABATH. Oh, about 4 or 5.

Mr. BRITTEN. There are many pages taken up in the RECORD of hearings that have already been printed at Government expense and for no purpose whatever.

Mr. SABATH. This is a matter that the country is much interested in.

Mr. BRITTEN. I object.

THE "NEW DEAL" FOR WORLD WAR AND SPANISH-AMERICAN VETERANS IS NOT A SQUARE DEAL

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include some telegrams, also an extract from a newspaper relative to one soldier's case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my voice to that of those who have spoken with regard to the cruel injustices in the administration of the Economy Act, both to the World War veterans and to the Spanish-American volunteers. I do not believe the President knows the degree to which the action of his Budget Director has deprived tens of thousands of these Spanish-American soldiers, who are too old and disabled to work, of the last vestige of support in their declining years. I am sure if the President fully realized this injustice he would not object to the provisions of the Steiwer amendment.

I would be the last to censure the President or make his task any more difficult than it is. In recent years I have seen all too much of that indecent partisan rancor that hurled its venom at a President just as conscientious and sincere as any President that ever occupied the White House.

It has been said: "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown." But not any more uneasy than the one that is pillowed in the White House. That "fierce light that beats upon a throne" is not more fierce than that which flames about the Presidential chair. Upon the gates of the White House should be carved as upon the portals of Dante's Inferno: "All hope abandon ye who enter here." Here the price outweighs the prize. Only a giant can endure its corroding, wasting force. It saps the life like a vampire and like a vampire mocks.

I have been more or less familiar with the last six Presidents. I met each before he was President and during their respective terms, and saw all of them after their tenure of office except President Harding, who died in office. All of them schriveled under its merciless glare like grass before a sirocco. It crushes like a juggernaut and always will.

We thought the serene and unruffled equanimity of President Coolidge would be proof against the corrosion of this devastating experience, but we know now that under that calm and seemingly imperturbable temperament the unrelenting grind and the pitiless and persistent curiosity of the public reduced even the granite resistence of this stoic-souled Puritan, and shortened his years.

The deadly assault upon the then President-elect at Miami was just another reminder that the President is always aware that he may at any moment become the target of the fury of some maniac, so that more and more he is hedged about by secret-service men and deprived of any real privacy by reason of which he becomes a prisoner of public solicitude.

Hence, to all the overwhelming responsibility and everlasting anxiety inseparable from this high office, I would be the last to add to its perplexity by undue criticism; but I feel I must call to the attention of the President, as well as to the country, the pathetic results of the administration of the Economy Act, particularly as applied to the Spanish-American soldiers. It is our last Volunteer Army and deserves a better fate. With the permission granted by the House, I include a newspaper quotation, the like of which is appearing in the press all too often these days:

A MISSOURI VETERAN A SUICIDE

AURORA, Mo., May 31.—The body of Elmer M. Case, 54, Spanish-American War veteran, was found this afternoon by his son, Folda, in his home in Mount Vernon. J. Finis King, coroner, attributed death to suicide. Friends say Case had lost his job in the Bureau of Printing and Engraving in Washington and that his pension had been cut recently.

With the permission granted by the House, I am including the following telegrams from veterans' organizations received by me appealing for support of the Connally amendment:

OTTAWA, KANS., June 7, 1933.

Boltwood Camp No. 40, U.S.W.V., urge you to support Connally amendment to independent offices appropriation bill.

C. E. STEELE, Commander.

OTTAWA, KANS., June 7, 1933.

Boltwood Auxiliary No. 23 urge you to support Connally amendment to independent offices appropriation bill.

MRS. ETTA DEWALD, Secretary.

PAOLA, KANS., June 6, 1933.

A. V. Ricketts Camp, U.S.W.V., Paola, Kans., as a whole, urge acceptance by House of Connally amendment to independent offices appropriation bill.

IRA N. BRYAN, Commander.

PAOLA, KANS., June 6, 1933.

Auxiliary No. 24, A. V. Ricketts Camp, U.S.W.V., Paola, Kans., as a whole, urge acceptance by House of Connally amendment to independent offices appropriation bill.

MINNIE M. BRYAN, Auxiliary President.

KANSAS CITY, KANS., June 6, 1933.

Members of Malolos Camp No. 6, U.S.W.V., are pleading with you to support Connally amendment to independent offices appropriation which limits cut in pension of any Spanish War veteran or widow to 25 percent.

AEBERT LEWIS, Commander.

KANSAS CITY, KANS., June 6, 1933.

Members and friends of Malolas Auxiliary, no. 16, are urging you to support Connally amendment to independent offices appropriation bill, which limits cut in pensions to Spanish War widows or veterans to 25 percent.

LIZZIE RAINE, President.

FORT SCOTT, KANS., June 6, 1933.

Forty members of camp urge your support of Connally amendment, independent offices bill, limiting cut in Spanish War veterans' and widows' pensions to 25 percent.

CHARLES P. WARNER,
Commander Howard Olds Camp, No. 26, U.S.W.V.

LAWRENCE, KANS., June 6, 1933.

Joseph A. Wahl Camp and Auxiliary urge you to support Connally amendment to independent offices appropriation bill, which limits cut in pension of any Spanish War veterans or widows to 25 percent.

C. J. WINTER, Commander.

KANSAS CITY, KANS., June 7, 1933.

Respectfully request your support of Connally amendment, independent offices bill.

MRS. RUTH WADDELL.

TOPEKA, KANS., June 7, 1933.

Sincerely urge your support of Connally amendment despite administration action. In no other way can we secure adequate relief for disabled.

RED RYAN,
Adjutant, Department of Kansas, American Legion.

FREDONIA, KANS., June 6, 1933.

Urge you to work and vote for acceptance Connally amendment.

F. A. HOUX,
Commander, Department of Kansas, U.S.W.V.

These telegrams were not dictated by selfish motives. These veterans are willing to bear their share of the burden of balancing the Budget and of national recovery, but they know that their comrades by the tens of thousands will suffer bitterly if the regulations adopted by the President stand. Thousands of these men have purchased homes and have depended upon the monthly pension to take care of the payments on the home. Then this calamity came upon them, and with it at this time of unemployment many have lost their jobs. Taken altogether, it comprises the most pathetic situation that ever confronted a group of veterans in the history of this country. This Congress should not adjourn until this wrong is righted. This fine volunteer army should not be left exposed to poverty and thus become the object of charity.

The care of the indigent and destitute is a tax on the community. To make these gallant soldiers the beneficiaries of charity is an overwhelming humiliation. This Nation cannot afford to inflict such a rank injustice upon its benefactors in their time of need. A fair and just pension would enable these veterans to retain their pride and self-respect as a reward for honorable service in time of war.

The regulations do not take into account the fact that Army records are incomplete, which makes it an impossibility to establish service connection, and after over a third of a century it is likewise impossible to secure lay evidence to supplement the meager official records. This works a great injustice upon many thousands of men whose records are genuine but who lack the proper evidence to establish their right to benefits which they so sorely need just at this time.

In the early days of this session of Congress I introduced H.R. 5077, which provided for about 50 percent of the old Spanish War pension rates, in the hope of reestablishing the principle of a service pension, thinking that the rates could be increased by amendments in passage, or if not that, then when our financial skies were fairer the rates could be raised. The multiplicity of legislation and the opposition of the executive department to such liberalization has prevented its consideration on the floor this session. Next session I shall introduce a still more liberal bill in the hope that justice will be done.

If this Congress will do justice to these men who gallantly defended their country where the hell of battle plunged, it can return home with more pride for this simple act of justice than for all our far-flung legislative experiments.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the House of the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H.R. 5755. An act to encourage national industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 5790. An act to provide for organizations within the Farm Credit Administration to make loans for the production and marketing of agricultural products, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, to provide a market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 1425. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide relief in the existing national emergency in banking, and for other purposes", approved March 9, 1933;

S. 1580. An act to relieve the existing national emergency in relation to interstate railroad transportation, and to amend sections 5, 15a, and 19a of the Interstate Commerce Act, as amended; and

S. 1648. An act to amend the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act, as amended, to provide for loans to closed building-and-loan associations.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President for his approval a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 5790. An act to provide for organizations within the Farm Credit Administration to make loans for the production and marketing of agricultural products, to amend the Federal Farm Loan Act, to amend the Agricultural Marketing Act, to provide a market for obligations of the United States, and for other purposes.

RECESS

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House stand in recess subject to the call of the Speaker.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put can we have some statement as to the probable hour that the House will meet again?

The SPEAKER. The House will not be called to order again before 8 o'clock, and there will be 15 minutes' notice by bell.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 43 minutes p.m.) the House stood in recess at the call of the Speaker.

AFTER THE RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker at 8:15 o'clock p.m.

AMENDING THE CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the bill (H.R. 5091) to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report. Is there objection? Without objection, the Clerk will read the statement in lieu of the report.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

CONFERENCE REPORT

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5091) to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2 and 3.

Amendment numbered 1: That the House recede from its disagrement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert "June 1, 1933, and remaining in force at the time of the doing or omitting the doing of such act or thing"; and on page 2 of the House bill, line 4, strike out all after the word "punishment", through the word "District" in line 8; and the Senate agree to the same.

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
J. BANKS KURTZ,
Managers on the part of the House.

WILLIAM H. KING,
H. D. STEPHENS,
WM. E. BORAH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 5091) to amend section 289 of the Criminal Code, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House bill made the commission of any act or the omission to do any act, not made penal by any laws of Congress, upon any land under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, punishable under State, Territorial, or District law making such act penal in the State, Territory, or District in which such lands are situated, provided such law was in force on January 1, 1933; and for such purposes continued such State, Territorial, or District laws in force notwithstanding any subsequent repeal or amendment thereof by the State, Territory, or District. Senate amendment no. 1 provides that the State, Territorial, or District law must be in force "at the time of the doing of such act or thing"; and amendments nos. 2 and 3 provide that for the purposes of the Federal law the State, Territorial, or District law shall continue in force notwithstanding the repeal or amendment thereof "subsequent to the doing of such act." The Senate recedes on amendments with nos. 2 and 3, and the House recedes on amendment no. 1 with an amendment, the effect of which is to make the act or omission punishable by the law in force "on June 1, 1933, and remaining in force at the time of the doing or omitting the doing of such act or thing."

HATTON W. SUMNERS,
TOM D. MCKEOWN,
J. BANKS KURTZ,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question upon the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following concurrent resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H.R. 5755) to encourage national-industrial recovery, to foster fair competition, and to provide for the construction of certain useful public works, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized to make the following necessary change:

In section 202 strike out the word "therefor" and insert in lieu thereof the words "by the Navy."

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, this proposed concurrent resolution is introduced for the purpose of clarifying the language and the meaning of a certain part of the so-called "industrial recovery and public works bill." Two amendments were inserted in that bill by the Senate, known as "amendments 49 and 50." Amendment 49 was deleted by the conferees of the House and the Senate and amendment 50 was changed. Some discussion was had of these amendments in the Senate yesterday, but there seems to be some ambiguity as to whether the bill in its present form and language permits the building of lighter-than-air ships.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. Yes.

Mr. RAGON. Just what does the resolution seek to do?

Mr. HARTER. In view of the fact that the joint committee appointed by the Congress to investigate the loss of the U.S.S. Akron and the utility of airships in general, is about to file its report deciding that airships do have utility in naval operations and recommending the building of further airships for the Navy, I feel this concurrent resolution should be adopted, because it purposes to put the bill in such shape that the President will be authorized under the terms of the Industrial Recovery Act to apportion money for the building of lighter-than-air ships as well as surface ships.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, permit me to say to the gentleman from Ohio that the conferees cut this out for the simple reason that they had in mind that it was covered under another provision of the bill. Secretary Swanson first sent that amendment up to the House Ways and Means Committee, and I think I introduced the amendment myself. The amendment was defeated by the committee upon the ground of the advice given to us there by the proponents of the bill, to the effect that the proposition of the construction of airships was covered by another feature of the bill. That amendment which I introduced for Senator Swanson was defeated. The bill went to the Senate. The amendment was put in there. In conference we had constantly with us General Johnson and were in constant communication with him as to the effect of the different phases of the bill. Finally the conferees decided to cut that out, and I call the gentleman's attention to the language on page 19, beginning on line 2, which reads as follows:

Construction, repair, and improvement of public highways and parkways, public buildings (including the remodeling of buildings hereby authorized to be purchased for Federal purposes), and any publicly owned instrumentalities and facilities.

It was the general consensus of opinion of the conferees that that language covered everything from a martin box to a dreadnaught if it was publicly owned or was a public instrumentality or was a public facility. We thought at the time it would be just cluttering up the bill by inserting those things. There is an old rule of law that whenever you specify you are liable to eliminate. I do not quote it with exactness, but that is what it means. So we avoided, as much as possible, both in the Committee on Ways and Means and in the committee of conference, specifying anything, because we felt that when we specified we put a limitation that might shut off something else. We are leaving it to the discretion of the President of the United States to spend this money for the construction of publicly owned facilities and everything else, and I think that covers the matter. I think it covers the point the gentleman has in mind. That point was discussed at length by the conferees, and after we had discussed it and counseled with our advisers, we decided to eliminate it and let the entire bill rest upon the part I have just read, commencing in line 2, page 19. I do not think you will find half a dozen exceptions in the entire bill to that phrase in the bill.

Mr. HARTER. I thank the gentleman. In referring to the proponents of the bill, does the gentleman refer to the administration?

Mr. RAGON. Yes; those who were in that committee and in the conference.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. I yield.

Mr. McCLINTIC. If I understood the gentleman correctly, he made the statement that a special committee had decided we should build airships in the future, comparable with the Akron which has just been destroyed. Even if the committee did make any such report as that, it does not in any way bind this House. Furthermore, the country knows that two members of the committee of this House were members of the Military Affairs Committee and two were members of the Naval Affairs Committee, and that the country is not going to take the views of that kind of a committee as being the views of the taxpayers of this country, and until this subject is gone into in a manner where everybody can be heard, I dare say there will not be any appropriation or authorization for a ship of that size or type in the future.

Mr. DELANEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTER. I yield.

Mr. DELANEY. The committee, composed of 5 Senators and 5 Congressmen, has been investigating this subject now for 3 weeks, and they have finally come to a conclusion. Eight members have signed this report. Senator JOHNSON has not signed, because he was not at the meeting, and Senator KING may file a minority report; but eight members of this committee have decided that we shall continue building this type of ship.

Mr. McCLINTIC. That does not in any way bind the Congress.

Mr. DELANEY. I do not say that it does.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Then the statement that the committee has favorably recommended the construction of this ship is erroneous. Nearly everybody knows that a ship 800 feet long is so large that when it flies into air currents it is liable to have one end pushed up and the other end pushed down, and it is liable to have the same kind of disaster as was had with this ship. I dare say I have been in as many windstorms as any man on this floor.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The House does not know that. The committee has been trying to find that out, and until the committee reports we do not know whether that is true. So when the gentleman says everybody knows, the House of Representatives does not know whether a ship 800 feet long or a ship 600 feet long comes under that circumstance.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The gentleman cut me off before I completed my statement. I want to finish the statement I was making. I have been in probably as many windstorms as any Member on this floor. I have seen half of a room jerked right out of the house and the balance left intact. I have seen every kind of freak that one can think of as a result of a windstorm, and when you build ships of this size you can expect the same thing to happen which took place a few months ago with respect to the Akron.

Mr. DELANEY. The gentleman will agree that those ships are now in the experimental stage. We were endeavoring to find out whether they will be practicable or not. In 3 weeks' time we had witnesses from all over the country. We invited everybody there, and at the end we came to the decision that we should build these ships because they were practical and a fine defense for our country in time of war.

Mr. McCLINTIC. I understand the ship broke in two where it was damaged before.

Mr. DELANEY. No. The evidence is just to the contrary.

Mr. McCLINTIC. The evidence has not been brought here yet, and of course nobody knows what took place, anyhow, we know that England and many other nations have abandoned dirigibles. In fact, new ships were taken out and destroyed in order to prevent disasters in the future similar to the one that happened to the Akron. I will not be surprised to learn that the Macon goes to pieces the first time it ever runs into a storm, as it is too long and its frail superstructure cannot combat a storm condition. Therefore, the taxpayers' money should not be wasted in the future in order to help certain companies that want to secure contracts from the Government.

Mr. DELANEY. The evidence shows the ship was making 60 miles an hour and there was a 40-mile wind behind it.

Mr. RAGON. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. HARTER. I yield.

Mr. RAGON. Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that this bill will go to the President tomorrow afternoon for his signature. I do not know that this resolution could affect in any way the progress of that bill. I cannot see, not being sufficiently grounded in parliamentary procedure here, how this can affect it. I understand Senator REED also made a statement along the line that I have made here, and in view of this statement I hope that my friend will do nothing to impede the progress of that bill, because I am as sure as I am standing here that it is now sufficiently covered under the law as it passed both the House and the Senate. I have been advised that the bill has even been signed by the Speaker and has been transmitted.

Mr. HARTER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement which the gentleman has just made, I will withdraw the concurrent resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio withdraws the House concurrent resolution.

PAYMENT TO SEMINOLE INDIANS IN OKLAHOMA

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 554) providing for per capita payments to the Seminole Indians in Oklahoma from funds standing to their credit in the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the Senate bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to the enrolled members of the Seminole Tribe of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of said tribe, or to their lawful heirs, out of any money belonging to said tribe in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by an official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed $35 per capita: Provided, That said payment shall be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided further, That the money paid to the enrolled members or their heirs as provided herein shall be exempt from any lien for attorneys' fees or other debt contracted prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to use not to exceed $2,000 out of said Seminole tribal funds for the payment of salaries of necessary employees and other expenses for the distribution of said per capita payments.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, the RECORD of June 6, roll calls 56 and 57, showed that I was not present and did not vote. The RECORD is accurate, but upon that occasion I was not idling. As a member of the special Veterans' Committee, I was in conference with the President at the time those roll calls were taken. I want the RECORD to show this fact.

TERMS OF DISTRICT COURT OF CONNECTICUT

Mr. CONDON. Mr. Speaker, I call up Senate bill 1650, amending section 74 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U.S.C., Annotated, title 28, sec. 147), and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, we cannot tell from the title what this bill is. I ask that the bill be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of Connecticut shall constitute one judicial district to be known as the "district of Connecticut." Terms of the district court shall be held at New Haven on the second Tuesday in February and the third Tuesday in September; at Hartford on the second Tuesday in May and the first Tuesday in December; at Norwalk on the third Tuesday in April; and at Columbia on the first Tuesday in September: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations shall be furnished for the holdings of said court and for the use of the officers of said court at Norwalk and Columbia free of expense to the Government of the United States.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if this bill has been reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. CONDON. No; this bill has not been reported by the Judiciary Committee, but the chairman of that committee has directed me to ask that this bill be called up in this manner.

The only change made in existing law is the provision for an additional sitting of the court at Columbia, and this is desired by the district judge there and also the bar of the district of Connecticut. It will be a great convenience both to litigants and practitioners before that court and will be no expense whatever to the Treasury.

Mr. SNELL. I know nothing about this bill, of course. I do not want to object, but I think it is poor policy to bring up bills that have not had consideration by a committee of the House.

Mr. CONDON. I may say to the gentleman that it is the practice in the Judiciary Committee to report out these bills when there is no objection on the part of the people in the district and when there is approval by the district judge and it is desired by the bar.

Mr. SNELL. The gentleman means the Judiciary Committee reports them out without any hearing?

Mr. CONDON. Without objection they are reported out with scarcely any more consideration than that.

Mr. SNELL. There is no rule of the House that allows them to do any such thing, I may inform the gentleman.

Mr. CONDON. We have been reporting out bills of this character regularly in this manner.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONDON. I yield.

Mr. GOSS. This is a Senate bill the gentleman has called up.

Mr. SNELL. That does not make any difference. It is supposed to receive consideration by a committee of the House; in this instance, the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GOSS. I understand that; but the Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary is in favor of the bill.

Mr. SNELL. That does not clear the situation.

Mr. GOSS. Possibly not, but had they an opportunity to meet and consider it they would report it out. There is no controversy over the bill.

Mr. SNELL. No doubt the gentleman's statement is correct, but I think it is poor policy to call up bills that have not been regularly reported by the committee and placed on the calendar. That is the general procedure.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman probably is not entirely correct in making his statement that holding court at an additional place could not cause any additional expense to the United States.

Mr. CONDON. I did not say that.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood the gentleman to say that this change "will be no expense whatever to the Treasury."

Mr. CONDON. I said I am informed in this particular instance it will not mean any additional expense to the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. That is what I want to ask the gentleman about.

Mr. CONDON. That is the general advice the Committee on the Judiciary has received, that it will not cost the Government anything.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to know whether or not the court room, witness rooms, marshal's office, jury rooms, and judge's office, which are necessary for holding court, and the other needed court facilities, will be furnished free to the Government at this particular place where there is to be held this extra session of the court.

Mr. CONDON. That is the information the Senate received and it is so stated in the bill.

Mr. GOSS. Absolutely.

Mr. BLANTON. And the Government will not have to pay for the rental of quarters and things of that kind?

Mr. CONDON. No; nothing of that kind according to our information.

Mr. BLANTON. Then, as one Member, I have no objection.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did I understand the gentleman to say that the only change made in existing law is to provide one additional place for holding court?

Mr. CONDON. Yes; for holding court at Columbia. That is the only change in existing law.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever, and I think this is a very proper way to bring this up, as the committee has not had an opportunity to sit and consider the bill. But it seems to me that finally there should be a real revision of the law with reference to the places for holding courts. There are a great many places where courts are now held at great expense to the Government which could be done away with. Court could be held in only a few places instead of the great number that are now distributed over the country. We would save many thousands—yes, many hundreds of thousands of dollars through the elimination of many of these places.

However, I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut, and I think this bill is a proper one under the circumstances.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman permit me to make one observation?

Mr. CONDON. Certainly.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I do not think any minor departures from the accepted rules of the House by any committee are nearly as serious as departures from the rules and the customs of our legislative bodies by conference committees which throw overboard the long service in committee and in the House in the amendment and debate of measures and then bring in measures which forbid us the opportunity of considering and debating upon drastic proposals changing the entire tenor of any matter that we have before us.

I believe the gentleman is justified in departing technically from the rules of the House and in bringing in a measure which would have the entire and absolute approval of every member of the committee.

As these conference reports are brought in here, we should have the right to vote upon the drastic changes that are made affecting the final terms of the measures that have gone through the committees and through the House and have been amended and passed by the Senate and then have gone to conference, and then we find to our sorrow that drastic changes have been made——

Mr. DINGELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KVALE. I wish the gentleman would permit me to finish my sentence, and then I shall yield.

The regular order was demanded.

Mr. DINGELL. I should like to know what this has to do with holding Federal court in Connecticut.

Mr. KVALE. I thank the gentleman from Michigan for his observation, and I will yield to the demand for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHIP ISLAND MILITARY RESERVATION IN THE STATE OF MISSISSIPPI

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1813) providing for the sale to Joe Graham Post, No. 119, American Legion, of the lands lying within the Ship Island Military Reservation in the State of Mississippi.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, we want to know what is in the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of the act entitled "An act transferring a portion of the lighthouse reservation, Ship Island, Miss., to the jurisdiction and control of the War Department", approved March 4, 1929, the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to Joe Graham Post, No. 119, of the American Legion, Inc., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Mississippi, all the lands lying within the Ship Island Military Reservation in such State, in consideration of the payment to the United States by such corporation of $15,000; but payment of such sum may be made in equal annual installments over a period of 10 years from the date of such conveyance with interest on such deferred payments at the rate of 5 percent per annum, all interest due to be paid annually. All sums paid to the United States for such land shall be covered into the Treasury to the credit of the military post construction fund. It shall be made a condition of the deed of conveyance herein provided for (1) that the lands so conveyed shall be maintained by such corporation as a national recreational park, (2) that such corporation shall erect and maintain on such lands a suitable monument or other memorial to the veterans of the World War, and (3) that such corporation shall set aside such parcel of land, not exceeding 1 acre in area, within such lands as may be selected by the United Daughters of the Confederacy for the sole use of that organization for the erection and maintenance of a memorial to veterans of the Civil War. If the corporation fails to use such lands for the purposes herein provided or violates any of the conditions of the deed of conveyance or attempts to alienate such lands, title thereto shall revert to the United States.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to ask if this measure has had the approval of the Lighthouse Department.

Mr. COLMER. It has the approval of the War Department.

Mr. PARKER of New York. The War Department has not control of it, has it?

Mr. COLMER. I will explain to the gentleman further that this portion of the reservation which is proposed to be conveyed to this American Legion post is not the portion reserved for the Lighthouse Service.

Mr. PARKER of New York. In other words, the gentleman states that no land controlled by the Lighthouse Service is involved here?

Mr. COLMER. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, merely to make a suggestion. Why not amend the bill and grant, without any charge whatever, an easement to the American Legion, allowing it to use this land until such time as the Government may want to use it? What is the reason for charging the American Legion for using it when the Government does not need it? Why not simply grant them an easement?

Mr. COLMER. I will say to the gentleman that $15,000 is more than the land is worth, to begin with——

Mr. BLANTON. Then why charge them more than it is worth? I am with the gentleman.

Mr. COLMER. They are willing to pay it, and I am sure the gentleman from Texas would not object to anything that the American Legion posts of Mississippi want.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not in favor of charging any ex-service men or any American Legion post anything for anything the Government has that it does not need, and if the United States Government does not need this land, say, for the next 100 years, I am in favor of granting them the free use of it for such period of time as the Government does not need it.

Mr. COLMER. If I understand the gentleman correctly he is in favor of giving something to these American Legion boys?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. COLMER. These boys have agreed that this is what they want, now is the gentleman from Texas going to object to it?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I am not. I am for them. They have earned such consideration from the Government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE FRENCH BROAD RIVER

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1872) to extend the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the French Broad River on the proposed Morristown-Newport road between Jefferson and Cocke Counties, Tenn., which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I inquire if this is a toll bridge?

Mr. BYRNS. I do not think it is, but I could not answer the question definitely. It is over in the districts of Mr. TAYLOR and Mr. REECE in east Tennessee. The measure has been passed by the Senate and I have been requested to call it up. I have no personal information about it, but I do know that in order to complete this highway it is necessary to have this bridge.

Mr. DOWELL. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge across the French Broad River on the proposed Morristown-Newport road between Jefferson and Cocke Counties, Tenn., authorized to be built by the Highway Department of the State of Tennessee, by an act of Congress approved February 6, 1931, are hereby extended 1 and 3 years, respectively, from February 6, 1933.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. KNUTSON. Reserving the right to object, upon what subject?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I want to make some observations on some remarks made by the president of Howard University.

Mr. KNUTSON. Are they critical or otherwise?

Mr. BULWINKLE. If the gentleman will not say they are correct at this time I will not put them in the RECORD.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the gentleman going to approve of them?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I think the gentleman will not ask me to go that far before I address the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], although he has been here for some years, is not the censor of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BULWINKLE], who has served here since the convening of the Sixty-seventh Congress, and he should be accorded the right to speak.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, there appeared in last Sunday's paper an article with the heading, New Airship Asked by Akron Probers.

I have no criticism to make of the congressional committee that investigated the disaster of the Akron. The committee worked hard and strenuously through trying days and heard much testimony regarding the destruction of that airship.

I have no criticism to make except of one particular item that this committee has suggested to Congress in the criticism of the navigation of that ship.

They specifically state in their report no. 2 item that responsibility for the crashing of the airship in the storm conditions when she was destroyed.

I take exception to that particular report, because Commander McCord, who had charge of the ship on that day was only doing his duty and died like a hero.

The ship in my estimation, as I stated a year ago last February before the Naval Affairs Committee after the accident, was out of alinement, was not true, and that was the reason for the destruction of the Akron.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman showed me a clipping that he had some time ago in which he stated some matters about the Akron disaster. Has the gentleman that here now?

Mr. BOLAND. Yes; if the House will bear with me I will make the same statement now that I made a year ago last February.

Over a year ago the Akron was damaged to a great extent by the breaking away from her holding wires while being taken out of her hangar for a trip that was to take members of the Naval Affairs Committee for a trial flight. I am a member of this important committee and was present when this accident occurred, and on February 25, 1932, made the following statement at a meeting of this committee:

I was within 40 feet of the Akron when she broke away from the guy wires, and I believe from my experience in the building business, and I am in a position to make somewhat of an expert statement on this matter, as I have been brought up in the building business, have been in it all of my life, and am a contractor at the present time, so I have had a lot of experience with buildings in our vicinity there, with the mine caves, so far as the jarring of buildings and things like that is concerned, and I want to make this statement.

I watched that ship when she broke away from the guy wires and followed it until she hit the ground, and I am perfectly satisfied from my experience that the jar that ship got when she hit the ground jarred the whole ship all the way through, and I cannot conceive how anybody can make a statement just now that that ship will ever be the same after that jar.

However, high-power salesmen, experts, and technicians were evidently able to convince the Navy Department that the ship could be repaired and put in airworthy condition and able to withstand any kind of weather. So the ship was repaired at considerable expense and accepted by the Department as in perfect condition. Members of the House, you can readily see how unjust it is to place the responsibility of the disaster by placing a blemish upon the fair name of Commander McCord. At a recent inquiry at Lakehurst by the Navy of the disaster, and after many witnesses were heard, the final result was that the cause of the loss of the Akron will always be a matter of conjecture.

And nothing has transpired since to disprove that theory that I have. That ship was jarred in every part of its framework. It was out of alinement, and that is the reason, in my estimation, that that ship crashed. I still claim that the only way the ship could have been put in perfect condition was to have it all torn down and rebuilt so that it would be true in every respect. The reason I am here tonight is to defend the honor of the commander of that ship.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOLAND. Yes.

Mr. FADDIS. Is it not a fact that the commander of this ship was acting under orders from higher authority?

Mr. BOLAND. There is no question about that. He was acting in the line of duty, and that fact is certainly confirmed by the other fact that the Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, for whom I have the highest regard and always will have, was in the ship upon that fatal ride. Commander McCord had 1800 hours of flying experience before he took command of this ship.

It may be knowledge for the House to know that he had more flying experience when he took command of that ship than any previous commander of any airship that the United States has ever owned. So one can readily see that the ship was not in the hands of a novice, and it comes with ill grace from any committee of Congress to cast a stigma upon a record that was so clean. I hope that this Congress will make that committee expunge that part of the report, so that it may never cast a reflection upon the immediate family of that great hero, Commander McCord. [Applause.]

HOWARD UNIVERSITY—COMMUNISM

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I am seldom prone to criticize or say anything about the remarks of anyone that appear in the public print. There is a newspaper for the colored race published in Chicago called the Defender. In that newspaper is the following headline, in the issue of Saturday, June 10, 1933:

Howard U prexy endorses communism. Mordecai Johnson in sermon urges seniors to adopt new plan.

Mordecai Johnson is the president of Howard University. In his speech appears the following paragraph, and I shall insert all of his remarks in the RECORD, with the permission of the House:

This new religion is called "communism" and is based upon the determination to make economic and political institutions, the family life, and personal relations subject themselves and be ordered by this comprehensive belief that is intrusted in the hands of the church.

In this entire speech this man, whom the Government of the United States through a board of trustees has placed in charge of a college for the Negro race, and which is costing the Government of the United States a million dollars for next year, advocates doing away with all religions, because he says both the Protestant and the Catholic religions have fallen down, and that communism is the religion for America in the future. I call this to the attention of the House. [Applause.]

APPOINTMENT OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be unable to be here at the convening of the House tomorrow, although he expects to be here later in the session. He designates the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to preside as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KVALE. Can the gentleman from North Carolina have permission to insert the entire newspaper article in his extension of remarks?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting therein the newspaper article I referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KVALE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I have something more important to the people of the United States than the article the gentleman refers to and ask unanimous consent to proceed for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRNS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. KVALE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I object to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

LET THE SELLER BEWARE

Mr. CARPENTER of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, under general leave granted by the House today I am having printed in the RECORD my remarks in the form of a speech on the Federal Securities Act that was broadcast from station KFBI, Abilene, Kans., May 19, 1933:

"It isn't the money I've spent I regret, but what I invested and lost." Too often we hear this or a similar statement from the lips of individuals. It isn't a wholesome psychology for the individual thrifty investor, nor for the country at large.

The old axiom, caveat emptor (Let the buyer beware), has now a sister maxim, caveat venditor (Let the seller beware), and it is high time for the seller to assume responsibility for the stocks and bonds he places upon the market for the credulous public to buy.

Through the deliberate action of hired officials of great corporations we have had, during the past 15 years, an amazing inflation of credit. Printing presses were busy turning out bright new stock certificates to be distributed among the stockholders. These new stocks were often distributed as dividends and then impounded to support issues of bonds. These bonds were offered over the counter of nearly every bank in exchange for the life savings or surplus of the depositors. The printing presses did not slow down until the market for securities was paralyzed through the impoverishment of millions of people. More than $200,000,000,000 in bonds were issued and sold and are now outstanding. Hundreds of billions of dollars in stocks were sold, not as stocks in speculative enterprises but were represented to be evidences of equities in established and going concerns. As a result we have bonds outstanding almost to the amount of the actual wealth of this country.

This orgy of bond selling has imposed upon the physical properties of this country fixed charges far beyond the present productive capacity of the country to meet; it has swept away the life savings of many of our people who invested in these now worthless securities with the expectation of having an assured income for the remainder of their lives, or using a trite saying, "for the rainy day." The rainy day is here now, but we call it "the depression"; and where are these life savings now? They paid for the bright new bonds that the printing presses turned out so lavishly just a few short years ago. These bits of paper are all the buyer received for his money and all he can expect to realize. And it was this wild selling of stocks and bonds that was one of the major causes of this terrible depression.

The buying public cannot be censored for purchasing these securities of doubtful value; the best banking houses of the Nation were selling them not only over the counter but through high-powered salesmen, it is true, who vouched for their value and the integrity and worth of the financial houses they represented.

For example, we have the Insull failure in Chicago, the most colossal failure on record in this country, and it is impossible at this time to determine the amount of losses suffered by the investors. Now Insull, the perpetrator of these gigantic swindles—for such they were—is in Greece, enjoying his freedom, having succeeded in resisting extradition. Again I say, it is time the buyer be informed with reliable information as to his contemplated investments, and then if the prospectuses or registration statements are incorrect the seller must and should suffer the consequences of his acts.

The National City Bank, supposed and always considered one of the greatest, if not the greatest banking house of America, is also guilty of selling worthless securities. The officers and directors of this bank lost all idea of value, discovered they could sell more stock than they had, divided each share into five and sold them as high as $580 a share. When the crash came stock went down to $20 a share. The National City Bank was also the seller of millions of dollars worth of bonds of the Republic of Peru. Their own representative reported conditions bad in Peru; in fact, almost everything but telling the bank not to sell the bonds. However, it sold the bonds, and the people profiting were the Republic of Peru and the National City Bank. The investing public was the loser.

I do not believe that any honest person can think otherwise but that the seller should be held responsible for the stocks and bonds he sells to the people. Many a man in an intemperate moment commits a crime of violence, or in the heat of passion snuffs out the life of his fellow man. Frequently there are extenuating circumstances but there are no extenuating circumstances for the shrewd and crafty crooks who sit around a table and deliberately plan the impoverishment of people of millions of dollars earned by the sweat of their brow.

Congress, in an effort to control these unscrupulous sellers of bad or doubtful securities, has passed a bill known as the "Federal Securities Act", which is now in conference. Its object is to require those who issue securities to be sold to the public through the mails or by the use of instruments of interstate commerce to furnish material information to the public about the securities, or, in other words, to make available to the public the information upon which the public is asked to invest its money.

The Government is not going to put its stamp of approval upon these securities, but does make it necessary for accurate dependable information can to be furnished; then if the registration statement is found to be untrue or a material fact omitted, a penalty accrues; or stating it differently, we demand of the seller that he give full and complete information with reference to the securities offered, under penalty of both civil and criminal liability if he evades or conceals material facts.

Neither does this bill cover every security, as certain classes of transactions and securities by their very nature could not be included in this act, such as municipal bonds, notes, drafts, bills of exchange, etc., which are exceptions therefrom. Neither does the bill make ineffective State blue-sky laws, but merely supplements the State laws and gives to all a uniform protection for every investor in America.

And if our President during his administration succeeds in protecting his people from such sharp investment practices as they have been subjected to in the last decade by men as avaricious and unprincipled as the money changers of old, he will merit and receive the everlasting gratitude of the American people and secure for himself an honored place among the truly great.

NEW DEAL RESTORES CONFIDENCE

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, restored confidence is the keynote of the Democratic administration with the 19 bills embraced in President Roosevelt's program, most of which are already enacted into law, building a huge machine that has already started slowly to function and is gaining momentum steadily, to perceptibly decrease unemployment and result in increased prices for commodities. The purchasing power of the American people has already been and is steadily being enormously increased. Employment throughout the United States is being rapidly increased and, as this program develops, millions more people will be put back to work in the factories, on the farms, in the shops. Business will grow, new business will spring up, and the people of these United States will enjoy their rightful heritage of a happy home and a good living.

Summarizing these bills that have been enacted into law by the Democratic Congress, under the leadership of President Roosevelt, we have, first, the emergency banking and gold control bill; then comes the legislation for the legalization of beer. Other measures set forth in this program are: The economy bill, which soon will have the effect of balancing the Budget; the reforestation bill, which will put over 250,000 men to work in our national forests; the Muscle Shoals and Tennessee Valley development, where thousands more of this Nation's unemployed will be put to work and at the same time make use of this great dam which was built under the guiding hand of Woodrow Wilson; the Federal emergency relief bill, which will give direct aid to the unemployed of this country; the farm-relief bill, which contains provisions for refinancing mortgages of farmers; the Inflation Act; the supervision of traffic in securities; the Reconstruction Finance Insurance Corporation bill, which has been sent to the White House for the President's signature; the bill canceling the gold clause in existing contracts; the railroad reorganization bill and the home mortgage bill, both of which have been sent to the White House for the President's signature. The public-works program, the independent offices appropriation bill, and the Glass banking bill are expected to be acted upon before adjournment. Never in the history of the American Congress has so much vital legislation been rushed through in such a short length of time. In fact, America's entire economic complexion has undergone a radical change within the short space of 3 months.

The bill to maintain the credit of the Government, known as the "economy bill" perceptibly cut the pensions now being received by the veterans and their dependents. This bill was made necessary by the large expenditures of former Republican administrations. The President of this great country and the Members of Congress do not want to see the men who rushed to arms in defense of our country in time of peril lose their just deserts. An emergency arose. It had to be met. Cuts were necessary on pensions, cuts were made on the salaries of all officials and Government employees, but no one wanted to see those men who were blinded in battle, who lost an arm, or a leg, give up their only means of livelihood. It seems necessary at the present time that some cuts be made, but the President and the Congress are working together so that these cuts will be fair and equitable and that the economy problem before the Government will be solved.

In solving the tax problem some far-reaching taxation measures have been passed or been proposed in this session. Outstanding are the law legalizing beer and taxing it; the Farm Relief Act, with its processing taxes on agricultural products; and the industrial recovery bill, to be financed by special taxes. None of the processing taxes have yet been applied under the farm bill and none are likely until fall, although some may be imposed at any time. The amount of these levies cannot be foretold, but they are expected to be large.

The beer tax is already yielding the Government substantial sums. Breweries were ready for operation when the law was passed, and taxes began to flow into the Treasury almost overnight. The Glass bill to regulate banking in general, which has passed both Houses, would require banks to divest themselves of their securities dealings and would establish a system of deposit guaranties to protect depositors against losses. This will have a far-reaching effect on the people of this country who during the past year lost their life's savings in bank failures. Employment statistics given out by the American Federation of Labor show a decrease in the unemployed of this country. Every day in the industrial centers of this Nation you see men who have been out of work for 1 year, 2 years, or 3 years going back to work happy and contented. Building construction throughout the United States has increased perceptibly. In the city of Detroit alone construction increased 18.8 percent for April 1933 over April 1932. Building activities have always been considered a guide of prosperity, and if it can be so judged this time, the American people are now at the end of that long, hard trail and have started back up the road to better times again.

For 12 years the American people have been guided by the leaders of the Republican Party. They had been taught that money was cheap, that the false prosperity that hovered over this country was something that could not be taken away from them. They were taught to spend, to buy on installments, that the money would be coming forth to meet these installments; and when the collapse of this system came, they were without a guiding hand to lead them to safety. They went to the polls last November to elect a man they thought might cope with this situation and they elected a leader. Always in time of greatest stress and strain a leader is born and, rightfully, the American people almost unanimously elected Franklin Delano Roosevelt to take over the reins of this Government and lead them out of this mire of financial difficulties. They gave him a Democratic Congress and a Democratic Senate to work with, and with the wisdom of a true leader he started when he took the oath of office.

No one can tell just what far-reaching effects this economic program will have in the future. It is an emergency program and the powers given the President can be revoked by Congress at any time. One thing is known now, however, and that is that the people of these United States have confidence—confidence in their leaders, confidence that business will soon be better, and confidence in themselves. No greater gift can be given to a people than to restore their confidence in their Government and in their leaders.

VETERANS AND ALL FEDERAL EMPLOYEES HAVE BEEN CUT—ARE FEDERAL JUDGES A PRIVILEGED CLASS?

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, in these closing hours of a great session of the Congress which, with stern devotion to a solemn duty to the American people in a time of unparalleled distress, has enacted more remedial legislation for the common welfare than any Congress in history, I acknowledge my respect, deference, and devotion to my colleagues.

The first impression of a newcomer in Congress is that here is a body of the friendliest sort of men, serious minded and hard working and truly representative of America. Another observation is that here on the floor of the House a Member who knows his case, as we lawyers say, is listened to with respect and attention. As Congressman at large from the State of Ohio, representing nearly 7,000,000 citizens, I, on May 4, denounced Federal judges who had failed to repay voluntarily into the Treasury of the United States 10 percent of their salaries by reason of the Economy Act of 1932 and an additional 5 percent by reason of the Economy Act of 1933. All the people of Ohio except seven Ohio Federal judges have been compelled to make sacrifices because of this economic disaster. One of my first votes as a Member of Congress was to support the Economy Bill of the President of the United States, thereby reducing my salary and that of my colleagues from $10,000 to $8,500. Under authority granted by us salaries of United States Senators, Cabinet members, Congressmen, and all Federal officials and employees, from the highest to the lowest, except where a constitutional inhibition prevented, were cut.

At the time I took my solemn oath as a Representative in the Congress our country was confronted by the menace of chaos and disaster. The entire financial structure of the United States had collapsed, banks in 48 States were closed, our international trade had been destroyed, our transportation was paralyzed, our factories were shut down, farmers were bankrupt, millions of worthy and industrious men and women walked city streets jobless. Helpless little children were underfed. Light had faded from the eyes of men and women and hope had died in breaking hearts.

This Congress, under a great leadership, sought to lead our people out of a wilderness of chaos and disaster into the promised land of steady employment and economic security. The Economy Act of 1933 was passed continuing and increasing the cuts imposed upon Federal officials and employees by the Economy Act of 1932. In addition, veterans who offered their lives in a time of national peril were called upon to make sacrifices.

Article III of the Constitution provides that the compensation of United States judges shall not be diminished during their continuance in office.

Section 109 of the Economy Act of 1932, effective July 1, 1932, recognizing this, stated:

> SEC. 109. In any case in which the application of the provisions of this title to any person would result in a diminution of compensation prohibited by the Constitution, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept from such person, and cover into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, remittance of such part of the compensation of such person as would not be paid to him if such diminution of compensation were not prohibited.

Mr. Speaker, it is humiliating to me as a Representative from Ohio to admit the fact that not one of the seven Federal judges of Ohio has paid one cent into the United States Treasury under the provisions of the Economy Act of 1932. My investigation at the Department of Justice in regard to 151 United States district judges and 40 United States circuit judges shows that only 3 made any remittance from their salary under the Economy Act of 1932. Article II of the Constitution states that the compensation of the President may—> neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected.

Nevertheless, President Hoover voluntarily returned into the United States Treasury 10 percent of the presidential salary under the Economy Act of 1932. President Franklin D. Roosevelt, under the Economy Act of 1933, which supplemented and increased the salary cuts imposed by the Economy Act of 1932, has voluntarily returned and is returning into the United States Treasury 15 percent of his Presidential salary.

Section 7 of the Economy Act of 1933 is identical to section 109 of the 1932 Economy Act.

Federal judges, appointed for life, are secure in the knowledge that until they are 70 years old they may hold forth as judges at salaries of $10,000 and more. Upon attaining the age of 70 they need no longer appear in court, but by reason of the beneficence of our Government may retire at full pay and receive that full pay as long as they live.

May 4 was the date I first denounced all Federal judges except the three honorable, unselfish, and patriotic Federal judges who had voluntarily made remittances into the United States Treasury following the passage of the Economy Act of 1932. These three are Judges Elliott Northcott, United States circuit judge of West Virginia, who paid $250; Alfred C. Coxe, of New York, who paid $166.66; and E. Y. Webb, of North Carolina, who paid $300 and later paid $100 additional by certificate dated May 15, 1933.

At the Department of Justice and Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants in the Treasury Department, where remittances are accepted, I find that following my speech, by certificate dated May 8, on the remittance of Judge William S. Kenyon, of Iowa, $156.25 was paid into the Treasury of the United States; and by certificates bearing the same date, $125 each was paid into the Treasury on the remittances from Judge Paul Jones, of Ohio, and Mortimer W. Byers, of New York. Then by a certificate dated May 9 on the remittance from Judge Samuel H. West, of Ohio, $125 was paid into the Treasury; and following that, $125 each was paid into the Treasury by certificates on the remittances of Judges Charles C. Cavanah, of Idaho, Marcus B. Campbell, of New York, and George P. Hahn, of Ohio. The certificate on the remittance from Judge Hahn was dated May 22, 1933. Only one retired Federal judge made any remittance whatever into the Treasury under the Economy Act of 1933 and none under the Economy Act of 1932. I refer to Judge Wilbur F. Booth, of Minnesota, who remitted $156.25 by certificate dated May 18. My examination of the Treasury Department records is searching and complete to June 5, 1933.

Federal judges who refused to accept a 10-percent salary cut under the 1932 Economy Act and an additional 5-percent cut under the 1933 Economy Act have refused to heed the demands of the times. The bailiffs who refer to them as the honorable court, the elevator boys who convey them to their private offices and their court rooms, and the charwomen who on hands and knees in the darkness of the night clean their judicial offices so that they may in all dignity commence their judicial duties in immaculate surroundings, have all had their pay cut. Every United States official and employee, from the President down to the charwomen, have been making, each month since July 1932, their contribution into the United States Treasury to restore contentment and economic security to all our people. Federal judges, except those I have named, have paid nothing whatever. United States judges who have arbitrarily refused to reduce voluntarily their salaries since July 1932 are blind to the demand of the times. Like the Bourbons of old, they cannot forget and do not learn. They should bear their share of the depression the same as all other Federal officials and employees. Those who now make some remittance, but have refused to take a pay cut of 10 percent in conformity with the Economy Act of 1932, place themselves in an inconsistent and indefensible position.

Of course, as soon as the present emergency has passed, salaries of all Federal employees and public officials should be restored. Claims of veterans should be reviewed. All deserving World War veterans who have been compelled to take cuts in their allowance should have their former allowance restored. Spanish War veterans and their widows and also Civil War veterans and their widows who have been compelled to make great sacrifices while Federal judges have not felt the pinch of the depression, should have their pensions restored.

I hope that United States Senators who, in the future, advise and consent to appointments to the Federal bench, will adopt a policy that no Federal judge who has failed to take voluntarily a salary cut, shall, in the future, be considered for promotion on the Federal bench.

Federal judges including all seven from Ohio, should each have paid $749.97 into the United States Treasury to comply with the letter and spirit of the 1932 Economy Act and $125 each month additional beginning with the April 1933 salary, to comply with the letter and spirit of the 1933 Economy Act. Failing to do this, these judges are not making the sacrifice to bring us out of the depression that is being made by every Federal official from President to charwoman.

I have introduced in the Congress a bill to repeal retirement pay for Federal judges. This cannot be considered on the floor of the House during the present extraordinary session of the Congress, but I hope you will pass my bill during the regular session next winter.

Twenty-one Federal judges have been retired on full pay and are receiving $236,000 per annum. These judges had a lifetime job. It is too much of a good thing to require the public to support them now that they are retired. There appears no more justification for retiring a Federal judge upon a salary than there is for retiring other public officials and employees who have contributed their time, energy, intelligence, and labor in the public service.

The Temple of Delphi was scarcely more sacred to the ancient Greeks than the Federal judiciary is to many of our fellow citizens. I respect and admire just, honorable, and patriotic judges. What I have said and done has been in a spirit of duty and not in a spirit of rancor. It pleases me to be able to say that an official of the Treasury Department congratulated me and stated that as the result of the publicity given to my speech of May 4 exposing and denouncing Federal judges for failure to take pay cuts, thousands of dollars would be returned into the Treasury that would not otherwise have been paid by Federal judges. It is a fact that many Federal judges of our country have usurped powers and functions and have too frequently made a mockery of trial by jury.

The Democratic national platform in 1896 stated:

> We denounce arbitrary interference by Federal authorities in local affairs as a violation of the Constitution of the United States and a crime against free institutions, and we especially object to government by injunction as a new and highly dangerous form of oppression by which Federal judges, in contempt of the laws of the States and rights of citizens, become at once legislators, judges, and executioners; * * *.

Chief Justice Hughes recently criticized Federal Judge Lowell, of Massachusetts, for charging in his instructions to the jury the following language:

> And now I am going to tell you what I think of the defendant's testimony. You have noticed, Mr. Foreman and gentlemen, that he wiped his hands during his testimony. It is a rather curious thing, but that is almost always an indication of lying. Why it should be so we don't know, but that is a fact. I think that every single word that man said, except when he agreed with the Government's testimony, was a lie.

We should all adhere to the right of an impartial trial by jury. Our Declaration of Independence indicted the English Crown for its failure, in many instances, to accord the right of trial by jury. Federal judges certainly were not meant to be lawmakers, judges, and executioners all in one, and without responsibility to the people of our country. Usurpation of dictatorship of the Federal courts can be checked by adoption of a constitutional amendment relative to Federal judges and then by appointment or election of these judges for a limited term, say, 6 years, instead of for life.

VETERANS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is to be regretted that the unparalleled record of the President and the Congress should be marred by certain provisions of the Economy Act which reduced the compensation of some and deprived many other deserving men of all compensation.

I feel confident that in this not only the President but the House itself has been misled by the unwarranted and malicious country-wide propaganda started about a year ago by the so-called "Economy League" and a few other similar nefarious organizations. From painstaking investigations I have made and information that has come to me from other reliable sources I am satisfied that the Economy League and other similar organizations which have, day in and day out, through the press, by made-for-cash speeches, and through interviews, given out this fallacious propaganda, are the spokesmen of the big, publicly condemned tax dodgers, and improperly favored beneficiaries of income-tax refunds of the Nation. I am reliably informed that more than $100,000 has been expended in that pernicious campaign for the employment of expert propagandists, lobbyists, and rhetoricians to make a fatuous country-wide demand that the Budget be balanced by reducing Government expenditures, which, as I have said, actually and unjustifiably pauperizes very many of the Nation's once defenders.

I concede that for 12 years under Republican administration, notwithstanding the pledges of Presidents Coolidge and Hoover looking toward economy, the governmental expenditures unjustifiably rose to fabulous proportions. In fact, never before in the history of the Nation was there such an orgy of coldly calculated extravagance as was practiced by the three Republican administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover—departments, bureaus, boards, and commissions having been created right and left, every day of every week, for every possible and impossible occasion.

Therefore I am very happy, as was also a great majority of this House, to join with the overtaxed American citizens to eliminate that cruel and crushing waste; but I never dreamed that such a devastating crusade would be launched against the needy, low-paid employees of the Government, war veterans, and their dependents. I have been and am now in favor of eliminating every unnecessary job holder. I am in favor of eliminating all the unnecessary departments, bureaus, commissions, and boards. I am in favor of purging the pay rolls of the Army and the Navy of many hundreds of now useless and highly paid officers. While we have started to purge the pay rolls of deadwood and to reduce expenditures by the elimination of archaic departments, bureaus, commissions, and boards, still I feel that we have not gone far enough in some respects; yet, on the other hand, we have gone too far in cutting off the compensations and pensions of thousands of deserving Spanish-American and World War veterans and their widows and orphans. I am indeed gratified to realize that to some extent I have been helpful in retaining on the rolls widows and orphans of Spanish-American and World War veterans. Some modifications of veterans' awards have been forced through this House in the last 2 or 3 days, and this House has become convinced that the well-meaning President has been unwittingly ill-advised and misinformed by those to whom he entrusted this important work, and while some of the orders that have been issued may be considered as unfair they will be modified and humanized. The veterans may confidently rely upon that assurance. Having the utmost confidence that the work of the Congress will materially aid in seasonably reestablishing the business of the Nation, and thereby increasing our revenues, I believe it will be possible for us to go much further in righting any possible curtailment of awards for the deserving and needy veterans and their dependents. I now pledge myself to work zealously and unremittingly toward that end.

During my many years' service here I have worked and voted for all the pension, compensation, and hospitalization bills that have been enacted, and I am conscientiously gratified to realize that I have been to some extent helpful in that direction. I advocated and voted, first, for the loans to soldiers, and later I advocated and voted for the complete payment of all adjusted-service compensation certificates. I have always believed that this payment could be satisfactorily accomplished, without increasing the public debt, by the issuance of two billions of Treasury non-interest-bearing notes or currency. I have believed and still believe that putting that amount of money into circulation would not only be a very material aid to the veterans themselves but would greatly facilitate the reestablishment of favorable general business conditions, as much of that money would be used for payment of due and overdue rents, which would enable the owners to pay their taxes and the municipalities and States would therefore receive a large portion of this money, while the remainder of it would be used by the veterans to pay their other debts, to pay their grocers, their butchers, their bakers, and so forth, as they are wont to do when they have money.

Today everybody concedes that we need more money in circulation, and, as a great deal of business is done on credit, this would make possible the extension of credit at least tenfold. Unfortunately, however, this powerful economy lobby has unjustifiably poisoned the minds of many Members and other men in high position and made the bonus payment at this time impossible. However, I still adhere to my original views of this matter and am of the opinion that it should be done even though conditions are improving. The country needs more ready cash, obviously, and this is the way it can be put into circulation to the best advantage to the largest number of persons.

MONOPOLISTIC MASSACRE IN THE OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Speaker, at one end of every industry we have the producer. At the other end we have the consumer. Between these two extremes we have the problem of distribution, in which the most important factor is transportation. Wars between nations have ever been fought for the control of the trade routes over which commodities have been carried, because the control of trade routes has ever been equivalent to the control of commerce. The nations most powerful in resources have controlled these trade routes by the force of arms; hence, the principle of "might makes right" has prevailed, with much injustice to the weaker nations.

Economic competition within nations is much akin to armed warfare between nations. In place of armed combat, in order to control the distribution of products there has been substituted an economic combat, which as long as it is under the influence of healthy competition reacts to the advantage of the nation as a whole. However, once the governing influence of competition is removed, this economic combat may, as we have seen, develop into the subjection of the weaker by methods more ruthless and merciless, for this day and age, than were the methods of Tamerlane and Attila in theirs. If we are to assume that it is one of the duties of this Nation to participate in a world conference to guarantee international peace to the end that the human race shall no longer be subject to the ravages of armed warfare and the independence of smaller nations be preserved, is it not our positive duty to our own citizens to guarantee that in our own Nation this ruthless economic warfare shall cease and the rights and independence of the small business men shall be guaranteed? Just as the unequal control of natural resources and trade routes of the world by powerful nations jeopardizes the peace of the world, even so does the control of these factors jeopardize the peace of this Nation. Today we must in this country take steps to curb the economic slaughter of independent business by the Tamerlanes and Genghis Khans of high finance, of which slaughter there is no better example than that displayed in the oil industry.

Up until the last few years the production of crude oil has been an industry wherein the independent producer has been able to continue in business, though often sadly harassed by the heavy artillery of the Standard Oil Co. This was due to the fact that the production of crude petroleum was generally never far in excess of the demand, although of course he was excluded from the refining end of the business because of the transportation problem. During the early days of the development of the oil industry, John D. Rockefeller, realizing the importance of the control of the transportation facilities, secured discriminatory rates for his products over the steamship and railroad lines. To counteract this advantage, the Tide Water Oil Co., an independent concern, constructed a pipe line from northern Pennsylvania to the Atlantic coast. Rockefeller, aided by the railroads with a reduction in rates, at once began a fight against the Tide Water Oil Co., with the result that in a few years the Standard Oil Co. acquired control of the lines of the Tide Water and other independent oil companies. Then the railroads, strange to say, raised the rates on crude oil to the Atlantic seaboard, which prevented the independents from establishing refineries. Thus, with neither pipe lines nor refineries, the independents were at the mercy of the organizations controlling these facilities, as were also the consumers.

In 1906 Congress imposed the obligations of common carriers upon interstate pipe lines which was intended to give equal rates to all producers and refiners. This was contested in the courts and the courts very obligingly held the matter up until 1914. By that time the pipe lines and the refineries were for the most part combined, in which move the railroads aided, by the granting of discriminatory freight rates and rebates. Therefore this move by Congress resulted in no benefit to the independents, because they were still without an outlet for their products, although the Standard permitted them to exist. In the meantime a hoax was put over on the industry in the form of a decree of the Supreme Court of the United States ordering the dissolution of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey for "maintaining a combination in restraint of trade in the production and sale of petroleum." Whatever might have been the intent of this decree, the fact that the oil industry has ever since been subject to the most rigid monopolistic control known to any industry leads us to the conclusion that the necessary teeth are lacking in the enforcement of this decree.

With the development of the automobile a change came over the situation. Gasoline and other of the higher products of the distillation of petroleum had before this been waste products, which the refineries had experienced difficulties in getting rid of. Now, gasoline became a very valuable by-product, and since it comprised such a large percentage of the raw material should have resulted in a lowering of the other products. Not so here. The industry was under such complete control that the other products were also raised. The monopoly was so extended that at the present time 95 percent of the retailing facilities are controlled by the same monopolies which control the pipe lines and refineries. Not content with the control of the above agencies, these monopolistic Tamerlanes have carried on a bitter campaign of extermination of the independents, to the end that they might have complete control of the raw material, and the skulls of the independent operators forced out of business by expensive line-fights, decisions of influenced judges, sabotage methods, and unfair financial cramping would make a pyramid beside which the one constructed by Tamerlane at Damascus would appear as a mere ant hill.

Throughout all the history of monopolistic massacre, financial piracy, and tribute exaction connected with the oil industry no chapter is so filled with examples of these outrages as is that chapter having to deal with that section of this Nation which produces oils of Pennsylvania grade. Here the oil industry was born, and here is produced the highest and most valuable grade of petroleum—a grade necessary in the production of all high-class lubricants—a grade which contains the most valuable components and less residue than any other grade. Since the petroleum from this section is so essentially necessary to the refining industry, the monopolistic interests have gone to greater lengths and resorted to more subtle finesse to secure control of this field than they have in any other. Situated in a region where the land is cut into smaller tracts than in any other field, where the yield per well is comparatively small and therefore the costs of production relatively higher, it has been a fertile field for monopolistic manipulation. Having had the advantage of a longer period of time in which to perfect their methods of banditry, being nearer the concentrated area for both refining and marketing, these privileged interests, operating in open defiance of the antitrust laws, have succeeded in securing such a complete strangle hold on the independent producer that he is now in his last gasps. With his dying breath he is calling upon this Congress, which is charged with the duty of providing for the general welfare, for help. Knowing full well the utter uselessness of appealing for mercy to the Neros of the amphitheater of oildom, where else can he appeal?

In 1920 the refiners attributed the rapid advance in the price of the various refined products of petroleum as mainly due to the increase in the price of the crude oil. In 1920 Pennsylvania crude reached the high point of $6.10 per barrel and many refineries paid a premium of 50 cents per barrel in addition. The expense of refining is relatively a small factor in the ultimate cost of the refined products of petroleum, with modern methods running less than 10 percent. Lubricants are the most valuable products of Pennsylvania crude. Why is it, then, that although Pennsylvania crude has dropped to $1.42 per barrel that the price of lubricants is still as high or in some cases higher than when the same oil was $6.60 per barrel? Why is it that west of the Mississippi River petroleum is priced on the basis of specific gravity, while east of the Mississippi River it is based on districts and color? Why is it that in the Appalachian oil field the Joseph Seep Purchasing Agency, which is the only purchasing agency in the field, can now manipulate the price of oil by sections and color and even at their will exclude certain operators from pipe-line service, where once all the oil from this section was accepted at a uniform grade? Why is it that the rise and fall in the price of gasoline is not in a definite relation with the price of crude oil? The reason is this: By deft manipulation of the network of pipe lines the independent refiner has been driven out of business, and at the same time the price of oil has been forced down to a point below the cost of pumping the oil.

An oil lease cannot be shut down and let lie idle without serious damage to the property, because of the dangers of the wells sealing themselves shut by the formation of paraffin and the danger of water getting into the producing sands. It must be operated or abandoned. Step by step the small operator in this most valuable field has been forced into bankruptcy and the monopolistic interests are acquiring the properties. Unless they receive the protection to which they are entitled in a very few months the independent operator will be a thing of the past, and the industry will be controlled from one end to the other by these combinations, which are formed with the idea of controlling the prices at both ends of the industry to the everlasting sorrow of the ultimate consumer.

It is the solemn duty of this House to come to the rescue of the small business man and insure that he shall be protected from the rising tide of monopoly. It is our duty to protect the ultimate consumer from the same threatening influences. If we do less than this we are false to the trust which the citizens of this Nation have imposed upon us.

PROTEST AGAINST PERSECUTION OF JEWS

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, every consideration of humanity, Americanism, and Christianity compels an expression by Congress in protest against the persecution of the Jews of Germany by the Hitler regime.

It is true that Germany has the right to select any form of government she desires, without interference from other nations. She has the right to select any rulers she chooses, without let or hindrance.

But when any nation violates the fundamental laws of humanity and follows a course of barbarism toward helpless men and women and children, America will sin by silence if she does not utter a protest.

It was a "decent respect for the opinions of mankind" that led to the publication of the American Declaration of Independence. Today this Nation has a vital influence in creating world public opinion. That fact creates an obligation to state clearly that American public opinion is against the oppression and persecution meted out to the Jews in Germany.

No one can deny that a campaign of hate based upon race and religion is raging in Germany. The Berlin correspondent of the New York Evening Post has summed up the situation as follows:

> An indeterminate number of Jews have been killed. Hundreds of Jews have been beaten and tortured. Thousands of Jews have been deprived of their livelihood. All of Germany's 600,000 Jews are in terror.

Mr. Speaker, such a course of conduct is not alone a Jewish question. It is a human question and one which involves every ideal America has professed. Here is a minority element, which has but 1 percent of the population, and yet it is made the victim of cruelty and devastation. The Jews have been declared aliens in the land of their birth. They have been disfranchised and barred from public office. They have been deprived of free speech, free press, and free assembly. Their religion has been assailed, their synagogues attacked, and their cemeteries desecrated. Having but one out of a hundred in the population, these barbarous actions have been defended on the ground of necessity. Such a claim insults the intelligence of the people of all nations.

When John Bright, the famous English statesman, asked a great American, "What distinct contribution has your America made to the science of government?" the response was, "The doctrine of religious liberty." In every great charter of Americanism there gleams and glows the principle that every man shall be free to worship God after the dictates of his own conscience.

Does not the contribution of Jewry to the world demand justice for the sons of Abraham in every land? This people brought the faith in one God, without which the idea of the brotherhood of man is unthinkable. They gave to the world the Bible and the founder of Christianity. Their ancient laws form the basis for the codes for every civilized nation today.

Not only as human beings with inalienable rights but as members of a mighty family which has formulated the highest spiritual truths yet conceived by mankind, the Jews in Germany must not be compelled to suffer torture and savage mistreatment. By their history down the ages they deserve, not hatred and persecution, but admiration and respect.

It is my belief that it is not only the right of the United States but her obligation as well to make official protest against action which fans the flames of religious and racial prejudice not only in Germany but in other nations. We should adopt the resolution pending before this body as the expression of American purpose to join those world forces of enlightenment and understanding which strive to build a road toward justice and liberty.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF CONGRESS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed gratified at and proud of the wonderful foresight, courage, and determination displayed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. I am satisfied that when the history of this epochal time is written his extraordinary accomplishments will easily place him as one of the foremost Presidents of our great land.

Moreover, I am immensely pleased with the splendid cooperation of the Congress. When it is considered that we have approximately one third of the House composed of new Members, many of them quite young men, with set views and a zealous and praiseworthy determination to force through legislation that they have advocated, it is indeed remarkable how many of them in a spirit of harmony submerged their honest convictions and aspirations and joined hands in patriotically and manfully aided in enacting speedily the important legislation of this short session.

While I am immensely pleased with what, of greatest magnitude, has been accomplished, yet I, in a measure, regret that we have been unable to enact a more stringent security bill to include all of the outstanding stock issues now listed. Also, I had hoped that we might impose a tax of 1 percent on certain stock-exchange transactions and an additional 1 percent on all short sales, which, I calculate, would have netted the Nation between one hundred fifty million and two hundred million dollars. I regret, also, that we have not enacted a fair and impartial tax on the chain stores and mail-order houses, so as to protect the struggling small, independent merchants throughout the country.

Thirdly, I regret that we could not and did not pass a law that would have taxed all incomes over $500,000 at 75 percent.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency is investigating certain ramifications and machinations of private and investment bankers, I had hoped that the House itself would authorize the investigation of the stock exchange and its destructive, dastardly manipulations. I am satisfied that a thorough, honest, and fearless investigation of the stock exchange would disclose the abuses that were responsible for the criminal inflation on one hand and the destructive deflation that followed on the other hand. But I recognize that we cannot accomplish in the short period of 3 months all that we desire.

On the whole I am satisfied that the Congress does now adjourn, but I hope that before adjournment we will pass the bank guaranty bill, which would protect especially the small banks throughout the land, and also pass resolutions to investigate the dubious income-tax refunds of $3,300,000,000, the general evasion of taxes by the big men of the land, the Federal Reserve Board activities, and certain loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. However, if that is impossible at this session, I pledge myself today to continue my efforts to bring about the passage of such a bill and such resolutions immediately after the Congress reconvenes.

PROTEST AGAINST PERSECUTION OF JEWS

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the House this afternoon in the name of humanity and to protest against the latest outburst of race hatred against the Jew in Germany.

Mr. Speaker, I have in mind a phrase which the framers of our Declaration of Independence used in the preamble of that great document. That phrase is "a decent respect for the opinion of mankind." That phrase, which is given as the necessity for promulgating the entire document, seems to me to be a standard for the conduct of nations and men.

During the past few months the Hitler regime has shown an utter lack of respect—in fact, a disrespect—for the opinion of the rest of the world. The persecution of the German Jews is nothing less than a defiance of every decent sentiment of the world. Whatever may be pleaded in extenuation of offenses committed in the crisis of a revolution, no condemnation can be too strong for racial persecution and organized terrorism.

In speaking of the Jews in Germany it should be borne in mind that they form an integral part of that country, and that they are not newcomers or invaders. There is positive record of settled German-Jewish communities that dates back for a thousand years. Thousands of Jewish families can trace their residence in Germany back for hundreds of years.

During the Great War the German Jews have done their full duty by their country. Twelve thousand of them fell upon the battlefield, and thousands more have been crippled. In this service they were patriotic to the German cause, and I know that the rank and file of the German people are grateful for that service.

Germany is a nation of great cultural achievement, a center of science, literature, music, and art. In each of these fields the Jewish population has been conspicuous in its achievements and by its monumental contributions has in no small degree aided in setting cultural Germany on its high plane.

Of the 30 German winners of the Nobel prize, no less than 8, or over 25 percent of the entire number, have been Jews—equal to 25 times the Jewish proportion of the population of Germany. The history of medicine in Germany is a history full of distinguished Jewish names, and in the modern German literature many of the outstanding figures are Jews. In the theater, many of the great producers and the actors; in music, many of the great conductors, composers, and performers—to all these fields the Jews have given great distinction.

It has been hard to believe that the German Nation, with its 65,000,000 civilized human beings, could be in any way guilty of injuring this valuable element of its fellow citizens. Yet the facts overwhelmingly establish the fixed German governmental policy and campaign of persecution, disfranchisement, and eventual extermination of its citizens of Jewish extraction. There have been rumblings of the coming storm, but we in America had believed that the speeches and writings of Hitler were nothing more than campaign talk and were not being taken seriously by the German people. We did not realize that the desperate plight of the German people made them ready to accept any form of propaganda which promised to aid them out of their troubles.

The platform of the Hitler's Nazi Party, now in control of Germany, contains 25 points. This is called the "Changeless program for the ages." Seven of these points are admittedly directly leveled against the liberty and equality of the Jews as citizens of Germany and are aimed at their destruction. In carrying out this program Hitler and his associates have always stressed that to accomplish their aims they must be brutal, and brutal to the extreme. Typical of these speeches we find Hitler saying in his book, My Struggle:

> For our liberation we need more than an economic policy and industry; what we need is pride, spite, hatred, and more hatred.

A further example is from a speech by Buerger, a member of the government, in Berlin on November 15, 1931:

> We will be in a position to get back the money which has been exported abroad. We need only to act brutally enough. Even though a considerable number, mostly, of course, Jews, will have already disappeared, it will be only necessary for us to seize a few thousand of this kind and make an example of them. If you do not bring back your exported money by this and this time, then we will hang 20 Jews on the gallows. When the first 20 will be hanged, then the others of this great family will not want to see their brothers waving in the wind; they will bring back the money; otherwise we will continue with our method.

And if this does seem extravagant, I quote again from Hitler's book. He says:

If you wish to win the sympathy of the broad masses, you must tell them the crudest and most stupid things.

In the party instructions we read:

The natural hostility of the peasant toward the Jews must be whipped into a frenzy.

These are but a few of the quotations from Nazi literature and statements from their outstanding literature. I could give dozens more of a similar nature made by Hitler and others high in the councils of the Nazis and in the present Government of Germany. These statements are, however, enough to give a clear indication of the trend of thought of the ruling group of Germany.

This is the sort of propaganda which has been spread throughout Germany. Hundreds of newspapers, millions of books, pamphlets, leaflets, and posters have for years been spreading this sort of inflammatory matter. It is not difficult to understand what followed.

The seeds of hate have been sown with characteristic German thoroughness. The harvest which has been reaped has been summarized in a series of articles in the Boston Transcript by H. R. Knickerbocker, the Berlin special correspondent of the New York Evening Post, as follows:

An indeterminate number of Jews have been killed.

Hundreds of Jews have been beaten or tortured.

Thousands of Jews have been, or will be, deprived of their livelihood.

All of Germany's 600,000 Jews are in terror.

It is impossible to ascertain how many Jews have been killed. The newspapers are suppressed, the opposition is terrorized, and the families of the victims would be the last to utter a protest.

It is only possible to estimate in the vague term "hundreds" how many Jews have been beaten, tortured, and robbed. The only means of information is through personal knowledge, by word of mouth, and in those cases where Jews of foreign nationalities have complained to their consulates.

The foreign Jews whose consulates have protested to the Foreign Office of maltreatment and savage torture number 150. The Polish embassy alone had an imposing list. They comprised more than 100 instances wherein Jews had been attacked in their homes or places of business, robbed at the point of revolvers, and taken to torture chambers, where men in the uniforms of storm troopers have beaten them with leaden balls.

Nine American Jews were beaten or otherwise maltreated. Altogether, since the native Jews outnumber the foreigners by 100 to 1, it is conservative to estimate that hundreds of Jews were tortured.

Under date of April 5, 1933, writing in the New York Evening Post, the same correspondent says:

All cases cited are either confirmed by personal investigation by the Evening Post correspondent or are citations from affidavits filed with diplomatic representatives.

The extremes to which the present Government of Germany is going in its war on the Jews is perhaps best exemplified by the much-heralded book burning which took place on May 10. On that day all libraries were to be purged of all books by Jewish authors.

This event was organized as a student activity, and students were admonished to collect all over Germany the books that were to be immolated in the pyres that were to be lighted in honor of that day. Among the list of authors were such great German names as Emil Ludwig, Lion Feuchtwangler, Arnold and Stephan Schweig, and Erich Remarque, author of "All Quiet on the Western Front." A number of Americans were honored by being included in the list—Sinclair Lewis, Jack London, and Helen Keller.

If this event could be considered as the exuberant prank of a lot of college undergraduates, it might be forgotten and have no great significance. But it received Government sanction, and the address in honor of the day was made by the minister of propaganda in the Government, Goebels, one of the right-hand men of Hitler.

If the purpose was to eradicate the books that were burnt, then the whole thing was futile. It is childish to say that this burning operation destroyed the works of the authors involved. Even if every proscribed volume in Germany found its way to the flames, all of these works still live in the thousands of copies in the libraries throughout the world. And there throughout the world these books will continue to live, for they are among the world's classics.

A book is something more than printed paper bound together by linen thread and glue. It is a living thing, which mirrors thought and life. It is from such classics that literatures are built. To wantonly mutilate a book is an offense. To willfully destroy a classic is a crime.

The world deplores the destruction of the great Alexandrian library by Omar. He burned much that was irreplaceable. We dismiss him in this act as a fanatic from the desert. We cannot account for the actors in this tragedy in these terms. They are fanatics, but they should know the value of books. Such vandalism is not for civilized people.

It is true that the physical violence from which Jews suffered during the first few days of the new regime in Germany has abated, but the campaign of repression and persecution continues. The Government is still carrying out the avowed program of its leaders to eliminate all Jews and persons descended from Jews from public life. All Jewish public officials, Government employees, teachers, and judges have been dismissed. This represents an appreciable number of persons, as Jews were able to hold office with the republic. Most of the Jewish lawyers have been deprived of the right to practice before the courts. As a result of the widespread agitation throughout the world, there has been some easing up on the restrictions against lawyers, although the vast majority of them are out. Not even this concession has been made to Jewish physicians. They have been denied the right to see Christian patients. They have been removed from hospital posts, and through this process some of the world's great specialists have been deprived of the opportunity to continue their work. Jewish physicians have been dismissed from their posts in the Krankenkasse, a sort of socialized form of health insurance. To accomplish this the Hitler Government decreed that these posts were Government positions. This act practically deprived the middle-class physician of the chance of a livelihood. Jews have been debarred from owning or being employed as writers on newspapers. They have been ousted from the theater.

Americans well remember the great production of the Miracle which Max Reinhardt brought to this country. The majesty of this great production was an inspiration to every true Christian. Yet this great producer, together with hundreds of others connected with the theater, have been dismissed. In the allied musical field the same sort of thing has taken place. World-famous symphony conductors, such as Bruno Walter, conductor of the Berlin Symphony Orchestra, was discharged, and another, Otto Klemperer, who is a Catholic of Jewish descent, has been forbidden "in spite of certain contracts" to conduct the state opera again. The results of all this is enough to justify the dispatch which has appeared in the New York Times that the Jewish professional classes have been reduced to beggary.

But what of other activities in this direction. The wholesale discharge of university professors for example. Detailed figures are not available but the number affected must be very large, as is indicated by facts like these: In the Berlin Conservatoire the director, 4 professors, and 4 teachers, 3 professors from Munster University, 6 from Halle, 8 from Breslau, 18 from Frankfort, 9 from Kiel, 6 from Goettingen, and 3 from Koeningsberg. This by no means exhausts the list.

Can there be any justification for a condition which has made it impossible for that great soul, the great world figure, Albert Einstein, to return to his home? And how can any government justify the confiscation of this great man's savings amounting to about $7,000.

Under the guise of coordination Jewish owners and directors of department stores and other business have been ousted. Employers have been forced to discharge Jewish employees. The technical boycott of Jewish business lasted 1 day but the actual boycott of Jewish business continues.

The summary of all this is that the Jews of Germany are by direct and indirect action of the Government and its agencies being deprived of the chance of making a living.

Some of the finest and the best brains of the country are being crushed by the acts of their own Government actuated by race hatred and prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, I have thus far only spoken of the series of acts by which the German Jews are being pauperized, but there is really more than this. It is part of the Nazi program to deprive them of citizenship. This is a clear provision of point no. 4 of their program. Point no. 5 says, "Anyone not a citizen can live in Germany only as a guest and must remain under legislation for foreigners." This places all Jews, no matter how many centuries they and their ancestors have lived in the country, in a position that they are always subject to deportation. Point no. 6 completes the work of depriving the Jew of all civic rights. It reads, "Only a citizen has the right to determine the guidance of the state. Therefore we demand that every public office, no matter what kind, whether in the reich, state, or county, be filled only by citizens." The rights granted by the German constitution are to be abrogated and the Jew is to be put back to the Middle Ages. Thus does the Hitler German nation seek to degrade and impoverish a great element of its citizens.

Can we, the citizens of this great and free Republic, proud of our heritage of religious toleration, sit idly by and see these helpless human beings crushed by the heavy hand of cruelty and hatred? Shall we not rise up and protest?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that I am not transgressing the bounds of propriety. I have no quarrel with the Germans in their choice of a form of government or with their choice of persons to govern them. I recognize that in these matters they have the same rights as we claim for ourselves, to establish their own form of government and to manage their political and economic affairs according to their understanding. But when a nation violates every principle of humanity and denies to any number of its citizens the most elementary of human rights, then it is our duty to protest. Such a denial and such persecution ceases to be solely a domestic question but becomes a question for the world.

Under the old tribal laws crimes against the person were matters between the injured person and the aggressor. Under our modern jurisprudence crimes against the person are the concern of the entire State, and it is the bounden duty of the State through its proper officers, and if need be, through the body of its citizenry, to redress the injury of any citizen, however humble he may be. Likewise the persecution of human beings, whatever their creed or race, has long since ceased to be the private concern of the oppressors, but it is the burden of all humanity. No matter what people are called or what religion they profess, the modern world cannot sit idly by when they are singled out for exceptional punishment when they have committed no crime.

Human rights are as sacred today as when our forefathers proclaimed in the Declaration of Independence "that all men are created free and equal, and that they are endowed by the Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." These doctrines were ennunciated not alone for us but for the whole world. Upon these fundamentals the War for Independence was fought and won, and they have remained as an inspiration and a guide to liberty-loving men the world over.

We have protested against persecution in Cuba, and when protests were unavailing we fought a holy war to liberate that island from its oppressors. Our people have protested against the Bulgarian atrocities and the Armenian massacres committed by the "unspeakable Turk." These protests had nothing to do with the race of the victims or their language or religious beliefs. The sufferers were looked upon as helpless human beings in lands of cruelty, and that was enough then. It is enough now.

There is ample precedent for protest on the part of our Government. In 1840 the American consul at Damascus reported that some of the most prominent Jews of that city were being subjected to persecution and torture. Instructions were thereupon sent under date of August 14, 1840, by Secretary of State John Forsyth to the American consul at Alexandria, Egypt, that all good offices and efforts be employed to display the active sympathy of the United States in the attempts that European governments were making to mitigate the horrors of the persecution. Instructions were also sent to the United States minister to Turkey to do everything in his power to alleviate the condition of the unfortunates.

In both of these communications the reasons for intervention by the United States are based upon sentiments of justice and humanity, as no American citizens were involved. In the communication to the minister stress was laid upon the propriety and right of intervention by the United States, because its political and civil institutions make no distinctions in favor of indviduals by reason of race or creed, but treat all with absolute equality.

Our Government has interfered on several occasions on behalf of the Jews of Morocco. As early as 1863, when we were in the midst of the Civil War, Secretary Seward instructed the American Consul at Tangier to use his good offices to further the mission of Sir Moses Montifiore, who came to Morocco to aid Jews who were victims of atrocities at Tangier. Mr. Seward based his act on the ground of humanity.

Under the date of November 12, 1880 (foreign relations of the United States 1881, p. 1043), Secretary of State Evarts instructed our Ambassador to Spain to facilitate the work of an American Jewish representative who went to Morocco in connection with the ill treatment of Jews in that country.

That our Ambassador to Spain took an active part is clear from the report which he made to the State Department under date of January 17, 1881 (foreign relations of the United States, 1881, p. 1047). The Ambassador writes:

> Referring to your instructions * * * I have the honor to inform you that Colonel Mathews, Consul at Tangier, has transmitted to me much new and interesting (and horrible) information regarding the treatment which the Jews of Morocco continue to receive. * * *
>
> At a meeting of the foreign representatives lately held at Tangier, it was agreed to present to the Sultan's prime minister * * * a collective note to protest against the actions of the Moorish officials in this regard.

The first paragraph of the collective note, which follows the above, is well worth reading as a precedent for action. The paragraph reads:

> It is with extreme regret that the undersigned representatives have the honor to request to make known to His Majesty, the Sultan, that they cannot any longer abstain from expressing their dissatisfaction and that of their governments themselves, seeing, as they do, that neither the principles of humanity which his Sheriffian Majesty had declared his willingness to adopt forthwith, nor the promises made by His Majesty, through you, for the better administration of his Jewish subjects and the repression of crime throughout the whole extent of the Empire have hitherto been applied in any case.

The most recent precedent is the famous Rumanian note, by Secretary John Hay, found in Foreign Relations of the United States, 1902. On page 914, under date of July 17, 1902, Mr. Hay wrote in confidence to our Minister to Rumania:

> The United States offers asylum to the oppressed of all lands. But its sympathy in nowise affects its liberty and rights to weigh the acts of the oppressor in the light of their effects upon this country and to judge accordingly.
>
> Putting together the facts, now painfully brought home to this Government, during the past few years, that many of the inhabitants of Rumania are being forced by artificially adverse discrimination to quit their native country; that the hospitable asylum offered by this country is almost the only refuge left to them; they come hither unfitted by the conditions of their exile to take part in the new life of the new land under circumstances either profitable to themselves or beneficial to the community * * * the right of remonstrance against the Rumanian Government is established in favor of this Government.
> Whether consciously and of purpose or not, these helpless people, burdened and spurned by their native land, are forced by the sovereign power of Rumania on the charity of the United States. This Government cannot be a tacit party to such an international wrong. It is constrained to protest against the treatment to which the Jews of Rumania are subjected, not alone because it has unimpeachable ground to remonstrate against resultant injury to itself but in the name of humanity. The United States may not authoritatively appeal to the stipulations of the Treaty of Berlin, to which it was not and cannot become a signatory, but it does earnestly appeal to the principles consigned therein, because they are principles of international law and eternal justice, advocating the broad toleration which that solemn compact enjoins and standing ready to lend its moral support to the fulfillment thereof by its cosignatories, for the act of Rumania itself has effectively joined the United States to them as an interested party in this regard.

Rumania came into existence under the Treaty of Berlin, referred to in the foregoing paragraph. The treaty provided for equality of races and guaranteed all subjects of Rumania freedom from persecution and racial or religious oppression.

To meet this condition and to make its protest effective, Secretary Hay addressed an identical note to the Governments of Austria-Hungary, France, Germany, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, and Turkey, as signatories of the Berlin treaty. This note is dated August 11, 1902, and is recorded in full in Foreign Relations of the United States, 1902, page 42. In addition to the matter included in the note to the American Minister to Rumania, Mr. Hay says in his new note that it has seemed appropriate to the President (at that time Theodore Roosevelt) to call attention to this matter to the signatories to the treaty. He adds further, on page 44:

The political disabilities of the Jews of Rumania, their exclusion from public service and the learned professions, the limitations of their civil rights, and the imposition upon them of exceptional taxes, involving as they do wrongs repugnant to the moral sense of liberal modern peoples, are not so directly in point for my present purpose as the public acts which attack the inherent rights of man as a breadwinner in the ways of agriculture and trade.

Our Government could in truth make the same protest today to Germany. All the conditions which moved the great John Hay to make the Rumanian protest exist today.

Mr. Speaker, I am confident that the masses of the recently formed German Republic do not sanction the attitude of the Hitler administration toward the Jew in Germany. The German people throughout the world's history have repeatedly remonstrated and vigorously condemned any action on the part of any people tending to oppression and race hatred. The people of that great nation which gave to America Baron von Steuben, of Revolutionary fame, and sent to our shores thousands of its best citizens, will not place their stamp of approval on such a Hitler anti-Jewish policy. They will cooperate to find a means to end anti-Semitism and solve this problem.

CRITICISM OF CONGRESS BY CERTAIN INTERESTS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I have observed in the newspapers that the prices of stocks and bonds are going up and that some of the stock-exchange manipulators and certain other gentlemen who are pursuing the same course as in 1929, which I fear shortly may likewise end in disaster, are jubilant because the Congress is about to adjourn.

It is amazing to me that after 3 months of most extraordinary effort and toil by the Congress, in an effort to reconstruct and reestablish business, to pull the country out of the abyss into which it was plunged by a Republican Administration, these stock-exchange racketeers, tax-dodgers, and beneficiaries of the $3,000,000,000 improper income-tax refunds—these predatory interests, and other Republican leaders who are in a great measure responsible for this general national destruction, should again display an unmerited antagonistic and contemptible attitude toward a Congress that has within the short period of 3 months enacted more constructive legislation than any other Congress in the history of America.

I concede that some of the legislation enacted is far-reaching and experimental and that nobody can foretell whether it will do all that is hoped for it, but the country should recognize that we have done our utmost to reestablish general confidence, to aid the States and the municipalities feed their unemployed, hungry and starving people, and put 15,000,000 who have been unemployed for 3 years back to work.

Mr. Speaker, that conditions since the Congress convened in extraordinary session have improved, due to its action, no one will deny. At least 20 percent of the unemployed have already returned to work; wages are starting upward; thousands of banks have been reopened; the prices of agricultural commodities have materially increased and in some instances have doubled, creating a much-needed purchasing power for the farmers, which is bound to improve conditions in every industry.

Notwithstanding that, those parasitic forces that brought about the national destruction see fit not only to minimize the efforts of the Congress instead of acknowledging its praiseworthy accomplishments, but to herald to an unhappy, discontented populace that it will be helpful to the Nation if the Congress should adjourn immediately. If they were fair, if they were honest, they would acknowledge and appreciate the constructive, extraordinary, and salutary legislation that we have enacted under the unparalleled leadership of President Roosevelt.

They fail to remember that when President Roosevelt called the Congress into extraordinary session, immediately after he was inaugurated, every bank in the United States was closed; that not more than 3 percent of the banks were solvent; that the life-insurance companies and other insurance companies and outstanding industries were on the verge of bankruptcy. It is the extraordinary ability, determination, and courage that have been displayed by President Roosevelt and the willingness of the Congress to cooperate with the President in the enactment of remedial legislation which the President has recommended that have saved the Nation from complete demoralization and that enabled us to continue to believe that America is still the hope of the world.

But, Mr. Speaker, it was ever thus. Some who have been saved fail to recognize what has been done for them. But I am confident that the American people, aside from these stock-exchange racketeers, tax evaders, and blameworthy income-tax-refund beneficiaries do and will forever gratefully recognize and heartily appreciate the achievements of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress.

I concede that these stock-exchange manipulators and the dishonest investment bankers are in a measure resentful of the passage of the security bill; of the Muscle Shoals and the Tennessee Valley improvement legislation, which the power interests especially dislike; of the repeal of the gold clause in all Federal and private obligations making them payable in legal tender; of the increase in our currency; of the investigation of the House of Morgan and its machinations, such as the shameful evasion of taxes—but I know that 99 percent of the American people will unstintedly approve these beneficial moves, the repeal of the eighteenth amendment, including the modification of the Volstead Act, the emergency banking relief, the emergency agricultural relief, the farm-mortgage relief and currency issuance and regulation, including inflation, unemployment relief (reforestation) the Federal emergency relief to States and municipalities, relief of small-home owners, supervision of traffic in securities, railroad reorganization and relief, all of which acts have been passed in the interest of the Nation and its masses, for their protection and their best interests, and, naturally, not in the interest of the few Wall Street manipulators and racketeers who, as I have stated, are in a large degree responsible for the greatest of all great panics this Nation has experienced.

I think it would be proper at this time to insert the well-founded appraisal of Mr. A. A. Berle, Jr., one of the country's most distinguished economists, who is intimately familiar with the activities of the Congress, to contrast some of the would-be defamers of the Congress. Mr. Berle, on June 10, 1933, told a gathering at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration, observing its twenty-fifth anniversary, in speaking of the achievements of President Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress:

It will be said, in years to come, that an administration came into office at the precise moment when a crisis almost unparalleled in modern history had reached its peak. It will be pointed out that whenever such a crisis has occurred elsewhere in the world, its swift sequel has been a revolution. In the United States, however, life goes on with no such violent aftermath. American faith in American institutions is surely justified on this record. * * * That body (Congress) throughout the session justified its existence as never before, not merely by originating measures, but by making them practical, available, and workable * * *. We can now say with some measure of confidence that the success of this effort appears likely.

The economy law, which we were obliged to pass to balance the Budget and preserve the credit of the United States, has caused injustice to many brave men who served the Nation during the World War and the Spanish-American War; but they are patriotic men; they realize the critical situation into which the country has been plunged, and they are ready and willing to make their contributions, even as they patriotically and successfully made their contributions on battlefields, toward the rehabilitation and reconstruction of our common beloved country. I wish to assure these veterans that as soon as conditions permit, which I hope will be in the next session of the Congress, any wrong unwittingly done to them shall be adjusted.

The industrial control and employment bill is far-reaching and experimental, but it is only a temporary expedient, and as soon as business and labor are put upon their feet—and may that be very soon—it will be repealed or modified and any abuses by industries will be righted; so that there will be no flaunting of the protective provisions of the Sherman Antitrust Law. In that connection I wish to say that I am satisfied that neither President Roosevelt nor the Democratic House will tolerate any abuses by industries in connection with price fixing, and I am hopeful that this act will increase wages and reduce the hours of labor. The principal reason I supported that measure is the benefits it will no doubt give to the labor of America. Of course, it is hoped that it will also eliminate the cutthroat, unfair competion and aid in reestablishing business and proper living conditions for American wage earners.

REPUBLICAN VIEW OF THE ECONOMIC CONFERENCE AT LONDON

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address delivered by myself over a National Broadcasting Co. network, Tuesday, June 13, 1933:

I deplore the injection of partisanship into the consideration of international issues, conferences, or foreign affairs generally. In the past with few or limited exceptions the conduct of our foreign affairs has been on a strictly nonpartisan basis. The Roosevelt administration has completely scrapped this traditional American policy and substituted a new deal in foreign affairs that has for its main basis unadulterated partisanship and no consultation with the Republican minority or opposition party. I am convinced that this injection of partisanship is a disservice to our country and cannot help but cause dissension and misunderstanding in our dealings with foreign nations.

I am constrained, as the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, to protest this unfortunate and unwise change of a well-established American precedent, and reluctantly take up the challenge that has been flung in the face of the Republican Party by the "brain trust" and the administration.

Last month, at the request of the administration, several prime ministers and other distinguished foreign statesmen visited Washington to discuss economic, monetary, trade, and disarmament issues. Paraphrasing Julius Caesar, they came, they saw, and they went home. Apparently a good time was had by all, but nobody knows what it was all about, least of all the foreign statesmen who were much feted and presented with extensive formulas composed by the "brain trust." In most of these formulas, Y equaled tariff reductions, Z equaled inflation, and X represented the unknown quantity, or reduction in war debts.

The visiting statesmen on their return home have had much difficulty in explaining these formulas satisfactorily to their governments, and fitting the pieces into the right places in the picture puzzle. Why not, as no Democrat has yet been able to inform the American public whither we were going on the war debts, embargoes, or League of Nations. Of course, no Republican can even venture a solution of the recent conference puzzles at Washington. None of them were invited to attend the conferences or to make suggestions. For the first time in American history, since we became a world power, partisanship was injected into international issues, in spite of our traditional practice and policy to the contrary. The so-called "new deal" as applied to foreign affairs by the "brain trust" was to ignore the sound American policy of permitting partisanship to cease at the water's edge.

The visiting foreign statesmen were guests of the Nation, not of the Democratic Party. Nevertheless Republicans who represent the opposition party were not to be trusted to even meet these foreign statesmen or they might be contaminated. Prime Minister MacDonald was regaled at a big State dinner at the White House without the benefit of any Republicans from the House of Representatives and but one from the Senate. The Democratic program of a new deal on international issues apparently is the old Wilson deal, or internationalism rampant; entrance to the League by the front door, the back door, or the trap door; embargoes to enforce article XVI of the League of Nations Covenant to punish aggressor nations; consultative pacts; bargaining tariffs at the expense of American labor; and as to reduction or cancelation of war debts only time will tell, as the Democrats have ignored the issue and apparently up to date have no definite policy except that "we will confer with you later." In the meanwhile, the war debts have been reduced another 25 percent by going off the gold standard in spite of the Democratic platform pledge to preserve a sound currency at all hazards.

Europe has been informed by Messrs. Hull and Norman Davis that America will surrender her protective tariff, both of whom propose to tear down our tariffs and thus open wide the floodgates of cheap European and Asiatic goods to further create unemployment in the United States.

The Republican Party, although not invited to participate in the Washington conferences, stands on international issues where it has always stood—against international alliances and entanglements, and places the safety and interests of the United States first, last, and all the time. The Republican Party is opposed to entrance into the League of Nations or to giving the President power to place embargoes against an aggressor nation, which would destroy the time-honored neutrality policy of our country proclaimed by George Washington in 1793 and adhered to since then by every President. The Republicans in the House of Representatives regard the proposed embargo on arms power to the President to be dangerous and revolutionary, tending to lead us into war instead of preserving peace.

The Republican national platform of 1932 is explicit in its opposition to cancelation of war debts, and for the preservation of the American standard of living and wages of the American wage earner through an adequate protective-tariff policy. The Republican Party will continue to stand for complete independence of action by the United States on all international issues and against involving our country in European affairs by entering the League of Nations or limiting or abolishing our traditional policy of neutrality. In opposition to the Democratic program, as recently developed, we stand without compromise on international issues, for American independence, American sovereignty, American neutrality, and American interests and safety.

Since 1920, under Republican administrations, such well-known and distinguished Democrats as Oscar Underwood, Owen Young, Bainbridge Colby, Joseph T. Robinson, Democratic leader of the Senate, and Claude A. Swanson, now Secretary of the Navy, have been appointed and served as delegates at important international conferences. With the exception of Senator James Couzens, who has pursued a nonpartisan course in Congress and refused to support the Republican Party candidates in the recent Presidential election, no Republican has been appointed as a delegate to the London Economic Conference.

I admit that if it were not for the blatant partisanship for the first time being deliberately thrust into foreign affairs, I would be reluctant to criticize the Democratic members; perhaps even now the less said, out of kindness, the better. None of the delegates have had any experience in international conferences or European affairs. None have any knowledge of foreign languages or have traveled extensively abroad or understand conditions there. In brief, the American delegation represents the new deal at the international conference, or innocence abroad and, naturally, the London Conference is doomed to failure.

Secretary Hull, a student of the tariff from a free-trade point of view in his many years of distinguished service in the House and Senate, never was on the Foreign Affairs Committee of either House, or showed any interest in international issues except as an advocate of the League of Nations. Senator KEY PITTMAN, of Nevada, the smallest State in population in the Union, has had considerable experience on the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations and may be an important factor in stabilizing currencies and fixing an equitable price for silver by international agreement. The only thing that can be said for the other members is that they are all adherents of the League of Nations and inclined to free trade. Two of the six members come from the State of Tennessee—Secretary Hull and Representative MCREYNOLDS—and in addition there is Mr. Norman H. Davis, our ambassador at large, who hailed likewise from Tennessee. The great States of New York, Pennsylvania, and Illinois are unrepresented, as is also New England.

Of course, the work of our delegates at the London Economic Conference has been considerably lessened as Mr. Norman Davis and Ambassador Robert Bingham have already committed us to scrap our traditional neutrality policy and to join the League of Nations in selecting the aggressor nations. I prefer to leave Mr. Davis to the tender mercies of my colleague, Representative TINKHAM, but cannot refrain from saying a few words about the recent address of Ambassador Bingham before the Pilgrim's Society, at which he declared the Roosevelt message recently delivered in Geneva regarding neutrality marked a definite departure from certain principles maintained by the United States since the Nation was founded. He said: "It does not contain a reservation retained by Great Britain in the Locarno Treaty. But from my standpoint I do not believe there is a 10-year-old child of average intelligence anywhere in the world who could fail in the event of war, to select instantly the aggressor." Mr. Bingham apparently does not realize that historians are still disputing as to which nation started the World War, or that no nation has been agreed upon as the aggressor nation for over a hundred years. It is this remark about the aggressor nation and the 10-year-old child that impelled Mr. Hearst, one of the leading Democratic campaigners in the recent election, to state publicly that he now understood the reason for the word "ass" in ambassador. Both Norman Davis and Ambassador Bingham have misrepresented the United States and should be recalled.

How can the American people expect anything from an international conference at which we have committed ourselves in advance to destroy our traditional policy of neutrality to enter a consultative pact, to apply embargoes against the aggressor, and to join in enforcing the most iniquitous provisions of the Versailles Treaty and the League of Nations? The conference opened at London yesterday with many social festivities, but it will not get down to serious work bfore tomorrow, when the war-debt payments to the United States are due. France has refused to pay her war debt to us, which only amounts to the sum which we loaned her after the armistice. Great Britain is threatening to default, and so is Italy, although we settled on a basis of 25 cents on the dollar, or much less than we loaned her after the war was actually ended.

William C. Bullitt, now an assistant to Secretary of State Hull, but a few months ago acting as an unofficial ambassador, informed European nations that they would not have to pay more than 10 percent of the war debts to the United States, which means that the American people, already overburdened with taxes, can pay the balance.

President Roosevelt has refused to permit the American delegates to the Economic Conference to discuss the war debts, which is the only big issue in the mind of every delegate atending the Economic Conference from European nations. The Economic Conference without a discussion of the war debts is like Hamlet without Hamlet. There are all kinds of rumors flying around Washington that the debtor nations propose to pay 10 percent of the amount of the installment now due, with the avowed purpose of establishing a precedent for a new settlement on a 10-percent basis for the payment of the principal. Such an offer would be an insult to the American taxpayers, who are already overburdened, and merely transfer the war debts upon their shoulders.

It is well to remember that the American people had no part in the origin of the World War, and that when we were forced into the war by the ruthless attacks of German submarines without warning on ships flying the American flag, we sent 2,000,000 soldiers to the European battlefield and turned the tide of defeat into victory. We asked for nothing and got just what we asked for, nothing at all—no indemnities, no reparations, no plunder, or no conquered territory.

The House of Representatives, in which war-debt settlements must be initiated, has shown no inclination to cancel or even reduce war debts until European nations agree to reduce their huge budgets for military and naval armaments. The overwhelming sentiment of both parties in the House is against any form of cancelation which will unload the financial burdens of the World War on the backs of the American taxpayers.

Secretary Hull has, since he arrived in London, made the most amazing public statement emanating from the Roosevelt administration—that we should loan more money to foreign nations—curiously overlooking the fact that these nations are the very ones which are repudiating their war debts to us. What is the magic of London and the Thames that bewitches the intellects of our American statesmen? Are its waters those of Lethe, that they should benumb the senses and befuddle the brain of our Secretary of State? Is the loan of $50,000,000 made to China, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, a part of the Hull foreign program? What is it that comes over an American statesman as soon as he gets abroad? Are the American taxpayers always to be shorn like lambs and pay for European armaments? Why should we loan a penny to any foreign nation until we can balance our Budget, put our own house in order, and pay our just debts to our own war veterans with service-connected disabilities? Germany just a few days ago declared a moratorium on all interprestidigitation further into opposition territory.

Some weeks ago the President declared that he looked upon government as a football team which, if it failed to make gains by certain plays ought to try some others. As this was spoken the American collegiate Cabinet team was in a huddle, trying to devise some new shifts which might advance the ball of its political prestidigitation further into opposition territory.

In addition to our 5 Democratic delegates and Senator COUZENS, there are 45 advisers, economists, statisticians, secretaries, and stenographers, and 15 relatives of members of the party. Numerically we ought to be able to present an entire football team, with Mr. Rexford Guy Tugwell, of the "brain trust," as quarterback.

The backfield has now fallen back to receive the kick-off from Europe. Our plays are to be international, financial, and economic. The game has started and the ball is in the air; but I know of one famous game in the Rose Bowl in California a few years ago where one of the best players caught the ball and ran in the wrong direction, only to make a touch-down against his own team. I fear this is what will happen to President Roosevelt's new team of delegates to the Economic Conference at London; I fear that Norman Davis, Ambassador Bingham, or even Secretary Hull or his substitute, Mr. Moley, may at any moment make a touch-down in Europe's favor. This has invariably happened in these international football games when our team gets its signals mixed with foreign entanglements or forgets to play the game according to sound American principles and traditions.

The American team, composed almost entirely of free-traders and advocates of the League of Nations, are apt to lose their shirts, or, in football language, their jerseys, on the kick-off. There is not a member of our team under 60, and I am afraid they cannot last the first quarter. At any rate, the American team, individually and collectively, will be lucky to emerge from the London Conference gridiron with any more clothes than Mr. Gandhi. We can then have the satisfaction of saying, with true American collegiate spirit, as is often done after the opposition team has triumphed by a score of 50 to 0, "Didn't our boys put up a plucky and courageous fight?" It might be advisable for Congress, before adjournment, to appropriate a thousand dollars of any unexpended sums in the Treasury to furnish barrels free to the American delegation to the London Economic Conference and to its large staff to come home in in case of emergency. The Congress should see to it that these barrels are made in America and no duty or embargoes shall be laid against the reentry of said barrels and contents.

There is scarcely a single foreign policy on which I see eye to eye with President Roosevelt which will be discussed at the London Conference. I am out of sympathy with the attempt of the President to involve the United States in foreign entanglements, consultative pacts, embargoes, or having the United States act as an enforcement agent for the League of Nations and the Versailles Treaty. Every time we stick our fingers in the European pie, instead of pulling out a plum, we are more apt to lose our fingers or pull out some high explosives. We should cease passing moral judgments on other nations and stop meddling in their affairs. There never was a time in our history when it was more important for the safety and welfare of our own people to mind our own business and put our own house in order. Let us cooperate with European nations and all other nations for the preservation of world peace, but let us be sure that we do not become entangled in every foreign dispute and committed to participate in future European or Asiatic wars. Thank you and good night.

MEMORIAL ON SAN JACINTO DAY

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, leave having been granted to Members to extend their own remarks in the RECORD, I desire to place in the RECORD a speech that I delivered to the Texas Club on San Jacinto Day. The speech is as follows:

It is always fitting for Texans to commemorate the immortal victory of San Jacinto. It is especially so today, when the destructive forces of want, hunger, and unemployment are threatening to undermine our economic and political stability. In the midst of this economic upheaval, when our patriotism, intelligence, and courage are subjected to the supreme test, it is right that we should borrow from the past the faith, courage, and idealism that gave to Texas her freedom, to history a new galaxy of illustrious heroes, and to the Union the brightest jewel in her diadem of States.

In spite of the gloom and discouragement of the present, the people of Texas have every reason to be optimistic for the future. No Texan can take a despondent view of the future who considers how our pioneers braved the dangers of the trackless wilderness, laid deep and strong the institutions of freedom, and bequeathed to their children the priceless boon of liberty. The glory of adventure was in their eyes and the glory of hope in their souls. They had the hearts of vikings and the simple faith of a child—men who were strong and resistless, unthrottled by fear or defeat. They were awed but not dismayed by the awful gloom of the forest, and the deep silence only broken by the fierce cry of the panther, the cooing of the dove, or the soft murmuring of winding streams. The forest and plains imparted to them courage and independence. They were imbued with the spirit of self-reliance, and they were dominated in their activities in peace and their valor in war by one master passion, the maintenance inviolate of their liberty and independence. Accustomed every day to the constant presence of dangers and the habitual exercise of courage, they were girt for every combat and strong for the red rage of battle. When Santa Anna sought to extend his despotic sway over Texas, these pioneers rallied to the battle cry of the Republic, and plunged fearlessly into the mad whirlpool of blood. To save Texas from the sumptuary sway of Mexican imperialism which, having enthralled the moral, political, and intellectual life of Mexico sought to fix its greedy talons upon the fair domains of Texas, the pioneers of Texas fought and died and dedicated their lives upon the altar of their country.

By reason of their undaunted courage, rugged faith, and heroic valor, they left to us a great empire. Our natural resources and material wealth are so great that not even the imagination of a poet can picture the inevitable growth and development of our State. But far more priceless than our fertile lands, our rich oil and mineral deposits, and our industrial advantages is the heritage of the Alamo and the San Jacinto battlefield. What we may say in tribute to their memory will soon be forgotten. But never will the world forget, so long as mankind values courage, self-sacrifice, and patriotism as the noblest attributes of the soul, the immortal words of Travis that climaxed his farewell message, "God and Texas, victory or death." These words will ring down the corridors of time to the remotest period and in the darkest hours they will give strength to the weak, courage to the wavering, and faith to the skeptical. At San Jacinto, with the fate of an empire depending upon the issue, our small army of heroic Texans charged and annihilated the flower of the Mexican Army. Our little band began playing the popular song of the time, one verse of which began with, "Will you come to my bower I have shaded for you." Reaching for the crest of the hill, the Texans opened fire and began yelling, "Remember the Alamo, remember Goliad."

The Texans rallied to that cry, and in 18 minutes the proud Mexican Army was routed and Texas became free. Facing, as we do today, enemies of a different kind, yet equally as menacing, is it not fitting that we should advance toward the summit of the hill with the noble sentiment of Travis in our hearts and the immortal battle cry of San Jacinto upon our lips?

Our foes may appear more insidious and numerous than theirs, but we are enriched by a century of experience, education, and observation that they did not possess. If the little band of Texans in the Alamo, handicapped, as they were, with the shortage of ammunition, men, and guns, could surpass the bravery and heroism of the Greeks at Thermopylæ, certainly we of today, with boundless resources of mind and matter, can acquit ourselves with honor and credit. We do not have Houston and Travis to lead us, but God has blessed us in our hour of need and given us a Roosevelt and a Garner. Under their matchless leadership we, as Americans and Texans, will prove to the world that we still remember the heroic valor, the undaunted courage, and the undying patriotism that the stalwart heroes of Texas immortalized at the Alamo and on the San Jacinto battlefield.

To their idealism and faith we turn once again for inspiration and courage. To their wise precepts we turn for wisdom and knowledge, and from their illustrious examples we seek guidance and courage.

The impossibility of paying adequate tribute to our illustrious dead through mere words persuades me to conclude my brief address. They did not achieve independence and freedom through speech. Action was their motto and guiding principle. Action and not speech is the motto and policy of the present great leadership, and is the only hope for ultimate victory. And in order that we may emulate their example, and have action tonight and not speech, I bid you all au revoir, with my sincere hopes for a happy evening and a glorious sunrise.

THE MARCH OF THE MORGAN MILLIONS

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, back some twenty-odd years ago Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh, of Minnesota, talked and wrote about the Money Trust. He forced an investigation of that Money Trust, and the record may be read in the congressional report of the Pujo committee in three volumes.

In 1933 another investigation is on, and I venture nothing new of any great consequence will be uncovered that was not already known by the Pujo committee—the same interlocking directorates, the same House of J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., the same Money Trust, and the same wrongdoing and claiming that they are within the law, only later dates and larger figures, until we now learn that the House of Morgan controls more than $20,000,000,000.

I now want to pay tribute to the memory of a friend and a great man, Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh, whose vision and greatness was not fully realized in his day. July 20 is the birthday of this militant fighter for the people, and we ought to gather at Little Falls in the State park created by the State of Minnesota in honor of the Lindbergh family, there to do honor to his name and fame, for he was a great student of public affairs and a great man. He did his best, but the march of Morgan millions did not stop.

Drawn in from every corner of the land, and from every land beyond the seas, these millions came rolling into the coffers of the House of Morgan and other international bankers, and were marshaled and drilled to go forth and conquer America and the whole round globe. At the command of the marshal himself, they rolled forth over hills and mountains, through the valleys, and over the prairies of our fair land, dropping into the tills of great newspapers and magazines, great radio chains, mighty business houses; filling the pockets of lecturers and propagandists—to our undoing. They marched on, these Morgan millions; and for every dollar that rolled forth a string was led back to Wall Street and the lairs of the Money Trust, until free government trembles in the balance and democracy is in danger.

They demand the best blood of our sons to save their investments abroad. Whole cities and States are enslaved, and the Nation itself subjected. Who shall save us from the slavery of the Money Trust? The answer is a great national labor party. I should like to call that party "Farmer-Labor", as we do in Minnesota—a party rooted in the masses. Ninety percent of our people are farmers and workers by hand and by brain, cemented by veterans of all wars. The courage and daring of the soldier is needed now. This is no time to sleep. We must rouse ourselves to the defense of our own America. We must forget entanglements abroad and solve our domestic problems at home. No nation can carry a world on its back, not even at the command of the marshal of the Morgan millions. Stupid diplomacy must cease. Americanism must be revived—the Americanism of Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln. Standing on our own ground in mighty America, we can free ourselves. We can shatter our chains. We shall be free. Liberated by labor, inspired and strengthened, we shall build a greater, better, and happier America, an inspiration and an example to all the peoples of the earth.

THE HOUSE COMPROMISE ON VETERANS' LEGISLATION

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, one of the first bills passed by this session of Congress, now about to draw to a close, was the so-called "Economy Act." There were some excellent provisions in the Economy Act and there were also some that were at least questionable. Among the several provisions was one reducing all Federal salaries, including a $1,500 reduction of salaries of Members of Congress. One questionable provision was that relating to disabled veterans. Inasmuch as the President of the United States asked for the passage of the Economy Act and at the same time assured this Congress and the country that our disabled veterans would be treated humanely and justly, it was passed almost unanimously and without much debate. Because of my sincere desire to stand by our great and beloved President in his determination to place this Government on a sound and a stable basis and bring about complete economic recovery, and for the further reason that I was pledged to vote for all measures proposing to reduce expenses of government, I supported the Economy Act.

BUDGET DIRECTOR PROMULGATES UNREASONABLE RULES

When that part of the act relating to veterans was turned over to the Director of the Budget, sometimes referred to as the "Copper King", to administer—that gentleman who apparently knows little and cares less about the "forgotten man"—we began to realize that entirely too great a portion of the economy program was destined to fall on the weary backs of our disabled war veterans. But we were shocked and chagrined when the new Budget Director announced his rules relating to our disabled veterans. We saw the sorry spectacle of the halt, the lame, and the blind being turned out of Government hospitals without a moment's notice. We learned, to our amazement, that veterans who were actually bed-ridden, homeless, helpless, and without funds were turned out without mercy on a friendless world. We actually saw blind veterans who were hailed as heroes only a dozen years ago ordered to be kicked out of Government hospitals, where there are now hundreds of empty beds. We learned that this high, mighty, and all-powerful young Budget Director had ordered and decreed, under his merciless and unreasonable rules, that battle casualties have their compensation cut 40 to 80 percent. But he did not stop there. He went to work to cut off or unreasonably reduce compensation of helpless and dependent widows and orphans of our war veterans who died of service-connected disabilities. It is almost unbelievable and inconceivable the crimes that have been proposed to be committed in the name of economy.

MUST LIBERALIZE REGULATIONS

No sooner had those harsh, absurd, and unbearable rules and regulations been promulgated and announced by the Budget Director than a storm of protest came thundering to Washington from all over the land. Both in and out of Congress protests were heard and demands made that those unreasonably harsh rules be liberalized. I am glad to say that I was one of the first Members of this House to demand that we right, as far as possible, the terrible wrong done our disabled veterans in the passage of the Economy Act.

Speaking on the floor of the House on May 5 last, in support of my Concurrent Resolution No. 17, and in opposition to frenzied application of the economy knife in cutting veterans' benefits by the Director of the Budget, I pointed out that Director Douglas had gone far beyond what Members of Congress who voted for the act felt would be the extreme limit of the burden to be imposed on veterans. I demanded that the rules promulgated by Douglas be liberalized at the earliest possible moment.

Continuing to discuss the subject, I said:

Mr. Speaker, I think I am voicing the sentiment of not only the ex-service men throughout the Nation but of all patriotic citizens of all creeds and political faiths when I say that the country will hold to account this Congress and those responsible for this legislation and for administering same if the men who bore the brunt of the World War, as well as Spanish War veterans, are automatically cut off and treated inhumanely and unsympathetically, as Director of the Budget Douglas and General Hines seem determined to do.

SHOULD REMAIN IN SESSION UNTIL CHRISTMAS OR GIVE VETERANS RELIEF

Again I discussed this subject briefly on the House floor, as shown in the RECORD of May 26. Among other things, I said on that occasion:

I desire at this time to enter another protest against the heartless, cruel, cold-blooded, and unreasonable manner in which those officials in charge of administering the veterans' laws propose to deal with our helpless and disabled war veterans. I could give this House dozens of instances of injustices that are proposed to be made in connection with veterans whom I know personally, but I shall not do so at this time. As one who reluctantly voted for the Economy Act because of assurances given me by those in whom I had the utmost confidence, and because of my sincere desire to stand by our great President, I say here and now that I shall insist that this House remain in session until Christmas, if need be, in order to correct the wrong that is evidently about to be done to many of our disabled war veterans unless drastic action is taken before June 30.

May I add that, fearing the President had received much misinformation on the subject of veterans' affairs from some of those whom he trusted, I have taken the liberty to discuss the matter with him on several occasions, and I am glad to say that our Chief Executive has shown deep interest in the disabled veteran, and has insisted from the beginning that he desires to see every service-connected disabled veteran adequately cared for.

HOUSE COMPROMISE BILL

A few days ago, after a committee comprised of several Members of Congress, in whom this House has the utmost confidence, had conferred several times with the President of the United States and had reached an agreement, the House passed a compromise resolution proposing to liberalize considerably the rules and regulations I have referred to relating to our disabled veterans.

This compromise bill that seems destined to pass is not all that many of us had fervently hoped for by any means, but it does propose to place 300,000 service-connected disabled war veterans back on the rolls who had been notified they would be cut off entirely. It proposes to restore 36,325 widows and orphans of veterans who passed to the great beyond because of service-connected disabilities. It keeps on all the presumptives pending a review of their cases by a new board to be appointed by the President, and the burden of proof will fall on the Government to show that such cases are not, in fact, of service origin. And so, feeling that half a loaf is better than nothing at all, I have reluctantly decided to join such outstanding veterans as WRIGHT PATMAN, of Texas, and GORDON BROWNING, of Tennessee, who served on the special committee appointed to confer with the President in supporting the House compromise bill.

The Senate, after much debate, refused to concur in the House resolution and has sent to the House what is known as the "Steiwer-Cutting amendment", which is more liberal in some respects than the House compromise. On the other hand, under the Steiwer-Cutting amendment it would be possible to place back on the rolls every retired officer without cutting his retirement pay a dollar. When Congress passed the Officers' Retirement Act we were told there would be some 700 emergency officers to come in under the law, but because of a decision rendered by the Attorney General of the United States more than 7,000 emergency officers were placed on the rolls, and as a result we have seen many able-bodied men, wealthy or with good positions, driving their expensive cars and at the same time pulling down handsome salaries in the form of retirement pay of from $200 to $800 per month. This retirement-pay abuse has been unreasonable and unconscionable and cannot be defended. Now, however, this pay roll of 7,000 retired officers has been reduced to less than 1,500 under the Economy Act.

Mr. Speaker, I do not hesitate to say that I would much prefer the Connally amendment to the Steiwer-Cutting amendment, or what is known as the "House compromise", but the Conally amendment was never voted on in the House of Representatives, and we were told it awaits a veto if it should be passed by Congress. I do not pretend to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am at all satisfied with the pending compromise, but I am convinced that, so far as the present session is concerned, it is necessary for us to take that or nothing at all. As the old darky said, "I had rather take a little o' somethin' than to get all o' nothin'."

The President has stated flatly that he would veto the Connally or Steiwer amendment, and personally I do not care to accept the responsibility of keeping 300,000 worthy disabled war veterans from receiving compensation nor for aiding in keeping more than 36,000 widows and orphans from the rolls of veterans who died of service-connected disabilities. We also realize that $15 per month is not much for a 55-year-old needy Spanish War veteran who is 50 percent disabled, but is unable to show service connection, and yet that is better than nothing. When such friends of the veterans as PATMAN and BROWNING say this pending compromise is the very best possible to secure now, I am willing to take them at their word and support the compromise. Many veterans in Oklahoma have written and wired me to support the very best bill possible to secure, but to make every effort to prevent Congress from adjourning without doing anything for our disabled veterans, many of whom will be thrown upon charity if cut off entirely July 1.

THERE WILL BE ANOTHER DAY FOR VETERANS

Permit me to say I was deeply impressed with the speech of our beloved and venerable member of the committee from North Carolina, Mr. POU, who reminded us that there is going to be another day; that when Congress reconvenes next January there will be more favorable veteran legislation. Let me say that I give notice here and now that I also expect to join in every reasonable movement to further liberalize the Douglas-Hines rules and also to further modify or repeal that part of the Economy Act that is being administered so unfairly to our disabled veterans and their widows and orphans.

When Congress meets again next January, or possibly before, I am confident it will not be such an uphill fight to secure more favorable consideration for our disabled veterans. But our leaders will no doubt demand to know how and where we propose to get the money. In that connection I call attention to House Resolution 4366 introduced by me in the early part of this session, and which has been sleeping peacefully in the Committee on Ways and Means for several weeks. It proposes to tax sales of stock exchanges and, if passed, would bring into a depleted Federal Treasury about $400,000,000 every year. I here and now, in the closing hours of this session, give notice that I shall renew my fight when Congress reconvenes to force the Wall Street stock gamblers, many of whom were war profiteers, to pay a more just share of the burdens of government, and thus aid in caring for our disabled veterans.

TAX WAR PROFITEERS AND INCOME-TAX EVADERS

If it is only a question of getting the money then I respectfully suggest that Congress might pass a real income-tax bill with teeth in it. If the Mellons, the Mills, the Mitchells, and the Morgans, and other tax evaders and war profiteers will pay their just share of income taxes, there will be no more deficits in the Federal Treasury. If the Wall Street crowd, with its bloated bondholders and those with tax-exempt securities could be brought to justice there would be an unprecedented surplus in the Treasury. All our disabled and battle-scarred veterans could be treated humanely. Widows, orphans, and aged dependents of our disabled veterans could be adequately cared for by this Government, and there would be a sufficient oversupply of money in the Treasury to pay every veteran in the United States of America his bonus in cash.

THE SUPREME PURPOSE OF ALL LAW IS TO ESTABLISH SOCIAL JUSTICE. THE BASIC PROBLEM IN ALL ENLIGHTENED GOVERNMENTS IS AN ETHICAL PROBLEM, AND WHEN SOCIAL JUSTICE AND EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES ARE SECURED FOR ALL CITIZENS AND ALL VOCATIONAL GROUPS, THE ULTIMATE END OF GOVERNMENT SHALL HAVE BEEN ACCOMPLISHED

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, recently I received a large number of letters from Columbia, Mo., protesting against any increase in taxes. These letters were written on plain paper, some were from workingmen and workingwomen, and obviously all were from persons in humble stations of life. The similiarity of the language justifies the inference that they were written at the suggestion or by the procurement of some person who was taking advantage of their credulity to create a false impression and perhaps engender a spirit of bitterness or class hatred.

While doubtless all these letters were from good people who perhaps have just complaints against the ever-increasing cost of government, and who have suffered under our highly artificial and maladministered economic system, yet in all probability the writers of these letters pay very little if any Federal taxes, and the taxes of which they complain are levied by the State, county, city, and school districts for State and local purposes, and with the levying of which Congress, the President, or the United States Government has nothing to do.

On reflection the writers of these letters will doubtless realize that taxes on their farms, homes, and personal property are not imposed by Congress, but by the State, county, or city governments, or by school districts. In fact the tax load that is crushing the masses, or so-called "common people or middle classes" are what we call local taxes levied by the States or some subdivision or agency of the State Government. Not one person in fifty pays a Federal income tax. The masses do pay certain excise taxes imposed by the Federal Government, for instance on autos, auto parts, and accessories, trucks, radios and phonographs, mechanical refrigerators, firearms and shells, sporting goods and cameras, matches, candy, chewing gum, soft drinks, toilet preparations, furs, and jewelry. Taxes on these items are least objectionable if we are compelled to resort to excise taxes to help meet our national expenses. These excise taxes yield approximately one half billion dollars revenue, and while many of these taxed articles are in a sense considered necessaries, the bulk of these taxes do not fall on the poor but are paid by the people of wealth, or by the middle classes who are better able to bear this increased burden than the workingman or those in the humbler walks of life. On oil and gasoline a heavy tax is levied, but the major portion of this tax is imposed by States and municipalities, and only a small part of the revenue from oil and gasoline finds its way into the Federal Treasury.

The United States Government for its principal source of revenue relies on import or tariff taxes and on taxes on the net incomes of individuals, corporations, and big business or organizations and on inheritances, estates, and gift taxes. In 1929 only 4,000,000 men and women filed individual income-tax returns, and less than two and one half million had incomes that were taxable; or, to speak with more accuracy, on the face of the returns less than two and one half million persons in the United States had incomes that were subject to taxation. In other words, in the prosperous year of 1929 only 1 person in 50 in the United States paid an income tax to the Federal Government. These two and one half million individuals had a net income of approximately $25,000,000,000.

That same year 509,000 corporations filed returns showing a net income of approximately $11,000,000,000, but only 269,000 showed taxable incomes. The two and one half million individuals who in 1929 had twenty-five billion net income paid the Government $1,000,000,000 income taxes, while the 509,000 corporations that had a net income of $11,000,000,000 paid $1,000,000,000 income taxes.

But I am glad to get these letters from these good people, many of whom are doubtless on the borderland of penury, and who are the victims of social injustice and who are suffering from the evil effects of an economic system that has inequitably distributed the burdens and benefits of Government.

Like them, I am opposed to increasing taxes. Like them, I favor a radical reduction in the expenses of government—Federal, State, and local. I have vigorously cooperated with President Roosevelt in measures that for the next fiscal year will reduce Government expenses one fourth, or $1,000,000,000. In my 10 years in Congress I have consistently and continuously, by voice and vote, endeavored to protect the Treasury of the United States from raids, and have thrown my influence in favor of rigid economy in the conduct of our Government and in the expenditure of public funds.

The supreme purpose of all law is to establish social justice. The basic problem in all enlightened governments is an ethical problem, and when social justice and equal opportunities are secured for all citizens and all vocational groups the ultimate end of government shall have been accomplished.

Our business, economic, and governmental policies should be so impartial, ethical, and equitable that they will not create on the one hand an oligarchy of wealth and privilege and on the other hand produce a sullen mass of rags and misery. The great gulf fixed between those who are exceedingly rich and those who are distressingly poor can and should be narrowed and bridged by sound and just business policies and a more equitable distribution of the benefits and burdens of government.

Unquestionably the American people have a just complaint against the Federal, State, county, and city governments, all of which have in the last 12 years unreasonably increased the cost of government and the burdens of taxation. Before the World War the Federal, State, and municipal governments were, as a rule, conducted on an economical basis and the contribution of the average citizen toward the expenses of government was so small as not to constitute a burden.

But following the World War not only the United States Government but all State, county, and municipal governments embarked on a career of prodigality and wastefulness in the expenditure of public funds which, of course, necessitated an enormous increase in taxation. All governmental agencies seemed to proceed on the theory that money grew on trees and that there was no limit to the capacity of the American people to pay taxes. Federal taxes were increased, State taxes were increased, city taxes were increased, county taxes were increased, an increase all along the lines, to provide funds to meet the lavish and grossly excessive expenses of our local, State, and National Governments.

For 12 years the American people have been living in a fool's paradise, spending money like a crew of drunken sailors, taking no thought of the morrow, and seemingly not realizing that this saturnalia of extravagance, this hurricane or prodigality, this bacchanalian dissipation of our resources could not continue forever, and that sooner or later they would reach the limit of their resources, the dance would be over, and the time would come for them to pay the fiddler.

In 1932 the income of the American people was approximately $60,000,000,000. All governmental expenditures that year approximated $15,000,000,000, or one fourth of the total national income. That is to say, $1 out of every $4 earned by the people of the United States in 1932 was required to pay taxes levied by the Federal, State, city, and county governments, or by other governmental subdivisions of the States. Of the $15,000,000,000 taxes paid in 1932, $4,000,000,000, or approximately 30 percent, were for taxes levied by the United States Government, and $11,000,000,000, or 70 percent, were for taxes levied by States, counties, cities, school districts, and other subdivisions of the State governments.

The increase in the expenses of the United States Government has been much less than the increases in the cost of State, county, city, and local governments. Of the $4,000,000,000 expended by the United States Government in 1932, $3,000,000,000, or three fourths of all expenditures, were on account of war debts, expenses of the Military and Naval Establishments, and for pensions and compensation benefits to war veterans, and $1,000,000,000, or one fourth of the total governmental expenditures, were for all other Government costs.

In 1932 the major expenditures of the Federal Government were approximately as follows:

One billion dollars, interest on Liberty bonds and other Government securities; $1,000,000,000 to veterans of all wars and their dependents; $1,000,000,000 to Federal employees; $1,000,000,000 for miscellaneous items, including all other Government expense.

Most certainly I favor a reduction of taxes by the Federal Government, but at the same time the people should demand a substantial reduction in State, county, and local taxes, because the larger part of our tax load comes from local rather than Federal taxation. I am glad to know that the park administration has radically reduced State expenditures, which, of course, means a substantial reduction of taxes in Missouri.

Since 1921 the total annual cost of government—Federal, State, and local—has increased from ten to fifteen billion dollars. The chief reasons for the higher cost of government are as follows: In the States one half of all revenues was spent on the public construction of highways and buildings and education. In the Federal Government 70 percent was expended on the war debt, for the maintenance of our Army and Navy, and for pensions and compensation to veterans of all wars and their dependents.

A recent Senate investigation showed that Mr. Morgan and his business associates and many other owners of great fortunes have for many years wrongfully avoided payment of income taxes and have not been contributing their just proportion of the expenses necessary for the maintenance of our institutions.

This indefensible practice, this unpatriotic and unethical conduct has been suspected for many years; but under the sinister and cynical administration of the Treasury Department by Mr. Mellon, tolerated if not directly sanctioned by Presidents Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, these malefactors of great wealth, these financial pirates, these economic freebooters have been protected by technical Treasury rulings, and by ambiguous and ingeniously constructed provisions in our revenue laws, and thereby exempted from their just and equitable proportion of the tax burdens of this Nation. This long-protracted governmental favoritism, this unconscionable sheltering of predatory wealth from its fair and just obligations to the Government, this thinly disguised covenant between the Republican administrations and tax-evading money kings has excited Nation-wide indignation and shocked the conscience of all right-thinking, right-acting people. It is inconceivable that these great masters of finance and captains of industry who have exploited the American people, maladministered its financial and economic affairs, plundered the poor, and monopolized the wealth and prosperity of the Nation should be so dead to all sense of shame, so ungrateful, unpatriotic, unappreciative, and unwilling to contribute their just share of the funds necessary to maintain the Government that protects them, and under which they have accumulated their colossal fortunes.

In conclusion, may I add that the Democratic Congress has enacted a law to cure the shameful situation disclosed by the Morgan investigation. Under this new law Morgan and his ilk will no longer be able to manipulate their profits and losses so as to avoid income taxes. The Roosevelt administration has set itself to the task of stopping the leaks in the income-tax system to the end that men may pay taxes in proportion to their ability to pay, and in line with the benefits that accrue to them under our economic and governmental systems. Congress is loyally supporting the President in putting over a program that will insure a speedy return of prosperity and normal national life.

THE RECORD OF THE SPECIAL SESSION OF THE SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, no peace-time session of the Congress ever enacted more important and far-reaching legislation than this special session. This program of legislation was enacted under the able and courageous leadership of our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, who stands out today as the world's greatest statesman. Members of the House and the Senate also share in the credit for this remarkable performance, for by their untiring and ceaseless efforts the emergency program was carried through both Houses with expedition and dispatch.

Every platform pledge has been kept and every preelection promise fulfilled. The economic crisis has been checked, business is already improving, and the American people face the future with faith and confidence. Some mistakes may have been made; others may remain to be corrected; but in the main the "new deal" has brought order out of chaos, and the people will enjoy a new concept in the social order in our economic life and in the fundamentals of government.

As the representative of the people of the Forty-second Congressional District of the State of New York, to whom I have the honor of making this report, I supported the following important measures:

1. The Industrial Recovery Act.
2. The public-works program.
3. The modification of the Volstead Law.
4. The resolution for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment.
5. The emergency banking legislation.
6. The Farm Relief Act.
7. The Muscle Shoals-Tennessee Valley Authority.
8. The Wagner human-relief appropriation.
9. The creation of national employment agencies.
10. The emergency railroad legislation.
11. The Farm Loan Mortgage Act.
12. The Home Loan Mortgage Act.
13. The Securities Regulation Act.
14. Banking and currency reform.
15. The revenue-producing proposals.
16. The reduction of postage rates.
17. The bill authorizing the President to reduce and consolidate Federal agencies.

In supporting the above measures I have a personal feeling of satisfaction because in the main they conformed in their purposes to my ideas. The rights of our workers were recognized and the farmers of our country were given well-merited attention.

I opposed the legislation with regard to the St. Lawrence River because I believe this project to be detrimental to the welfare of my State and the people I represent. I also opposed the provisions contained in the House economy bill and favored the Senate draft of this measure because it was more just and humane.

I desire to comment briefly on a few of the important measures which I have enumerated above.

PROHIBITION

The passage of the resolution calling for the repeal of the eighteenth amendment and the legislation to modify the Volstead Law received my hearty support, for I have been an advocate of repeal and modification ever since this mistaken policy was adopted by our Government. Already revenues are beginning to pour into the Federal and State treasuries, temperance is increasing, and a better order prevails.

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY

This legislation was designed to increase employment opportunities, to shorten the work periods, to insure a decent wage for our workers, to prevent unfair competition, and to regulate and control production.

I sincerely hope this all-important legislation will receive the enthusiastic cooperation and support of industry throughout the United States.

RAILROAD LEGISLATION

In order to maintain an adequate national system of transportation the President recommended the enactment of the emergency railroad-transportation measure. Included in this legislation are provisions safeguarding the rights of our faithful railroad employees, and the public interest must likewise be given proper consideration in connection with the administration of this act.

MUSCLE SHOALS

Since the termination of the World War attempt after attempt has been made to dispose of this great utility located on the Tennessee River in the State of Alabama. In this session of Congress, under the leadership and with the support of our President, we were successful in creating the Tennessee Valley Authority and endowing that agency with power to operate this giant enterprise in the public interest.

PUBLIC WORKS

As an advocate ever since the beginning of the depression of a public works' program which would give our people opportunity to secure employment, I very enthusiastically supported the public works bill.

This bill carries an appropriation of $3,300,000,000, and it is estimated that by October 4,000,000 of our people who are now without work will be gainfully employed.

BANKING AND CURRENCY REFORM

Among the important accomplishments to be included in the record of this session of Congress should be listed the legislation regulating our banking institutions and controlling the currency.

Under this heading can be listed the approval of the bank holiday, the repeal of the gold clause in an existing statute, the inflation amendment written into the farm bill, the guaranty of bank deposits, the recognition of silver in our monetary system, granting authority to the President to reduce the content of the gold dollar, the regulation of securities in interstate commerce, the suspension of home-loan-bank powers, subjecting foreign bond issues to the approval of the State Department, and the separation of banks from investment affiliates.

Other noteworthy measures include the reforestation project, the creation of national employment agencies, tariff adjustments, and the appropriation of $500,000,000 for the relief of States and municipalities.

Among the legislation which was not enacted, although considered at this session of Congress, were the arms-embargo resolution and the St. Lawrence Waterway Treaty.

I shall not attempt in this statement to go into detail in explaining the provisions of the measures cited above, nor shall I be able to mention each and every bill which was considered; but I believe it is sufficient to say that the program of the President has been adopted, that the Members of Congress—irrespective of party, placing patriotism above partisanship—have won the war against depression, and that Congress can adjourn with the satisfaction of knowing that they have clothed the President and the administration with adequate powers to bring the country back to prosperity again. Under the inspired leadership of our President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and with the cooperation and support of the patriotic citizenship of the Republic, we are winning the fight.

SUMMARY OF SPECIAL SESSION OF SEVENTY-THIRD CONGRESS

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, the special session beginning the Seventy-third term of Congress, which was ushered in by President Franklin D. Roosevelt, bids fair to go down in history as a session of the greatest and farthest-reaching achievement of any session of Congress in the history of the United States. President Roosevelt, in my opinion, will be accorded a place in history along with the greatest, if not the greatest, of our Presidents.

It would be too much to think and contend that every piece of legislation proposed by the new President and enacted into law by the Congress and by the President's signature would result in doing all that would be hoped for it. No one is always right on every subject. No batter makes 100 percent every day. The batting average is what counts, and in order to make a batting average one first must play ball. By that I mean there must be activity. The new President, Franklin D. Roosevelt, showed his metal in his inaugural address; that is, he pointed the way, making clear, concise statements, which were followed through the entire special session and which resulted in a dizzy pace, which was responded to by the Congress in a fashion and manner seldom, if ever, witnessed in our history.

The people had grown tired of inactivity. They were tired of the Government sitting idly by while the house was afire. They were tired of seeing water and nourishment put on the leaves of the trees while the roots were starving, and the roots of the trees, by example, may be likened to the individual, to the people in the ranks—farmers, laborers, mechanics; in fact, people in all walks of life—who labor with their hands for a living or salary. Those were the people who were being neglected.

In my opinion, of all the splendid legislation enacted into law in this session the outstanding legislation which the future will record will be the Industrial Recovery Act. The law was designed to put people to work, because as long as we have the many millions of unemployed and without any purchasing power there can be no prosperity and there will not be a market for the products of the farm. I heartily endorsed that measure; in fact, I have stated time and again that either our Government take the lead in finding employment for our people or our recovery would be long and painful. In fact, in an address in Bedford, Ind., on November 19, 1931, I made the following statement:

> I believe a bond issue at this time of from $2,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 would bring money out of hiding from those who are frightened, spend it for Federal road building, public improvement, etc., and this would, I believe, break the back of this depression or panic.

Which speech, with this statement, was inserted in the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under remarks of Congressman ARTHUR H. GREENWOOD on January 7, 1932.

It has been stated many times that this depression or panic is equal to or as bad as a state of war. We all know what our Government would do in a state of war. They would not stop for anything. They would not spare any sum of money. Everything would be done with a purpose of winning; and if it cost two billion, five billion, ten billion, or twenty-five billion dollars, the money would be raised and spent to pursue and win the war. This industrial depression and panic is in many respects more devastating than war, so why should we have waited these 3 years to get started doing the things necessary for a return of prosperity?

Following this terrible depression and panic, when the country returns to prosperity and when large institutions begin making enormous sums again, high income-tax returns, so drafted and constructed that they will actually get the money, should be kept in effect and the swollen fortunes and incomes that have made vast sums through and because of the World War be made to pay those immense sums of indebtedness caused by the war, and those enormous profits hereafter made be paid in generous amounts into the Federal Government with which to pay off speedily the immense debt accumulated during the World War and during this panic which we have been passing through which has accumulated additional indebtedness.

GLASS-STEAGALL BANK BILL

The next in importance, in my opinion, will be found to be the new bank bill. This bill is far-reaching legislation, and legislation that this country was sorely in need of. True, it will cause much reorganization of banks, and occasionally here and there may be a bank which will not benefit by the act, or apparently will not, but such banks will be few and far between, and these banks, by adhering to the Government regulations, will in the end profit by same.

The one phase of this in which I was tremendously interested was that small banks and State banks be fairly dealt with. That was one of the hardest fought battles of that legislation, for the reason the big banking interests in the cities were not in favor of legislation which would strengthen the small banks in the small towns. The legislation does not include at the present time everything that some of us desire; but the proponents of the bill, at least the ones in the House whom I have talked to, inform me that banks now in existence which are sound, even though they are smaller in capitalization than is required by the legislation for banks being recognized hereafter, and that banks not now members of the Federal Reserve will be given until January 1 to carefully go over the situation. They also point out that during the next 2½ years there will no doubt be many clarifying changes and amendments which will be found necessary in order to take care of State banks and all smaller banks of the country.

In going over this with the chairman and ranking members of the committee, I pointed out to them that in many places in smaller communities and sparsely settled sections of the country a bank was almost indispensable to those communities; yet in many of them safe, sound, and prosperous banks are today in existence with very small capital, some as low as $20,000 capital stock and even as low as $10,000. In fact, I know of banks with capital of only $10,000 which are sound and have gone through and remained open and are today solvent and liquid. One in particular is a good illustration. This bank is operated by a personal friend of mine, Mr. N. B. Matthews, of Stanford, Mont., who has a small bank of only $10,000, I believe, capital stock. His bank is open, liquid, and prosperous, has never been closed except during the bank holiday, and is the only bank that has remained open for many miles in every direction. That is only one, but it serves an immense area; and it would not be fair to enact legislation which would cause this or other similar institutions to close or to increase their capital stock, which would cause an overcapitalization, which would not be profitable. I mention this one instance, and there are many such in the country.

Guaranty of bank deposits is a thing that should have been done many years ago. There is no more excuse or reason for not guaranteeing or insuring the depositors' money than there is to not insure one's home, his household goods, his automobile, his jewelry, his safe, or his valuable papers. Scarcely no one today would think of not carrying insurance on many things that can fairly well be taken care of, and that one can be reasonably sure they will not suffer loss on, yet to affect safety, they carry insurance. Banking and the depositors' money has been looked at from a peculiar slant by many. Quite within the law, one could place his money in a bank, the banker permitted and wholly within his rights to loan up to 85 cents on the dollar of that money, and the depositor well within his rights to come back at any time and demand his money. The banks were not expected to have this money in their vaults, hence in times of stress, people called for their money much faster than others deposited their money in the banks, hence the lack of faith and confidence in our banks. This lack of confidence was largely unfounded. The guaranty of bank deposits will do more to restore confidence in our banks and in our financial institutions than any or all other things combined.

The program of the President and Congress certainly exemplifies the return of the Government back to the people. From the beginning, one act after another has been in the interest of the masses and not of special interests. I am sure no one will mistake me in this mention of special interests. I realize as does many or all who have given these matters thought, that money and capital is needed for industry. It is to be desired, but like the powerful machine, it must be properly harnessed and properly controlled. It must not be turned loose to bring havoc and ultimately destruction to itself. This program brings relief to the oppressed farmers. It brings relief to the mortgaged farmers, relief to the home owners in the cities. Industrial relief, and relief will be given by the program to millions who are now unemployed.

The President has stated—

> This relief by business I mean the whole of commerce as well as the whole of industry; by workers I mean all workers, the white-collar class as well as the men in overalls; and by a living wage I mean more than a bare subsistence level. I mean the wages of decent living.

The result of action as against inactivity already shows unmistakable signs of recovery. It is expected that under the recovery act that a million additional men will be employed by October 1. This will start the wheels of industry moving. Already steel, which is one of the surest barometers of business, according to journals which make such surveys, show that the upturn in steel is indicative of such upturns of other years in the past, such as 1907 to 1909, and again 1920 to 1922, and by their charts they show those years and also indicate the upturn this year, which shows conclusively that the return of prosperity is coming surely and steadily. Their charts show April and May 1933 to have made the greatest turn at any time in recent years.

This has been brought about by a President of action, by a Congress which is willing to be led, and not only led but a Congress which is progressive in thought, action, and deed, and through it we are entering the threshold of the greatest and soundest prosperity that this country has known in many years.

A FEW OBSERVATIONS ON GOLD, THE TARIFF, AND THE LONDON CONFERENCE

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, the World Economic Conference at London leads each of us naturally to give some thought to its probable or possible results in relation to our own problems, as contradistinguished from world problems or the problems of other nations. This is not narrow nationalism, but our plain duty. President Roosevelt recognized this in his inaugural address when he said, in substance, that it was our duty to put first things first and to solve domestic problems before taking up international problems, although, of course, the latter were important and must in time be dealt with.

It is in this spirit and from this viewpoint that I approach a common-sense analysis of the questions to be determined by the World Economic Conference. The objectives of the Conference were stated by President Roosevelt on May 16, as follows:

> The Conference must establish order in place of the present chaos by a stabilization of currencies, by freeing the flow of world trade, and by international action to raise price levels. It must, in short, supplement individual, domestic programs for economic recovery by wise and considered international action.

Here we have stated the three objectives: (1) Stabilization of currencies, (2) freeing the flow of world trade, (3) international action to raise price levels. As unquestionably President Roosevelt is intensely interested in the World Economic Conference, we must assume that the three objectives stated are the utmost that he expects to attain from the Conference. We have a tremendous number of people out of work in this country. No one knows the exact number, but the figure being used in contemporary discussion is 15,000,000. It is conceded on every hand that we can have no economic recovery in this country until these unemployed, or the major part of them are restored to employment. This restoration to employment of our unemployed people is our major objective. Until that occurs prosperity cannot return.

Let us, therefore, consider the three stated objectives of the World Economic Conference, having in view at all times our national necessity to reemploy our unemployed. What is meant by stabilization of currencies? In a joint statement put out by the President and the Finance Minister of Italy (Mr. Jung) it was stated that the proper basis for currency is gold. Therefore we assume that when the President speaks of stabilization of currency he has in mind the stabilization of currency the basis of which is gold. All European countries and some Asiatic ones have a gold currency. This currency, like ours, is uniformly defined by statute in terms of weight and fineness. One of these factors, fineness, is already stabilized.

The monetary gold of Europe and the United States is interchangeable so far as the standard of fineness is concerned. For example: When Great Britain paid up her war-debt installment on December 15 the mechanical process was easy, although her unit of value is the pound and ours is the dollar, and the debt was payable in dollars. Nevertheless, to the satisfaction of both parties it was paid in gold, which was in dollars. It probably was gold bars of international standard of fineness and of a number of grains which, divided by the number of grains in our gold dollar, made the number of dollars required to be paid. Similarly, we can pay in gold our indebtedness to any European country on the gold standard by shipping over the necessary weight in gold bars.

The mintage of gold into dollars, pounds, francs, and so forth, adds no monetary value to the gold. Its value arises because it is gold of the required fineness and is not affected at all by the stamp on it of any country. Therefore the only thing left to be stabilized in the currencies is the weight. The present weight of our dollar is 25.8 grains nine tenths fine; of the British pound, 7.9881 grams; of the French franc, 65.5 milligrams. We are not interested in the weight of gold in any foreign country so long as no attempt is made to change it quickly to the disadvantage of our citizens who have outstanding contracts expressed in foreign currencies but without the gold clause. If an American citizen has a contract for the sale and delivery of merchandise in France of the value of, say, 100,000 francs and payable in French francs in the amount of 100,000 and with no gold clause in the contract, he is, of course, interested that the weight of the French franc remain such that it is worth 3.95 cents in our money. Except for such citizens we have no direct interest in whether the value of the French franc is 3.95 cents of 19.3 cents, as it used to be. When we calculate in French francs now we calculate roughtly about five times as many French francs as we used to count before the war, when the French franc was worth 19.3 cents in our money.

Conversely, foreign nations do not care whether our dollar remains as it is or doubles in weight or is halved, except for one reason, which I will give later. It is conceivable that a result of this Conference might be a multilateral treaty in which the weight of the gold currencies of each of the countries was stated and an agreement was made that that weight would be maintained. Such an agreement would be of some benefit, but rather limited in its beneficial results, as it would merely give our citizens the same assurance that they are able to give themselves now by putting the proper language in a written contract.

What forced other nations off the gold standard was not the weight of gold in their respective units of value but the fact that they were short of gold. A treaty merely attempting to stabilize currency by stating the amount of gold in the unit of value of each country will not give any country any more gold or relieve it of any trade disadvantage. Some people expect that a result of the Conference will be that we will reduce the amount of gold in our dollar. Not a single nation in the Conference will wish us to do that. The reduction of gold in the dollar would, for a time, do two things: (1) Unless wages and other costs were increased, it would reduce our cost of production and thus facilitate our exports, and (2) by making it necessary for any importer to have more of the decreased dollars to buy foreign goods, thus increasing their cost in dollars, it would make imports into this country more difficult. While I admit, at once, that this facilitation of exports and obstruction to imports may be temporary, it certainly will not do any foreign nation any good while it exists, and, therefore, no foreign nation is going into the Conference with the idea of insisting on any reduction in the weight of gold in our dollar.

Let us suppose, however, that there is a stabilization treaty, but that our normal relation of exports to imports continues and that, therefore, the balances of trade in our favor continue. These balances must be paid in some way. Between 1921 and 1930, roughly speaking, we paid them in the following ways: We loaned foreign nations $19,000,000,000 in gold; our tourists spent hundreds of millions in Europe; our citizens of foreign birth or ancestry, and also our resident aliens, sent millions back home. We paid freight to foreign steamship companies and insurance to foreign insurance companies, and, to some extent, we paid interest and dividends to foreign holders of our securities. They are fewer than they were. We are not loaning any more money abroad. Our tourists are few. Less immigrant money is going back. Less money is being paid to foreign steamship and insurance companies, and less money is being paid in interest and dividends to the foreign holders of our securities. Consequently trade balances must be paid in gold. This is being illustrated in a rather amusing way just at present.

President Roosevelt recently took us off the gold standard, and for a time our dollar shrank, but now it is rising, because foreign dealers must pay us. Their own countries will not permit them to export gold, and therefore they are obliged to bid for dollars, and consequently, under the operation of the law of supply and demand, the price of our dollars is rising until New York bankers are asking the Government to institute an equalization fund, so that the Government can buy foreign currencies and keep the price of the dollar from going above par. It is clear that there is nothing to be gained by any country through the mere stabilization of the weight of the currencies of all countries.

This brings us to the President's second point, "freeing the flow of world trade." That can mean nothing except exports and imports. In connection with this we must not lose sight of the fact that more than nine tenths of what we produce is consumed in our own country and that our export surplus seldom, if ever, has risen above 10 percent. Therefore we must be careful to do nothing to jeopardize the market for the nine tenths of what we produce. We have that and can keep it. As our exports never exceed 10 percent of our production, it must be assumed that the rest of the world collectively produce enough to satisfy nine tenths of its economic demand. The producers of this nine tenths, living in the other countries, are just as unwilling to lose their jobs as the producers of the nine tenths of our products that go into the home market are to lose their jobs. Human nature does not greatly differ. The rest of the world will not be benefited unless it can get greater access to our markets.

We are given to understand that the President is going to ask for power to reduce any of our tariff rates to an extent which does not exceed 50 percent of the present rate. If he does that it means, as Speaker RAINEY pointed out in the Seventy-second Congress (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 15, 1932, vol. 75, pt. 14, p. 15561):

> A horizontal lowering of our tariffs might result in our own markets being flooded with a torrent of cheaper-made foreign goods.

In other words, for this country more unemployment, more closed factories, lowered wages, and a reduced market for the products of the farm. Certainly that form of "freeing the flow of world trade" would not do us any good. What foreign country is going to lower its tariff rates, and on what products, to make up 10 times over for the opening of our markets by what Speaker RAINEY called "a horizontal reduction of our tariff rates"? I say 10 times over because that is a fair expression, considering the size of our home market as compared with any market accessible to us in any other country for any probable aggregation of increased exports from this country. Therefore there is practically no expression of any benefit to us from the first and second objectives of the World Economic Conference as stated by the President.

I am frank to say that I do not know what is meant by the phrase "international action to raise price levels." Real prices are fixed by the law of supply and demand and are incapable of being raised by international action. Trade in the last analysis is barter, with money merely as a yardstick. And no international agreement can make any foreign customer gives us more in real value for a bushel of wheat, for instance, than we are now getting. The last sentence, "It must, in short, supplement individual domestic programs for economic recovery by wise and considered international action", seems to me—and I make the statement with due regard to the high office of the President of the United States—words, just words.

For that portion of the President's statement of May 16 which deals with his desire to maintain and make permanent the peace of the world everyone has entire sympathy. Our own country has been a leader and a pioneer in that endeavor. I do not know just when our thought on that subject was first crystallized into legislative expression; but as early as June 25, 1910, our Congress, by a joint resolution authorized the then President of the United States, William H. Taft, to appoint a committee to meet with committees from other nations to work out, through an international police force, permanent world peace. It is a matter of known but unwritten history that President Taft offered to make Theodore Roosevelt the chairman of this committee with power to select his associates; that Mr. Roosevelt, on the trip which he took to Europe, sounded out other nations and found that some of the nations would not cooperate. The authorization to the President was for 2 years only; and upon receiving the reply which I have stated from President Roosevelt, he abandoned the effort to appoint the committee. Similar authority was conferred on President Wilson by the Congress in the Sixty-fourth Congress, but the World War put a tragic veto on the exercise of the power by him.

It is interesting to note that the power has never been repealed, but neither has it been exercised by any of President Wilson's successors. Later our country took an honorable and active part in the cause of world peace through the Washington Conference called by President Harding in 1921. Still later an honored citizen of Minnesota, Hon. Frank B. Kellogg, as Secretary of State, took a leading part in the movement which resulted in what is known as the Kellogg-Briand Pact. Still later President Hoover was instrumental in initiating the Limitation of Armaments Conference—erroneously alluded to by President Roosevelt as the Disarmament Conference—which is still in existence and soon to meet again at Geneva. Therefore this part of the President's statement is in strict accord with the unvarying policy of our Government, vigorously expressed, tenaciously adhered to, and pressed unceasingly on foreign countries for at least a quarter of a century. It is a noble purpose and to be considered entirely apart from its effect on unemployment and markets.

There are many questions involved in the problem of the reduction of standing armies by foreign nations. We have no rights in the premises except to make suggestions. In asking foreign nations to reduce the size of their standing armies we are limiting markets for our exports, and thus, to a certain extent, limiting employment in this country. To illustrate: France has a standing army of about 600,000 men. These men are being fed, clothed, and otherwise maintained by the Government at a minimum of expense and are not competing with other labor in France. To a certain limited extent they are consumers of our products. Let us assume that France reduces her standing army 50 percent. There is depression in France; and if to the present unemployed in France were to be added these 300,000 men relieved from army service, the competition for employment would be increased. The rates of pay, especially of common labor, would be decreased. The number of unemployed would be increased, and as those employed would have lost purchasing power, they could buy and consume less of our products.

Therefore, while the yearning for permanent peace has the approbation of us all, we are entitled to the commendation that comes from a highly unselfish act, because under present conditions the reduction in the size of armies in foreign countries would reduce the power of those countries to purchase our own products.

If, on the surface of things, there seems nothing hopeful as to results from the World Economic Conference, have we any other recourse looking toward putting our 15,000,000 unemployed to work? Fortunately, yes. I represent a farming district, and, nationally, we can take a lesson from what the pioneers in farming in Minnesota did. In the early days in Minnesota a farmer made his plans so that he and his own family would be assured of food, clothing, and shelter. That came first. The shelter might be, and sometimes was, a sod house; the clothing homespun; the food rough, coarse, but sufficient. After these needs were attended to, then came planning for the church and the school, and over, above, and beyond that, plans for sales from the farm resulting in a profit. We would do well as a Nation to follow this example. Providence has made us self-contained. We can produce nearly everything we consume; and everything which is consumed in the United States which can be produced in the United States ought to be produced here. I have consistently maintained the benefits of the protective tariff. Just now the legislation which should be passed is legislation which would impose against countries having depreciated currencies a tax on products coming into this country equal to the difference between the face value of their units of currency and the actual value. This would not increase any tariff. It would merely make the existing tariff mean what it says. Various estimates have been made of the number of people that this would put to work, some estimates running as high as 4,000,000. Suppose it only put 500,000 to work—even that would make a great improvement.

This is not a policy of isolation any more than the old time pioneer's policy was a policy of isolation. It is a policy of common sense. More than that, it is a policy of kindness to nations with which we compete, which, through lower wages, have a lower standard of living and to whom the export trade is more essential than it is to us. Whenever we send exports into markets in competition with such nations we bear down the price which they receive and help to lower the standard of living and keep down the wages of their people, as well as our own. Why should we continue to do it when we can live without it? Of course, I do not mean that our export trade should be abolished. There will always be articles for which there is a market at fair prices, and also a market for special products and special manufactures. What I do mean is that we would be better off if we devoted ourselves to building up our own industries, protecting them from foreign competition by an adequate and proper tariff, rather than by striving hopelessly to build up an export trade in markets where we compete with lower cost products and from most of which we can be shut out any minute by an increased tariff of the country to which the goods are going.

Further, and in line with the President's desire for peace, attention should be called to the fact that by doing this we greatly diminish our chances of being drawn into any foreign war. Practically all wars in the last century, at least all wars in Europe, have arisen from trade rivalries, and if we do not engage in trade rivalries, there will be no reason for foreign nations to involve us in another war. Very few good citizens ever get into trouble through minding their own business, and that is as true of nations as it is of individuals. The sooner we stop advocating a lot of experimental legislation relating to foreign nations and concentrate on looking after the needs of our own country the sooner our country will commence the climb, which is sure to come, back to a tranquil level of prosperity.

THE FEDERAL FARM MORTGAGE ACT

Mr. LOZIER. Mr. Speaker, in all the history of the world no administration and no government, whether a monarchy, autocracy, or republic, has done as much for the agricultural classes in any period of 50 years as the Roosevelt administration has done in the last 3 months for the American farmers. Ever since I entered Congress I have vigorously contended that our entire business, economic, and political structures would crumble and Nation-wide chaos be inevitable unless agriculture was placed on an economic equality with industry and other vocational groups.

Even when big business, banks, railroads, and the manufacturers were prosperous, in numerous speeches I pointed out that this prosperity was founded on a false basis and could not last unless the Government and big business changed their attitude toward agriculture and permitted the dirt farmers of the United States to share in our national prosperity. Many other Representatives and Senators from agricultural districts and States preached this same philosophy, but it fell on dull ears during the Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover administrations.

But with the advent of the Roosevelt administration the President and Congress gave immediate and thoughtful attention to the farm problem and proceeded to enact legislation wholesome in character and far-reaching in its benevolent results. One of the most revolutionary yet well-considered, benign, and beneficial measures enacted by the recent Congress is the Agricultural Adjustment Act, which provides for agricultural credits, liberalization of the Federal Farm Loan Act, the permanent refinancing of farm mortgage loans, and for short-time emergency loans to farmers, for all of which Congress provided a fund of $2,200,000,000.

Many Missouri farmers are anxious to refinance their farm mortgages, and I am making this brief statement in order that they may know what help the Government will give them and how advantage may be taken of the provisions of this act.

First, as to permanent refinancing of farm mortgages:

Under the new Farm Mortgage Act the Federal land banks are authorized to exchange Federal farm-loan bonds for mortgages on farm properties executed prior to May 12, 1933. The amount of bonds exchanged may not be more than the unpaid balance of the mortgage nor more than 50 percent of the value of the land and 20 percent of the value of the insured improvements.

If a Missouri farmer wishes to refinance his mortgage, he may write to Ernest J. Bodman, agent of Farm Loan Commissioner, Federal Land Bank, St. Louis, or to said land bank, or he may apply to the county correspondent of the Farm Loan Commissioner for blanks on which to submit his application. The correspondent will be in a position to assist the farmer in preparing his application and otherwise advising him in reference to the terms and conditions on which his farm loan may be refinanced. The county correspondent may charge the applicant $1 for preparing the application, but the farmer is not required to have his application made out by the correspondent.

An applicant will also be required to deposit $10 to cover expenses of appraisal. The county correspondent will send the application to Mr. Bodman or the Federal land bank, and if it is found that the application does not meet the requirements, no appraisal will be made and the $10 appraisal fee will be returned to the applicant. In other words, if a preliminary examination of the application shows that the security is inadequate, or if for other reasons it is apparent that the Government cannot make the loan, the appraisal fee is returned to the applicant and his total expense will be $1, the amount paid for preparation of his application.

From a preliminary examination of the application, if it appears probable that the loan may be made under the regulations, the land will be appraised and a decision reached as to the amount of loan that will be granted. The Federal land bank or Farm Loan Commissioner will then negotiate with the holder of the mortgage, and if the facts warrant, may require a reduction of the mortgage before exchanging Federal farm-loan bonds therefor. Of course, the mortgagee cannot be compelled against his will to discount his mortgage, but in many instances will be glad to do so in cases where the mortgage is nearly equal to or in excess of the value of the land. If the mortgagee consents to such reduction, the farmer gets the benefit thereof, and his mortgage for the reduced amount will then be extended over a long term of years at a low rate of interest. All loans that are accepted must be closed through the county correspondent.

Either the mortgagee or mortgagor may start negotiations for refinancing a farm mortgage. If the holder of the farm mortgage wishes to take advantage of this refinancing plan, he must apply to the office of the Commissioner or to the land bank. If the mortgage is more than the amount the Government can lend on the land, the mortgage holder may take a lesser amount of bonds bearing 4 percent guaranteed interest or cash in exchange for the mortgage down to the amount the Government can loan.

If the Government takes over the mortgage, the new rate of interest will be 4½ percent per annum. During the first 5 years no payment need be made on the principal, but thereafter a small part of the principal must be paid at each interest paying date.

If a farm has not previously been mortgaged, a new mortgage may be negotiated, with interest at 5 percent per annum, and no reduction in the principal need be made for 5 years, after which it must then be reduced periodically. If the farmer joins a "farm-loan association" organized in his community by the land bank and buys up to 5 percent of the amount of his mortgage of land-bank stock, the interest on his mortgage will be reduced to 4½ percent.

Second, as to emergency or short-time loans:

In addition to permanent refinancing of farm mortgages to which I have referred, the Farm Loan Commissioner can make special loans to farmers, as follows:

First. To refinance on better terms any existing indebtedness.

Second. To provide working capital.

Third. To enable the farmer to pay delinquent interest and taxes, or to avoid sacrificial foreclosure sales, or to redeem or repurchase farm property lost by foreclosure since July 1, 1931.

These loans will bear interest at 5 percent, the principal being paid off in 10 annual installments, commencing the fourth year. In all of such instances, if there is any indebtedness against the farmer, the holders thereof must, through the Commissioner, arrange to subordinate the claim to the new Government loan. These emergency or short-time loans may be secured by first or second mortgage on farm property, real or personal, including crops.

To be eligible for a Federal land bank loan, it is necessary that the owner be operating the farm or having it operated under his personal supervision. That is, he must live on the farm, or near enough to give it his personal attention, and be furnishing a part of the work stock, tools, equipment, seed, and so forth, used in operating the farm, or his principal income must be derived from farming.

CONCLUSION

Please understand that the element of safety must be considered by the Government in refinancing farm mortgages. While the Government will be liberal in its appraisals, it will, of course, refuse to make a loan in every case where the security is inadequate, or where the granting of such loan would ultimately mean a loss to the Government. In its efforts to help the farmers the Government will go as far as prudence and safety will permit, but the administration will not be justified in using funds collected from the people by taxation to make loans or guarantee interest where the security is not adequate.

The farm mortgages in the United States amount to more than $9,000,000,000. Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, $2,200,000,000 is made available to refinance farm mortgages, a sum less than one fourth of the total farm-mortgage indebtedness. So, it is apparent that the Government cannot refinance all farm mortgages, but it has made available a fund of more than $2,000,000,000 to take care of emergency cases, and refinance approximately one fourth of our farm mortgages over a long term of years and at a low rate of interest.

The financial condition of the Government and the Nation will not at this time permit the creation of a fund sufficient to refinance all farm mortgages, but the $2,000,000,000 provided will furnish relief, or perhaps salvation in most critical cases. No doubt some farmers will be disappointed and unable to have their loan refinanced, but many will be able to take advantage of the benevolent provisions of this act. I regret that economic conditions do not permit Congress to provide for refinancing all farm mortgages in the United States, but that would have required a fund of $9,000,000,000. Under existing conditions a bond issue for that amount could not possibly be floated. The President and Congress went as far as possible and should not be criticized because financial conditions would not permit them to make provision for a refinancing of all farm mortgages. Just as rapidly as conditions will permit, Congress will provide additional funds for this purpose.

Members of Congress will be glad to render farmers all possible assistance in refinancing their mortgages, but as all the details will be handled through the office of the Farm

Loan Commissioner and the Federal land banks, I suggest that farmers who desire to take advantage of this act, make direct contact with the county correspondent of the Farm Loan Commissioner.

SALARIES PAID TO RAILROAD EXECUTIVES

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, at this time, when pensions are being withdrawn from veterans suffering non-service-connected disabilities, when the personnel of the Government, from highest to lowest, is taking a 15 percent cut, when low-paid Government employees are being reduced to a salary point that makes life a tremendous struggle, when nearly every business in the country has been forced to make from one to three wage cuts, and when 14,000,000 unemployed are walking the streets, unable to secure any wage income at all, the question may properly be asked whether the salaries paid to many railroad officials of America ought not to be revised downward.

This question is peculiarly appropriate in view of the fact that vast sums of money from the Federal Treasury, raised by taxing all of the people, are being loaned to the railroads through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

I have no sympathy with those who make demagogical attacks on railroads, nor do I believe that the salaries of railroad officials should be unreasonably low. In view of the prejudice against railroad corporations, it may not be a popular statement to make, but nevertheless it is true that the railroads have been a factor of the very first importance in making America the great nation that it is.

It is difficult to visualize what the backward condition of the country would be today if we had had no railroads. I believe that the brains required to run railroads should be recognized with adequate compensation.

As 1 person out of 120,000,000, and 1 Member of Congress out of 531, I concede that railroad executives should be not only well paid but liberally paid. I will even grant that there is some logic and reason for the argument that railroad executives should be paid a higher level of salaries than is paid to the executives of any other corporations in America.

COMPARES WITH ROOSEVELT

But that does not mean that the salaries of railroad officials should be kept at so high a point that, in comparison with them, the salaries paid to other officials, public and private, who are key men in the affairs of the Nation pale into utter insignificance. I think it is pretty well understood that Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States, is a rather important man not only in America but in the world equation. Certainly his job is bigger than that of any railroad president. Certainly the tremendous burden of work and responsibility that are upon him and the great things he is doing, not only for this country but for the world, place him in the front rank. These facts conceded, it is somewhat surprising to learn that one railroad executive in America draws twice as large a salary as President Roosevelt and $7,500 per annum in addition; two railroad executives receive almost twice the equivalent of his salary per annum; and numerous other railroad officials receive salaries in excess of the salary paid to the President of the United States.

CITES COURT SALARIES

The Supreme Court of the United States is the guardian of the rights, liberties, and property interests of all of the people of the Nation. There are railroad executives who receive 6 and 7 times the salaries paid to members of that Court, and the railroad officials who are paid more than the salary of a Justice of the United States Supreme Court are almost too numerous to mention.

One would think that the Vice President of the United States or the Speaker of the House of Representatives would rate a salary comparable with the salary of a railroad president, but some railroad presidents draw 10 and 11 times the salaries paid to those officials.

LEGISLATORS WAY DOWN

Senators and Representatives are too far down in the pee-wee class, as far as salaries are concerned, to be mentioned in the same breath with an ordinary fourth-rate railroad official. Assistants to vice presidents, assistants to general counsels, claim agents, railroad real-estate agents, and traffic managers generally receive higher salaries than Members of Congress. The salary of a United States Senator is $8,500 a year. One railroad company pays $9,000 a year to the manager of its dining service, and this dining-service gentleman receives $500 per annum more than is paid to Senator BORAH or to Senator ROBINSON of Arkansas, the majority leader of the Senate, or to Hon. JOSEPH W. BYRNS, the very able majority leader of this House. One railroad company lists a "furloughed vice president" among its officials. He receives $11,700 a year for being furloughed. This compares rather favorably with the $12,750 a year paid to Vice President Garner and Speaker RAINEY.

CHICKEN-FEED SALARIES

At my request the Interstate Commerce Commission has furnished me the latest available figures on salaries paid to railroad executives. This information makes a compilation of 51 pages in small type and it is highly interesting. Brushing aside the chicken feed in the shape of salaries of less than $40,000 per annum, the following are salaries paid to railroad officials in excess of that amount:

Chairman of executive committee, Southern Pacific Co., $135,000 per annum; president of Pennsylvania Railroad System, $121,000; president of Baltimore & Ohio Railroad System, $120,000; president of Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe, $67,500; vice president of same railroad, $40,500; general counsel of same railroad, $45,000; senior vice president of Baltimore & Ohio, $76,500; vice president in charge of operations of same railroad, $54,000; vice president of same railroad, $54,000; vice president same railroad, $45,000; president of Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, $50,000; president of Boston & Maine Railroad, $45,000.

SALARIES THAT RUN INTO BIG MONEY

President of Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and Colorado Southern combined railroads, $75,000; executive vice president of same, $42,500; president of Central of New Jersey Railroad, $64,800; president of Chesapeake & Ohio, Hocking Valley, and Pere Marquette Railroads, $90,000; senior vice president of same, $43,200; president of Chicago & Eastern Illinois Railroad Co., $45,000; president of Chicago & North Western Railway System, $61,000; president of Chicago Great Western Railroad Co., $50,000; president of Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Paul & Pacific Railroad, $67,500; president of Delaware & Hudson Railroad Corporation, $90,000; president of Delaware & Lackawanna Railroad, $67,500; president of Denver & Rio Grande Western, $54,000; president of Erie System, $67,500; president of Great Northern Railway Co., $60,000; president of Illinois Central System, $90,000; chairman of Kansas City Southern Railway Co., $45,000; president of Lehigh Valley Railroad Co., $72,000; president of Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., $45,000; vice president of Midland Valley Railroad Co. and subsidiaries, $45,000; president of Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste. Marie Railway Co., $45,000; chairman and president of Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad Co., $65,000; president of Missouri Pacific System, $68,333.34; president of New York Central System, $80,000; executive vice president of same system, $40,000; president of New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., $90,000.

PRESIDENT RECEIVES $67,500

President of Norfolk & Western Railroad Co., $67,500; president of Northern Pacific Railroad Co., $50,000; vice president of Pennsylvania Railroad System, $52,650; vice president in charge of operations of same system, $48,600; vice president of finance and corporate relations of same system, $40,500; vice president in charge of traffic, same system, $40,500; president of Reading Co. and Atlantic City Railroad Co., $67,500; president of Rock Island System, $57,750; chairman executive committee of same system, $40,000; president of St. Louis-San Francisco Railroad Co. and subsidiaries, $63,000; president of Seaboard Air Line, $45,000; receiver of same railroad, $45,000; president of Southern Railway System and subsidiaries, $67,500; vice
